Editorial.

Knowledge increases responsibility, but does not necessarily increase sorrow, nor weigh us down with burdens too heavy to bear, for God gives power to meet every responsibility we may have.

God does not tell us there will be no trouble or affliction or trial in our lives. If He told us that there would be none we might well lose faith when they came. But God says positively that all these things shall come. "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Yes, He says there will be tribulation, but we must meet it in His name. "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

To know God is eternal life. To glorify God is our work in life. Christ prays especially for those who are trying to follow Him. He does not pray that we might be taken home to heaven, but He prays that we may be kept pure on earth, and may glorify the Father by bearing much fruit.

How can men pass through the hours of the day and give scarcely a thought to the blessings they hourly receive from God? Were they dependent for them upon some man or woman how carefully they would order their walk and conversation lest they might lose the favor of that person! And how careful they would be to show their gratitude! Surely, ingratitude to God, indifference to all His claims, is the height of sin and folly.

How strong we are before the test comes! How weak we are when it does come. We wonder that Peter should have failed so miserably, and we think we would do so much better than some of our friends do. Alas! the best comes when we least expect it, and we are not able to stand. And there are some, who do not go out and weep bitterly, as did Peter. "When I am weak then am I strong" is a safe motto for us all.

BE THERE!

We have been sending petitions to the Constitutional Convention urging the adoption of a measure that we hope will outlaw the saloon in our State. How much do we want it? Are we really in earnest? If so, can we not spend a little time and money to attend the Convention in Richmond the 16th and 17th of January. If we can have a great Convention, representing the Anti-Saloon sentiment throughout the State, it will be the clinching of the nails we have been driving. Brother ministers, get your churches and societies to send delegates. Any church or Epworth League or temperance society can elect two delegates. Urge your churches and societies to have men there, and come yourself. Let us show that we care for the sons and daughters of our land, and will give some work and time and money to get men to go to Richmond and to go ourselves.

PRIZING OTHERS UP.

Our Baptist brethren have been stirring for the last few months, and especially the last few weeks, to raise $75,000 for the endowment of Richmond College. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, the Standard Oil President has

One of them seen during the twentieth century c vass, and the proposition was made to him to offer to give one dollar for every dollar given by the other Meth dists of the Conference up to $75.

It was one of the great opportunities of a life. But, after a few hours, it was rejected, and the money was invested elsewhere. In the last day the greatness of the blunder, to call it nothing worse, will be realized.

But there is one thing about Mr. Rockefeller that cannot be admired or commended, and that is the way in which he makes people subscribe and pay to colleges against their wills, and then assumes all the credit for himself. The editor was reading a few days ago of his gift to Chicago and his conditional gifts to Oberlin College, Ohio, and to Richmond College, and remarked to a friend: "Well, I hope he won't put his hand in the treasury of this poor institution at Blackstone to help pay these loud sounding gifts to richer schools!" By a strange coincidence, the mail came in at that moment, and a bill for a recent shipment of gasoline was received. The prices had been raised one-half cent in the gallon, making an increase of nearly

CHAPTER I.

IT WAS about the middle of September, in the year 1896. The walks around the buildings at Hope college, that had been deserted through the summer vacation, were beginning to be alive with students. The fall term was to open on Wednesday, and on every hand were evidences of the renewed life of the institution.

An express wagon drove through the big gate that opened on the college grounds, and a boy who was sitting on the seat of the wagon with the driver looked around with eyes that took in as much as possible, while the expressman drove slowly up to a large dormitory building where a dozen students were sitting on the steps.

"Yes, this is Rankin hall," said the driver in answer to a questioning look on the boy's part. The boy jumped down and began feeling in his pocket.

"How much is it?" he said.

"Fifty cents," said the expressman as he seized the trunk and began hauling it out of the end of the wagon.

The boy felt first in one pocket and some books at the bottom."

"Good place for 'em, too," remarked the other. "Wish some of mine were there."

There was an awkward silence, which the new boy broke by looking around the room and finally rising to open a closet door to look in.

"Where you from, New York or Chicago or London?" asked the boy on the trunk as he stared good naturedly at the other.

"I'm from Randall, and my name is—"

"Edward Blake," interrupted the other, reading the name from a card tacked on the top of the trunk. "Freshman?"

"Yes. Are you?"

"No. Once is enough," said the other, getting off the trunk and walking over to the window. "I'm a poor sophomore now. Nothing to do but play tennis and fink. Are you coming into the club?"

"I don't know," said the new boy slowly. He began to unstrap his trunk, looking curiously as he did so at the other student. There was something the entire course of our own lives, but that of very many others as well. It is certain that this event in the life of Edward Blake, totally unexpected and tragic as it was, affected in ways he could not understand both his own life and that of the young man he was facing.

Some one down stairs had asked a question of a student going through the hall, and the next moment a messenger boy appeared at the door of Edward Blake's room.

"Which of you is Edward Blake?" he asked as he stepped into the doorway. "I've got a telegram for him."

"I am," said Blake quietly. He opened the envelope, and Willis Preston for some reason paused on his way out.

As the new boy read the message Preston knew at once that the news was very serious.

"My 'father is dead! Killed in an accident! Come home!'"

He read the message mechanically aloud. He was so dazed by it and the other student was so startled that neither of them heard a rush of footsteps up the stairs. The crowd outdoors had come up to see the newcomer and guy him a little under the lead of Rankin, who wanted to get even with the freshee for his remark.

They were met at the door by Preston, who simply said, with an understanding of what was fitting that would have done credit to a much older person:

"Fellows, go away. He has just had terrible news from home. His father has been killed in an accident."

Edward Blake, sitting down in that little room, with his head in his hands, overwhelmed by the news, feeling the whole universe slipping around him, not able to grasp the meaning of the unexpected event in his young life, had nevertheless a vague feeling of thankfulness. The boy whom he knew only a few moments. The crowd in stantly rushed. A few curious but sympathetic faces appeared at the door and looked at the figure of the new boy as he sat there. The sacredness of a great trouble invested him with the garment of majesty. Willis Preston went up to him and laid a hand gently on his shoulder.

"This is dreadful news for you. Let me do anything I can to help you in any way."

Blake looked up, still too dazed to speak.

The messenger boy, who had been leaning against the trunk, suddenly spoke up:

"There's 15 cents charges on the telegram. This is outside city limits."

Blake made a movement to put his hand into his pocket, but Preston at once paid the boy.

"Can you sign the book?" he said, bringing it to Blake and giving him a pencil.

He signed it, and Preston noticed that his hand did not tremble.

The boy took his book and went out.

"Now of course you will want to take your trunk back with you. I'll fix it for you. Say, fellows, some one run down and get Logan to take the trunk right down to the station."

Meanwhile he busied himself strapping up the trunk. Edward Blake looked on for a moment in silence. Suddenly he rose and went over to the window, and Preston heard a sob and the words: "Mother! Freeda!"

The tears came into his eyes as he pretended to arrange something about the trunk, and then he straightened up and went over to the other.

"It's terrible for you. Your mother?"

"I have a mother and sister at home, on a farm just out of Randall. I don't know how!"

He walked over to his trunk and sat down on it, still sobbing. Preston looked on, unable to say a word. One of the other boys appeared at the doorway and said Logan would be up in a few moments.

"You needn't worry about the trunk or anything. We'll see about getting it down to the station all right. You can catch the 4 o'clock in time."

Blake rose again and walked over to the window. Suddenly he turned around and faced his new acquaintance with a color that was in startling contrast with his blanched look when the news came.

"I haven't a cent with me to buy a ticket or—"

"That's all right," exclaimed Preston, with a sigh of relief to think he could do something. "I'll lend you all you want." And then, to his great relief, Logan, the boy whom he knew at the college, came up and helped him get the trunk down stairs. Blake followed mechanically, the crowd about the hall looking on gravely.

"I'll go down with you and help you off. We might as well ride with Logan," said Preston, and he and Blake got into the wagon and rode out of the college grounds together.

Down at the station Preston bought Blake's ticket, checked the trunk and telegraphed the mother that her son was on the way. When the train came in, he saw Blake on board, and as it started he waved his hand sympathetically to the sorrowful figure by the window. As he turned away to walk up College hill he said to himself, "Wonder how I would feel to get word of my father's death like that?" His face had a curious look on it as he thought of the possibility. When he returned to the hall, he was unusually serious, and it was many a day before he could dismiss from his mind the tragic event in the other boy's life, and yet not even then did he realize the meaning of it all or its bearing upon his own life in Hope college.

Edward Blake went home, and the next few days were filled with grave experience for him. He was 19 years old. His mother and sister were all the family left, the sister two years younger than he. Edward's father had been a thrifty, careful farmer who had passed through all the experiences of deep poverty, struggles to pay interest, sickness and the loss of two younger children. But this last year matters had turned toward a more hopeful future. For two seasons the crops had been so heavy and prices so good that for almost the first time in his life the sturdy farmer felt able to send one of his children to college, and after long planning the boy's trunk was packed with many a carefully mended and made over garment that mother and sister had worked over, while the tears fell on the garments as they worked. And one reason why Edward Blake had hesitated to open his trunk in the presence of a stranger was not because he was ashamed of the homely clothing packed into it, but because, with a delicacy of feeling that marked a really poetical temperament, he shrank from showing others the contents of a trunk into which had gone such a lavish display of affection pitifully bestowed on the best they could afford at home.

When he entered the college grounds that afternoon, anticipating his coming college life with the keenest pleasure, this young man from the humble farm at Randall had only 50 cents in money. After he had paid the expressman and turned around to face the group of careless students sitting on the steps of the dormitory he had realized that he was absolutely without a cent, thrown upon his own resources for making his way through a four years' college course unless his father could advance him a little help. It had not been his father's wish that Edward should start for college until certain money due from the sale of grain could be put into his hands. This money was promised him by his father and would meet his immediate expenses for a few weeks. But it was with the definite knowledge that he was on the whole to depend on his own struggles that he had ventured to start and begin his college life, ready to do any honest work he could find in order to pay his way. His room had been already reserved for him, according to the custom prevailing at Hope college. He had great hopes of finding plenty of work in the neighborhood of the college, and no boy or girl of the hundreds that came up College hill that September afternoon had a more courageous or sanguine heart than Edward Blake.

The event of his father's sudden death changed in a second the boy's programme of life. He found himself at once the only support of the family, and during the weeks immediately following his homecoming he simply accepted the situation as meaning for him the giving up forever of all his ambitions for an education. He had talked the matter over with his mother and sister, and there seemed no way open and nothing to be done but to go on with the farm work and give up the college course altogether.

That was a month after his father's death. Three months afterward at Christmas time, as he was at work in the barn mending some harness, Edward Blake had a new idea come to him. He had brooded over the breaking up of his ambitions and had grown not only more serious, but more gloomy as winter went on. He suddenly rose to his feet on this particular afternoon, and, throwing the harness down on the floor, he went into the house. His mother and sister were at work there, Freeda preparing to get the evening meal.

"Mother," said Edward as he came in, "I want to talk with you and Freeda about going to college."

His mother paused in the work she was doing and looked at him in astonishment. It was the first time he had uttered a word since his father's death about college. She had taken for granted, as he had, that the college life was a thing not to be thought of any more.

"I didn't mean about going myself," continued Edward slowly, while his face, which was somewhat dull in repose, lighted up almost handsomely with a smile. "But what's the reason Freeda can't go?"

almost dropped it on the stove, she was so startled by the unexpected proposition.

"But how can I spare Freeda from the house? I need her to help about the milk and butter and all the work."

"Of course," said Freeda emphatically. "It's out of the question, Ned. It's foolish to think of it." Nevertheless her brother noticed an excitement in her manner that was not all negative.

"It's not impossible, Freeda," said Edward doggedly. "Now, of course it's out of the question for me to think of going. But mother had that letter from Uncle Will the other day in which he spoke of the probability that he and aunt would come out here this winter. If they should come, aunt could help mother just as well as you do."

"We don't know that they will come," said Mrs. Blake, looking doubtfully at the children. She was going over the long last talk she had had with her husband, in which they had both expressed a great desire that their children might have a college training.

"I believe uncle will come on this winter. He needs this climate. He got out of business and always liked a farm. Mother, let's write and urge him to come. Freeda ought to have a chance. She is out of high school and could enter the college in good shape. Don't you want to go, Freeda?"

"Of course I do!" exclaimed Freeda impulsively. And then she paused and after a moment went into the pantry to hide her emotions.

"I tell you, mother," said Edward in a low tone, "I wanted to kick myself out in the barn this afternoon when I waked up all of a sudden and realized that I had been a hog all along about wanting to go to college myself and had never given Freeda a thought."

"Oh, no, Edward! You don't need to call yourself"—

"But I do, mother, and I want you to help me now to plan it so Freeda can go. She has worked here in the kitchen faithfully a long time. She has scholarly tastes, and they ought to be gratified."

The mother was silent. Freeda came out of the pantry, and her brother went over to her and said: "Freeda, tell the truth now. Didn't you cry when I started off to college last September?"

"Of course I did!" exclaimed Freeda.
 "How much of it was on my account?" asked Edward somewhat bluntly.

"A good deal of it," persisted Freeda, while her face reddened under her brother's close look.

"You're too truthful to be able to hide it," he laughed. "You know you wanted to go to college yourself."

"I won't deny it," confessed Freedman humbly.

"Well, now it's your turn, and you've got to go," said Edward. And in spite of his sister's protests and his mother's misgivings he sat down that very evening and wrote the uncle who had hinted in a previous letter about coming to them urging him to come and giving as one of the reasons why he wanted him to come the opportunity it would give Freddy to go to college.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

SERMON BY DR. HERRICK JOHNSON.

Dr. Herrick Johnson, of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, who is in Washington to attend the meetings of the Revision Committee of the Presbyterian Church, preached a sermon from the pulpit of the New York Avenue church that is being as much discussed by Churchmen, especially Presbyterians, as the opening of the session of Congress is by the general public. The sermon was a reply to one delivered by a clergyman of another denomination, recently in Chicago, and is incidentally a defence of the Presbyterian doctrine and creed. His text was St. John 3: 16: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." He opened by saying: "Recently there have been representations of Presbyterian doctrines that give an aspect to God quite out of harmony with the belief of our Church, and quite out of harmony with the Scriptures, on which that belief is founded. The other day we were told on a Chicago platform by a clergyman in good standing in one of our evangelical bodies that 'orthodoxy staggers at nothing that will fill hell,' and that 'orthodoxy is always facing a graveyard; looking to a dead past.'" Continuing, he said: "At the root of a good deal of misconception and misrepresentation in this matter are two notions of God that are somewhat prevalent and quite opposite, but equally erroneous. One is that God is bribed to mercy by Jesus Christ. The other is that God is too merciful to punish anybody for what they may do or what they may think."

And so I use this great text to-day, not to compass its immeasurable boundaries, but, first, to correct these two false conceptions of God; second, to vindicate the Presbyterian belief from the aspersions that have been put upon it; and third, to show in what relation the great truth of the text puts the two parties most concerned—God and man."

Further, he said: "Any sinner, anywhere, any hour, can step toward heaven, assured there is nothing in heaven, nothing in the law, nothing in the universe, nothing in hell, nothing outside his own heart that can hinder him being saved. Outside every sinner's heart that hears the Gospel stands the compassionate, the patient Saviour, whom the love of God has brought to that heart's door, yearning to take the poor, bruised sinner to the bosom of his forgiving grace, if he will only open the door. This is the attitude in which the great Gospel text puts the infinite God with respect to the unsettled difficulty between God and man. It represents God as seeking the sinner until He finds him, and there, waiting outside the heart's door, and saying: 'If any man anywhere will hear my voice and open the door, I will come in.' This brings clearly to view the sinner's attitude. Inside the heart's door we find it. Call the attitude what you please, the Bible calls it enmity, hatred, rebellion, and these may seem harsh terms, but have it as you like. Say that you are self-satisfied, indifferent, unconcerned, that you don't care. But whatever it is, that attitude represents your will. It keeps your heart's door shut against God's love, and it is the only thing in the universe that will ever keep you out of heaven. This is true of everybody. The love is for everybody, the adaptation is for everybody, the sufficiency is for everybody. Does this sound like a narrow and bigoted creed? Is not this a wide open and liberal Gospel? Well, this is what Presbyterians believe to be the Gospel of God. This is Presbyterian orthodoxy, preaching a 'whosoever' invitation, and trying to fill heaven, yet charged with 'staggers at nothing that will fill hell.' But what about election? it is asked. Well, what about it? There is nothing in this text about it. 'God so loved the world.' Not a portion of the world, not the elect. Oh, no, the elect are only a part of the world and chosen out of it. This love of God is world-wide for everybody, without a hint of election in it. I believe in election. It is one of the great truths of Scripture and a blessed doctrine, charged with infinite stay and comfort for God's believing children. It puts the Father's everlasting arms about every child of His, and makes it certain he will never perish. But it is inclusive, not exclusive. It makes heaven sure for the chosen, but it keeps no one out of heaven. It is no chain bound about the necks of men dragging some to salvation and some to perdition. But what about the other doctrine, one of the great bulwarks of the Presbyterian Church—the doctrine of God's eternal purposes? We Presbyterians believe that God, in infinite knowledge and wisdom, did from the beginning determine all that comes to pass. Well, then, it is said in reply, 'if everybody is included in this eternal plan, and all events are certain to come to pass as God had ordained, where is the liberty of man in this great scheme of redemption? What possible use is there in saying whosoever believeth shall be saved, when those who shall believe, and those who shall not believe are unchangeably known and included in the eternal purpose of the Almighty?' I answer that the liberty of man is just where it must be if man's liberty is to be kept forever inviolate. It is in the eternal plan, and a part of the plan, the freedom of man's will being just as securely fixed in the purpose of God—just as certain to be—as any other fact or force in the whole range of God's sovereign purpose. Here is His plan, infinite in variety and complexity, reaching from everlasting to everlasting, and in the midst of it are millions of free wills, acting and reacting and interacting, all a part of the plan, placed there of God, He having determined in His almighty power and infinite wisdom that these millions of human wills shall keep their liberty under His sovereignty."

WASHINGTON RELIGIOUS LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 24, 1901.

With the adjournment of Congress last Thursday a majority of both houses left Washington. On every side the churches and the people are planning to extend the joys of Christmas to those whose worldly condition leaves them dependent on the good will of others for the innocent pleasures which serve to impress on all men that Christmas is the anniversary of Him whose coming was heralded by angel choirs singing "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good-will to men."

Interest in national reforms has given place to the desire to make glad these days of rejoicing to the little ones and to the parents, who are, perhaps, none the less in need of tangible evidence that the spirit of love has not died out, and that religion still places charity first among the great virtues. As a result, nearly every church in Washington will have its Christmas tree, and the little ones are receiving practical lessons in the doctrine that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

In the White House all is excitement among the younger members of the family, for the children of the President are making up a generous Christmas box to be sent to the Christmas tree which will gladden the hearts of children at Oyster Bay, the little village which, wherever their father may be stationed, the Roosevelt children regard as home. With the edifying devotion which has always characterized the remarkable family which now occupies the White House, all members will attend church on Christmas morning, and at an earlier hour than is customary dinner will be served, the President carving and Mrs. Roosevelt serving the ice cream, which the President's family appreciate just as much as the children of fathers whose stations in life are not as high. Later in the day the whole family will go to the house of Commander Cowles, the brother-in-law of the President, where, with their little cousin, the Roosevelt children will enjoy a monster Christmas tree.

Christmas in the White House this year will be a merrier affair than it has been since the Cleveland children occupied the historic old mansion, and perhaps even more so than it was in those days, for Mr. Roosevelt has more children, and perhaps more indulgence for the pranks of his little ones.

A story is being told in Washington of a trifling event in the White House, which well illustrates the sympathy which exists between the President and his children. One day the past week there occurred, immediately over the President's reception room, a series of noises which made it almost impossible for Mr. Roosevelt to hear what his visitors tried to say to him. Mr. Cortelyou volunteered to go and find out what was the occasion of the disturbance, but his chief replied, "No, Cortelyou, it is only the children." Finally the noise became unbearable, and, excusing himself, the President rushed upstairs to the attic, where the children were at play. He did not return for over an hour, and when he did his hands were dirty and his collar awry. "The children were having serious trouble trying to construct a tent, which would not stay up," he explained, "and I had to stay and help them fix it. I don't think it will come down now, and we will not be bothered any more." The fact that several Senators and a diplomat had been kept waiting while he assisted in his children's game never seemed to impress the President.

During the days of President McKinley's occupancy there ways seemed to be a chill about the White House during the holiday season that almost made one wonder the ventilation did not need attention. I remember asking a gentleman who had just come from the room of the President one Christmas Eve why Mr. McKinley had said that would be of interest to the public. "He has been telling me of the great sorrow it has never been blessed with living children," he said. "That was all talked of, and he seemed to be feeling so deeply on the subject, and talked me in such a kindly, personal way that I did not bring up the business matter about which I had called."

That Secretary Hay is in full sympathy with the movement to secure treaties with all civilized nations to protect native races against intoxicants and opium is shown by the following letter, written by him to Dr. L. Baldwin, chairman of the native races deputation which recently called on him and presented the petition: "Your suggestion that I call the attention of the nations concerned to resolution of the Senate, adopted January 4, 1901, as likely to indicate concurrent opinion of the two branches of the treaty-making power, the Senate and the Executive, has my cordial acquiescence. In view of the circumstance that the former representatives to the other powers were made by the British government, as well as by our own, I shall initiate renewed efforts in the proposed sense by communicating the Senate resolution to the British government, with the suggestion that it be made the basis concurrently reopening the question with the powers having influence in commerce in the western Pacific, and any other uncivilized quarter, where the salutary principle of liquor restriction could be practically applied through the general enactment of similar laws by the several countries, through a conventional engagement between them."

Dr. T. C. Easton's pulpit was occupied Sunday evening by Rev. Sam Fender, of Baltimore, who was formerly a Hebrew rabbi. His remarks were noticeably friendly toward the Hebrews. He said, in part: "Suppose it were possible for an Englishman the fifteenth century to enter the church to-night and hear our friend Dr. Easton, read from the Bible. Would he understand him? Hardly so much has the language changed in five centuries. It is different with Hebrew tongue. The beautiful words David spoke in Psalm 23 are to a Jew to-day the same as 3,000 years ago, and the words commencing the psalm, 'The Lord is my shepherd,' are precious alike to Jew and Gentile. We should love the Hebrew, not only because he is your fellow-man, made in the image of God, but because he has given you the book of books, the Bible, which holds the glories of the past, the promise of the future, and is the world's spiritual inheritance handed down by the Israelites. You must never forget that the sufferer in Gethsemane, the martyr on Calvary, Jesus Christ, who assumed the form of man man that we might become the sons and daughters of God, was a law."

Hon. J. S. Hogg, former Governor of Texas, is a lawyer and not a preacher, but he preached a short sermon to a Washington newspaper reporter who sought to interview him on Sunday upon a business matter that would have graced any pulpit and been creditable to any minister of the Gospel. After declining to talk business on the Sabbath, Mr. Hogg said: "I have never discussed a law case, never prepared a brief, never talked any business of any kind on the Sabbath. Sunday is a day of rest, and a day of thought, when we should ask ourselves questions regarding our lives and our future, and when we should give careful thought to our spiritual condition. On Sunday we should ask ourselves—first, 'Do we believe there is a God?' Nearly every one says he believes there is such a being. Next, we should ask ourselves, 'Why do we believe there is a God?' I believe there is a God because I believe in Jesus Christ, and if it were not for Jesus Christ I do not think I could believe in God. I have made a very thorough study of Christ, from a lawyer's standpoint, and I am positive that I can go before any jury and prove beyond a reasonable doubt that He was divinely conceived; that He was the Son of God; that He was crucified; that He was buried and rose from the dead and ascended into heaven. I can show circumstantial evidence that Christ died and was what I say He was, just as I can show by circumstantial evidence that Caesar was born forty years before, and lived and was what we believe he was. The trouble with the lawyers is that they allow the public to take the divinity of Christ for granted. What they should do is to prove that Christ was the Son of God, when they have established that the existence of a God must be admitted."

Rev. L. W. Munhall, the well-known evangelist, was the speaker at this week's Y. M. C. A. mas-meeting, and gave his hearers a vivid talk of more than an hour, based upon his personal experience, on the danger of yielding to temptation and the bad results of evil companions. His text was from Ecclesiastes 11: 9: "But remember, for all these things thou shalt be brought to judgment." He told of his early life in Cincinnati, where he was reared in a Christian home; of his going to Indianapolis when a youth and falling into bad company, which came near wrecking his life. He said the sound of a church bell saved him. He was in a beer saloon with a crowd of dissipated companions. As he was in the act of raising a glass to his lips he heard the church bell calling Christians to worship. The call seemed to be especially to him. At a moment the dangers of the path he was on were read before him in all their real horrors; he thought how different the man was from that he had been taught to follow by Christian parents, set the glass down, with the liquor untasted, and left the place, with a feeling that he had just narrowly escaped an awful fate. From that minute he resolved to devote his life to work for Christ.

Many of his hearers were affected by his talk, and when, at its close, he called upon all who desired to begin a Christian life to stand and hold up their hands, forty-seven did so.

The Department of State has official information that a new plan is being carried out to secure the release of Miss Stone, which promises to be successful, but declines to make public the details for fear of defeating the object sought.

IS IT A FACT?

Is it a fact that Jesus was born into this world nineteen hundred years ago, more or less? Never mind, now, about the precise date or place or circumstances. These may be of great importance, but we can dismiss them for the present, and fix our whole attention upon the central fact. Never mind the story of the miraculous birth, or the angelic choir at Bethlehem, or other celestial attestation of the event. Was Christ really born into the world, and have we any historic evidence of the fact?

Never mind, now, the complete accuracy of the records. Assume, if you please, that the New Testament is much more untrustworthy than the most daring skeptic has ever ventured to assert. You must admit that the New Testament is in existence, and that it tells, with reiteration, a very definite story about Jesus Christ. Never mind the alleged discrepancies, legends, embellishments. Multiply these tenfold, if you wish; but after all allowances and discounts, say if the kernel of the story is really true? Was Jesus Christ actually born, and did He actually live on the earth?

Never mind the alleged errors and blunders and crimes charged against Christianity in the course of its history. Admit, for the present, that it is responsible for all the wars and persecutions and outrages in ancient and modern Christendom. At least, do not stop now to deny or even to discuss the allegations, the most monstrous of them. Look steadily and exclusively at the crucial question. Did Jesus Christ actually live on the earth? In a cave at Bethlehem there is (or was) an inscription, "Here Jesus Christ was born." Admit that this is wholly legendary. Is there any spot on earth where such an inscription might be truthfully placed, as describing a simple historical fact?

Admit the fact of Christ's birth, and that we have records which authorize us to assert such a fact, and you must admit ultimately very much more. The records may be very fragmentary, unhistorical, legendary, yet the importance of the central fact will lead to their careful study, sifting, criticism, reconstruction, with final results that must be generally accepted, the human mind being constituted as it is. Error and myth and fantastic stories may have a long lease of life, even for centuries; but the mind of man is organized for ascertaining and accepting the truth, just as the eye is organized for the truth, and ultimate truth is as certain as the continuance of the human mind. If the earth is round, and not flat, some man will finally find it out. If Jesus Christ was actually born upon the earth, it is the supreme event in human history. The world is a different world, history is a different history, personal life is different in its aims and motives and destiny because of this supreme fact. In a measure, this is true of every influential character that has developed on the earth. Whether we are conscious of it or not, our lives are colored and affected by the lives of Moses, David, Socrates, Plato, Caesar, Shakespeare, Calvin, Newton, Washington, Lincoln, and a host of others. But all these are as nothing compared with the inevitable influence that comes to us from the character and achievements of Jesus Christ. He has entered into modern civilization as its chief formative force. Our social structure, literature, education, politics—to say nothing of our religion—could not eliminate the influence of Christ's teaching and example without thereby reducing themselves to chaos. A man may deny this influence, but he can no more escape it than he can escape the atmosphere about him or the force of gravity. Call yourself agnostic, skeptic, infidel, atheist, still your character and thinking, in so far as they commend themselves even to your own respect, are due chiefly to the fact that Jesus Christ has lived upon the earth.—The Watchman.

The denominations may illustrate the breadth of Christianity, rather than their own bigotry.—Ram's Horn.

THE HIGHWAY OF TRADE AND TRAVEL.

The Southern Railway begs to call attention to its unequalled facilities for reaching all points in Florida, the South and Southwest. It is justly termed the representative railway of the South, the highway of trade and travel. Its important through connections, through car arrangements, complete dining-car service, quick and convenient schedules, commends it to the travelling public.

In addition to many local trains operated by this progressive company, the following through limited trains are run daily: "The Washington and Southwestern Limited," "The New York and Florida Express," "The United States Fast Mail," "The New York and Atlanta Express," "The Washington, Richmond and Florida Limited," "The Washington and Chattanooga Limited."

The Southern's Palm Limited, formerly known as the New York and Florida Limited, will be inaugurated early in January, 1902, and will run solid between New York and St. Augustine, Fla. All of these trains carry dining cars, thus providing a great convenience and time-saver to the traveller.

THE PRIMATE OF ENGLAND.

Many are the stories of the courage and wit shown by the present Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Temple, in combatting the attacks of extreme High Churchmen, which followed the publication of his "Essays and Reviews." When he was nominated as Bishop of Exeter, says Mr. William Durban, in an article which appears this month in The Outlook, a writer in one of the Devon papers gave expression to the view that "the Tories disliked Dr. Temple's politics, and pretended that it was his religion they objected to." Mr. Gladstone and the Queen were unmoved. The protests against the consecration were sent in by the Bishops of Gloucester, Hereford, Lichfield, and Lincoln. When the ceremony had been duly performed, in spite of the vehement opposition of High Churchmen and Tories in all parts of the country, one Church newspaper said in an editorial jeremiad: "And so, on that darkest day in the whole year, was perpetuated the darkest crime ever committed in the English Church!" Such a sentence as this shows to what a height the animosity had run. Dr. Benson, the most intimate of all Temple's friends, thus described his bearing during that memorable incident in Westminster Abbey: "Dear Temple's face was white as ashes, and his jet-black hair and whiskers and the white and black of his robes made him look in his stillness a sad sight for a friend's eye to rest upon. His healthy bronze was quite gone, but he looked a true man."

Dr. Temple's temperance agitation exposed him to criticism from another source. He enjoys telling this story:

In the West of England he one afternoon spoke at an Agricultural Society's meeting, a kind of occasion at which he was eminently at home from his knowledge of farming. But he could not miss the opportunity of giving some temperance hints and advice. He remarked, with his accustomed grim humor, that "he himself had never been drunk in his life." On his way home he heard the boys in the street with the papers shouting: "Remarkable statement of the Bishop of Exeter." The headline was certainly a startling one. The Bishop, with some curiosity, opened the paper to see what he had said, and found his phrase used as a special heading—"Never been drunk in his life!"

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

SCATHING ARRAIGNMENT OF IT BY A TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE.

Declared to Be the Offspring of Both Avarice and Appetite, Which Are Termed the Most Prolific Works of the Devil.

The two greatest and most prolific "works of the devil" are appetite and avarice, says a writer in Christian Work. Almost all the evils of this world spring from one or the other of these, and some are the offspring of both. To this latter class belongs the gigantic liquor traffic. It is nourished both by the appetite of the drinker and by the avarice of the dealer and those who support him. Now, the law of God is antagonistic both to the "lust of the flesh" and to "covetousness," and to the liquor dealer and all the contemptible business men, editors, preachers and city officials who support him the word of God utters the solemn warning:

"Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood and establisheth a city of iniquity. Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink—that putteth the bottle to his mouth and maketh him drunk also."

If there is anything on earth which is manifestly a "work of the devil," it is this business of running a city with the revenue of the liquor traffic. The law of God is diametrically opposed to the business of "building a city by iniquity." This is one of the "works" which Christ came not to "regulate," but to "destroy."

The saloon business is not to be put on an equal footing with grocery stores, dry goods houses, etc. These are legitimate because they meet the legitimate wants of men. The saloon is illegitimate because it meets no legitimate want whatever, but instead of this creates and fosters the most debasing and destructive passions and appetites of men.

The saloon is not a necessity, but a nuisance, and hence has no right at all to exist either on Sunday or any other day. It is the most formidable menace to the church of Christ on earth. Nine-tenths of the men engaged in it are infidels and absolutely hate the idea of God and law. Listen to some of their compliments on the church. At a meeting of brewers in Ohio the following was posted on the wall as a motto: "Down With the White Livered Clergy and the Sunday Schools!" On another occasion a Philadelphia brewer said: "We have the money to buy all the lawmakers we want. In five years all the preachers who groan in your churches on Sunday will have to stop, for we will drown them out with bands of music."

There is scarcely a crime known to the human race that is not fostered and executed under the influence of drink. The crimes thus committed become a part of our civilization. Enacted in our midst, their baleful influence passes from father to son, from generation to generation. A body cannot hope to long survive half diseased and half well. The poison must be extracted from the system or it will contaminate the entire body.

Intemperance is blood poison taking hold upon our national body. The saloons are open sores where this body has broken out upon the surface. Amputation may be necessary in order to save the body, but better enter into life maimed rather than being whole to be destroyed. We must cease to treat with this hell of iniquity as though it were worth a place in the business world.

Let it be relegated to a place beside theft and murder, where it belongs. That this may be possible we must educate the people and fight this evil by the words of our mouth. This monster has closed the mouth of the politician. He reads the proof sheets of nearly all the great papers of this country, and editors, even though Christian, dare not speak within their columns their sentiments upon the temperance question.

Fame in Temperance Work.

An engraver recently cut at Willard hall in the solid marble of the tablets the names of leading temperance workers from the states of Illinois, Massachusetts, Iowa, Nebraska and New York. The name of Miss Sarah Gordon Johnson is placed on the Massachusetts tablet by the unanimous vote of the temple trustee board in recognition of her long and faithful service to the temple. The names are as follows: E. W. Spicer, South Edmeston, N. Y.; Alfred C. Halvorson, Ossian, Ia.; Mrs. Jane Scholes, Tichenor, Ia.; Mrs. Satella Pennman, Rock Rapids, Ia.; the Cody Union, Cody, Neb.; the Terre Haute Union, Terre Haute, Ill.; Mrs. Mary W. Townsend, Worcester, Mass.; Mrs. Mary Hoor Shedd, Oakham, Mass.; Mrs. Jane Elvira Damson, New Braintree, Mass.; Miss Sarah Gordon Johnson, Boston.

A Rumseller's Conscience.

A minister once asked a saloon keeper if his conscience never troubled him respecting his business. The man said, "Come inside, sir." It was the middle of the day. There was none of the usual customers about. My friend walked in. The grog seller went behind his own bar and, leaning on it, said: "Reverend sir, there are times when I stand behind this bar and look at the men who fill this room. I hear their blasphemy and their lewd songs. I see their fighting and their awful misconduct, and I often say to myself, 'If there is a picture of hell on our earth, it is in places like this.'"

Oom Paul and Liquor.

Every one knows what an inveterate smoker ex-President Kruger is, but it is not so well known that he has only once in his life tasted alcohol. It was champagne he drank, and he put down the glass with a face of disgust.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan.
12, "Pledged For Service."
Text, II Chron. xv.

"They entered into a covenant to seek the Lord God of their fathers."

The highest and best work of the individual is not done in separation from others, but in society and often in co-operation. Team work calls out peculiar qualities of our nature not otherwise exercised. But in this united action there must be first a common understanding and agreement. Here is the value of pledges or covenants. The desirable course is clearly pointed out, and those interested wish to go ahead. Then comes the open promise, "we will work together." This is just what workers of every variety have to do.

It is the same in religious affairs as in matters of business, we pledge to each other, and especially to God, that we will do certain things which will be helpful to ourselves and others in the church and in Christian work.

Of course there is danger in this—that some may pledge simply because others do and have no deep appreciation of the principles involved and no performed. But even with these serious defects who will not say it is better to do so than not to do at all?

The pledge in the League is of great value to those whose habits of life are not matured and fixed. It settles the course of action to be followed and avoids useless debate each time a duty presents itself and gives a fixed purpose in place of vacillation. A company of young people agree to attend the week evening prayer meeting of the church regularly and take part in the exercises. Is that of any value? Watch and see. If they keep the pledge six months, it will greatly change many things. The attendance and interest in the service will increase surprisingly. No other engagements will be made for those evenings, and soon other people will fall into the same plan of making no other engagements for those times. When the night comes, there will be no hesitation as to what to do. All has been settled in advance. No lectures, concerts or anything else is allowed to interfere.

In the meeting itself things will alter. We are Christians and are pledged to support this service. We have an experience and a desire to grow in grace. To advance we must use the present power. So at the very first of the meeting we pray and speak as we have opportunity. After a little while we come prepared and find ourselves no longer dreading the duty, but glad of the privilege.

Our enjoyment increases and our ability also. Others are encouraged and stimulated by our words and example. We also receive help from them. The burden grows light, and the pledge remains not as a hard and fast rule which binds us close, but as a custom which is cherished and enjoyed.

Many of the great revivals of history have had much of their success based on the covenants made by the people to be true to God and each other. The more closely we study the great reform in Asa's time the more we are impressed with the value of the laws of fidelity made by the people of Israel. "All Judah rejoiced at the oath."

Much of the success of early Methodism was due to the faithfulness of the people to their covenants of Christian service.

The Image of True Self.

Every man who came to Jesus saw in Him the image of his own true self, the thing that he might be and ought to be. Hundreds of them were not ready for the sight and went away to be not what they might be nor what they ought to be, but what they basely chose to be. But none the less the pattern has been shown to them in the mount. Cannot you go to Christ today and find the idea of yourself in Him? In Christ's thought of you at this moment there is a picture of you which is perfectly distinct and separate and clear. It is not a vague, blurred picture, with all the special colors washed away. If you give up your life to serving and loving Christ, one of the blessings of your consecration of yourself to Him will be that in Him will open up to you this pattern of yourself. You will see your possible self as He sees it, and then life will have but one purpose and wish for you, which will be that you may realize that idea of yourself which you have seen in Him.—Phillips Brooks.

It Must Be Always Right.

We cannot do right today and wrong tomorrow! It must be always right today, tomorrow and every day, for only by constant care and watchfulness can we keep our lives near the right when so many stand ready to dim our light and blight our hopes with temptation on all sides. No life can be so beautiful as to give light to others without having its brightness reflected on the Giver. So, not for one reason, but for many, should our examples be of the best. If we will be faithful, we shall be blessed and give joy to those about us. And thus we may look forward hopefully to the evening of life.

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents like the Arabs
And silently pass away.

—Universalist.

The Angels Near.

Not only in the olden time
A ladder stretched from earth to sky,
A weary pilgrim at the foot
And angels issuing from on high.

Forever where a yearning heart,
Bewildered, far from love and home,
Seeks God and will not be denied
With messages the angels come.

Invisible, the spirit rounds
Join earth to heaven everywhere.
Go tell thine utmost need and know
There is a passage for thy prayer.
—Christian Endeavor World.

A Sad Mistake.

To live simply for the present for self is a sad mistake.—Rev. McCord, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Sin.

Sin has no more right to a place in our life than a burglar has in our room.—Rev. John Thompson, Methodist, Chicago.

How to Value a Man.

You cannot value a man according to what he is today, but according to what he may one day become.—Rev. Caleb A. Ridley, Monticello, Ga.

Our Ancient Sabbath.

The obligation to observe the Sabbath goes back to the very purpose of God concerning the world.—Rev. Josephus Stephan, Methodist, St. Louis.

A Solemn Duty.

Wherever a man is in need we should see the opportunity of helping him in proportion to our ability, regardless of his personality.—Rev. G. B. Townsend, Troy, N. Y.

True Progress.

Real progress is in man, not in houses and crops and railroads and telegraphs and factories and machine tools.—Rev. Dr. David Utter, Unitarian, Denver.

Sincerity.

The sincere man is without self deception, selfishness and pride, and God will use every agency to bring a sincere man to the light.—Rev. Dr. Byrd, Methodist, Atlanta.

Equality of Work and Play.

Work and play must ever go hand in hand. There should never be too much or little of either. They should never be separate.—Rev. R. D. P. Bennett, Presbyterian, Germantown, Pa.

Learn to Love.

Come to the heart of Jesus that you may obtain true love. Learn of him to love till your love touches the lowest human being he died to save.—Rev. J. J. Sullivan, Catholic, San Francisco.

True Goodness.

The Master chose leaven, not varnish, for his parable of the kingdom. The goodness must work from within outward. Merely to splash it on the surface is a mockery and a shame.—Rev.

Dr. William R. Huntington, Episcopalian, New York.

Where to Find Comfort.

Where can we find the comfort which we need? Surely it is only in the knowledge God has given us of himself and of our higher life in him—in the sympathy of our Master's life drawn close to ours.—Rev. E. Burk, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Christianity's Working Force.

The working force of Christianity has been the incarnation of the Son of God for man's redemption. No other faith has brought God's love so near or furnished such motive for man's obeying the great command to love God supremely.—Rev. Dr. John Henry Barrows, President Oberlin College.

Are You a Grumbler?

A wasp is a comfortable housemate in comparison with a fretting man or woman. No vice except drunkenness can so utterly destroy the happiness of a house as grumbling. There are some people who would grumble because there was nothing to grumble about.—Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, Baptist, Brooklyn.

Practical Religion.

The true Christian ideal is symmetry, the wise combining of diligence in business and fervency of spirit. The fervency of spirit that is not founded on the punctual and complete performance of our earthly tasks is an imposture. It is a balloon in the air without string or anchor.—Rev. Dr. Robert Mackenzie, Presbyterian, San Francisco.

Civic Conscience.

The voice of duty speaks as clearly to individuals. There is a civic conscience as well as a personal moral conscience. The city not only has a soul and a conscience, but the city is a conscience. The city conscience is a composite conscience, made up of the consciences of all the citizens.—Rev. C. J. Dennis, People's Tabernacle, Denver.

Bible Needs No Defense.

It is as well to set a poodle dog to guard a lion as to ask a preacher to defend the Bible. Turn the lion loose and it will guard itself. Unclothe the truth of God from the traditions of men, give it an access to the broken heart of humanity, and mankind will be redeemed and earth will be an Eden.—Rev. Dr. Bruce Brown, Christian Church, Denver.

Christ's Prophetic Words.

The words of Christ, in which he declared his mission was to be worldwide and must embrace all gentile nations, may not strike us as particularly marvelous, since we are today everywhere confronted by evidences of Christian civilization. But their grandeur and sublimity will be manifest when we recall to mind that they were spoken in an obscure corner of the globe when the world was in idolatry.—Cardinal Gibbons, Catholic, Baltimore.

The wings of the imagination soar with the soul up to heaven or down to hell.—Ram's Horn.

PRIZING OTHERS UP.

sincerely wishes that one of their well-to-do Virginia laymen had made the $25,000 offer, and not Mr. Rockefeller.

AN EXPECTANT AGE.

In one of Dr. W. W. Smith's Twentieth Century addresses he brought out very forcibly the thought that one of the great characteristics of the age is the expectation of continued discoveries and inventions. A hundred years ago reports of inventions were received with incredulity. Now we are ready to receive every new invention. Indeed, we have almost reached the point when we criticize the scientific world if it does not make discoveries and give us ways and means to carry out our wishes. This thought was impressed upon the mind of the editor while reading the last issue of the Scientific American. On two pages there were articles on four things of great interest—Marconi's apparently successful attempt to send messages through the air without wires from Cornwall, England, to Signal Hill, Newfoundland; the description of the Holland submarine boat; the decision of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to build a great tunnel under the Hudson river, under New York city, from the Hudson to the East river, and then under the East river to Brooklyn, using electricity as a motive power; and finally, the decision by one of the great steamship companies running from England to the East Indies to use liquid fuel instead of coal, thus requiring only one fireman at a time on a great ship, instead of eight or ten, and practically banishing smoke and cinders. These things are all read in one issue of a paper, and they excite no expression of incredulity. They are accepted as a matter of course.

But they should inspire great gratitude and thanksgiving to God, that He has stored up in this world such wonderful forces, and that He has given to man dominion over them all.

OUR TENTH YEAR.

With this issue the Recorder enters upon Volume X. It was a surprise even to the editor, when he realized it. It seems but a little while since the editor was looking at the first issue of the Farmville District Methodist, and wondering whether he could possibly find the time to edit it twelve times a year. But the years have gone by, and the paper has changed from a monthly to a semi-monthly, and finally to a weekly. Several times the editor has made up his mind to let go, and suspend publication, owing to pressure of work in other quarters. He has been painfully conscious of the defects of the paper, and frequently felt that he could not possibly get out an issue the next week, for he could not see an hour ahead when he could even take the time to clip conscientiously from other papers. But there have always been those who have insisted that it was better to carry on the paper, even if he could not make it what he desired. Some kind friends have helped him greatly, but none so much as Rev. R. H. Bennett. He has aided him over twice, when without him, the paper would have been without any pilot near at hand. The readers of the Recorder still remember his fine work on the paper last summer during the absence of the editor in Europe.

And so we enter upon another year. The paper will stand for what it has stood for in the past. It is independent and believes that every man ought to have a fair hearing. It believes that the great positive work of the Church is missions. It believes that the day is coming when the present age will be regarded as either ignorant or selfish, or both. It believes that there are few churches which ought not to support a pastor at home and a preacher abroad. It believes that the Virginia Conference ought to have enlightenment and consecration enough to support 150 to 200 missionaries in the foreign field. It believes when Methodists love their Lord and His cause as much as they love their own ease and comfort, they will do so.

The Recorder believes that the great negative work of the Church is to fight evil, and especially at this time to fight the saloon; immorality (especially divorce immorality), and covetousness, especially greed for wealth and ease among those calling themselves Christians. These three forms of evil call for the most earnest and aggressive opposition. The Church is entirely too rich. She has no right to be rich with the work of the Lord clamoring for funds. Of one thing we can none of us complain. God gives us opportunities by the score to engage in His work. The Recorder stands for faithfulness to the work committed to us by God; whether pleasant or disagreeable, it is His work, and we are His children, and if we love Him we will keep His commandments.

The editor thanks all the brethren who have stood by the paper and appreciated its work. For those who have not agreed with it, but have opposed it, there is no ill-will. They are known, and their opposition has been met without malice, but also without hesitation or fear. The editor has tried so much as lieth in him to live peaceably with all men, but he has not lived peaceably with all men, and he never expects to do so in this world. He always expects to have enemies, and he should examine himself with greater care than usual if all men spoke well of him. He does not believe that a man can live in the world as matters now stand, do his full duty in fighting sin, and be universally praised. His highest aim in the conduct of the paper is to help the right and to fight the wrong.

DRUNKARDS AND DRUNKARD-MAKERS DO.

"Mrs. Clara Hoffman, president of the Missouri branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, said at a recent meeting of Illinois women that 'woman is a door-mat, and man wipes his feet upon her.'

"That may be true in the West, but it is not true in this Southern land of chivalry. We remark also that if this is true anywhere, it is simply because the women submit to it. If women do not make men respect them and respect their position in society, it is their own fault."—Leader.

The accuracy of the remark attributed to Mrs. Hoffman depends largely upon the point under consideration. It is probable that Mrs. Hoffman was discussing the drunkard-maker and the drunkards. If so, her language is not too strong, if strong enough. The women of the country—South and West, North and East—have not only been used as door-mats to have feet wiped upon them, but have in numberless cases had their lives literally stamped and kicked out of them by drunken husbands, and have suffered outrage at the hands of men fired by whiskey to carry out their brutal passion. No language, no figure of speech, can be too strong to express the indignities that the women of this country have suffered from the liquor traffic. Let the Leader show some of its chivalry by openly advocating what the women of Virginia want in the matter of protection from the liquor traffic, instead of sneering and criticising their efforts to express their feelings.

ARE YOU GOING?

Where? To the Anti-Saloon League Convention! You say you want to overthrow the saloon and save our boys and girls from ruin, the boys from being drunkards, and the girls from being wives of drunkards. The saloon is organized. If you expect to overthrow it, you must be organized, too. God helps those who help themselves.

REPORT OF ANNUAL MEETING— NORFOLK DISTRICT.

The home mission societies of Norfolk District met in the lecture room of McKendree church at 10 A. M. on Thursday, November 21st. The session was opened by reading the twenty-third Psalm, and prayer by Mrs. Minton, of Monumental church.

Mrs. Jarvis, of Trinity church, was appointed recording secretary, and her good work proved the wisdom of the choice.

In her opening remarks the district secretary mentioned briefly some of the great gifts made for missions during the year, called the attention of the membership to some important questions for home missionaries now pending in our own church, and pointed out the great need of a wise beginning of work in and for Norfolk before the field becomes so great and so needy as to be discouraging.

Reports of the year's work were then read from the local auxiliaries of the city. These reports were excellent, and an abstract of them will be given next week.

Mrs. Chapman, of Knoxville, Tenn., president of the Holston Conference Society, was introduced to the meeting, and told the ladies something about the work in Holston. It is growing very rapidly, fifty new auxiliaries having been organized during the past year. Their difficulty is, not to organize new societies, but to keep them alive. The Holston society owns the orphanage and school at Greenville, a property originally worth $7,500, to which two brick buildings have already been added, and where two more are in process of construction. The brick for these buildings has been burned upon the property during the past summer, the kiln having been prepared by one skilled workman, aided by the larger boys. There are now forty-five children in the orphanage, of which Mrs. E. E. Wiley is superintendent. Mrs. Wiley turns away at least a dozen children a month because she has no room for them.

Mrs. Chapman had just finished a six days' visit to the Flat Top coal region. The purpose of the visit was to learn where Miss Whitman, the newly-appointed missionary, should be settled, and what work was most needed in the beginning. The miners are about half foreign, the other half American, whites and negroes. There are almost no mountain whites among them. As a rule, they have plenty of money, every family having a monthly balance to its credit after the living expenses are paid, often as much as $50, and sometimes $75. The money slips away somehow, and often the men have to borrow before pay day comes. The knotty question for the missionary is, how to make the people feel the need of knowing how to read and write, and to make them understand the value of anything else than dollars. The General Board at St. Louis appropriated $300 for work among the coal miners this year, and the Holston Conference society has just added as much more. There is need for another young woman to work with Miss Whitman, and one is waiting ready to go as soon as the necessary funds shall be raised.

Mrs. Mastin, second vice-president of our own Conference society, followed with an account of what has been done this year in the way of sending supplies to missionary pastors. The best box was prepared by the women of Memorial church, Berkley; it was full of new clothing and household supplies, valued at more than $200. Several other churches have done excellent work of this kind, and done it as Memorial church has, in addition to what seemed all and more than one society could do. A committee, consisting of one member from each society in the district, was appointed to report to the auxiliaries Mrs. Mastin's statement of the work and its needs, and to report in January whether any auxiliary was willing to undertake a box or to share in a district box, or whether it seemed best to devote all the energies of the district to the local mission work.

"Deaconess work" was the order for the hour beginning at 12 o'clock. Miss Ogilvie gave a brief history of such work, beginning with Phoebe, and ending with an expression of her hope of what the order might be to our own Church. It was a correct and carefully prepared paper, discussing Pastor Fliedner's wonderful work, as well as the work of the order in our sister Methodist Church, with which Miss Ogilvie is familiar. If possible, the paper will appear in this column sometime. Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., followed with a discussion of deaconess work as he lately saw it in London, and a strong statement of the need of such an order in our own Church. He says that it would be just as sensible a plan to organize a church and build a house of worship and expect the brethren to succeed one another in supplying the pulpit as it is to expect the women of the Church, in addition to the care of their families, to look after the poor and sick and keep up all the visiting which is necessary. There are many necessary services which the best of pastors cannot render for which properly educated women would be eminently fit.

During the last hour of the meeting several matters of local interest were discussed. For the coming year the Norfolk societies will meet quarterly for a short session, making the meetings correspond as nearly as may be to the divisions of the year as planned by the General Board. The first quarterly meeting will be held in Cumberland Street church the last Thursday in February. Mrs. Jarvis will act as recording secretary until that meeting, at which her successor will be elected for a year.

EVENING SESSION.

After a very informal opening exercise the address of welcome to the Conference was made by Miss Fanny Keeling, of McKendree, and briefly acknowledged by a member of Epworth.

The city missionary reported her work for the year. Her work up to the 1st of October, 1901, has been reported in this column from time to time, and the statements will not be repeated. On October 1st a mission house, the second floor of a small dwelling in a convenient locality, was opened and the work thereby given a local habitation. She is to be found in the rooms for two hours each morning, has sewing classes two afternoons each week, a basketry class on Saturday morning, a boys' meeting Thursday night, and a mothers' meeting Friday night.

Rev. J. T. Mastin made an admirable address of a half hour on personal work. He spoke of the inestimable value of the human soul and the great possibilities open to those who have the light, in that they may be the Lord's messengers to those who have it not. The effort to render service reacts upon the servant, and really helps him more than any one else. The address was plain and practical, a good lesson and a fitting close for the day's work.

The time-honored custom of the Methodist Episcopal Church, inaugurated in the days of Wesley, of holding watch-night services, is still perpetuated by that denomination, and a union service of the Methodist churches in Norfolk will be held at Centenary church to-night, beginning at 10 o'clock and lasting until midnight. The sermon will, by special request, be preached by Rev. H. C. Cheatham, and the pastors of Cumberland Street, Epworth, McKendree, and Queen Street churches and men members are expected to participate in the exercises. At the close of the sermon a testimony meeting will follow—giving those who may desire an opportunity to speak of their advancement in Christian life during the year 1901.—Virginian-Pilot.

The sermon, appropriate especially for the season—"Christ"—begun at Central M. E. church Sunday morning, was concluded at night, when notwithstanding the threatening aspect of the weather, a large assemblage congregated to hear it. The promising young minister, Rev. Mr. Green, handled his subject well, and the discourse seemingly made an impression which will doubtless be a lasting one upon his attentive hearers. Although the delightful theme has been thousands of times presented to audiences that were touched by pathos of the oft-repeated but always new and beautiful story, yet something fresh and impressive and soul-stirring clothed Central's Sunday dissertation, which appeared to fall graciously upon a listening throng that seemed to devour at times the impassioned utterances of the eloquent divine.

A decided improvement is noticeable in the music, both vocal and instrumental, of the choir: The quartette—"Songs of Praise the Angels Sing," by Professor Dunbar, Mr. Anderson, Mrs. Leon Virnelson, and Miss Pablo, was well rendered, while a solo, "Night of Nights," by Miss Pablo, was superbly given.—Landmark.

At the meeting of the Methodist preachers yesterday morning, it was decided to hold a union service at Centenary Methodist church to-night, at which the congregations of Cumberland, Epworth, McKendree, and Queen Street churches are cordially invited to unite. The sermon will be preached by Rev. H. C. Cheatham.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, chairman of the committee who forwarded to Judge Green, of the Constitutional Convention, the former resolution in reference to the Quarles-Barbour bill passed by the preachers' meeting, read a letter in reply from Judge Green stating that he had turned them over to the proper committee, and recommending that there be an individual effort made on the part of all the preachers to get the delegates to the Convention to vote for the passage of the original bill when the question comes up before the Convention for final action. On motion of Rev. C. H. McGhee, a committee of three was appointed by the chair, consisting of Rev. R. H. Bennett, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, and Rev. C. H. McGhee, to draft resolutions urging the passage of the original bill, and that a copy of the same be sent to each representative from this section requesting them to vote and work for its passage.

The committee presented the following:

"We, the Methodist ministers of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley and vicinity, again urge our delegates in the Constitutional Convention, and especially upon the delegates from our section, the passage of the Quarles-Barbour bill for the regulation of the sale of intoxicants in its original form without the exception of cities from the majority signature clause.

"We are profoundly convinced that the passage of this bill is demanded by the best interests of our civilization, and we look to you as the delegates from our section to use your best endeavors to secure this much-needed legislation."

The paper was unanimously adopted and signed by every member of the body, and the chairman of the committee was instructed to forward a copy of the resolutions with the names appended to each representative in the Constitutional Convention from this section, and urge them to comply with the request contained therein.

A request from the City Methodist Mission for the sympathy and aid of the preachers in the work, and requesting that one preacher be appointed from the meeting to visit the mission every Friday evening and either preach or make a talk to the children and parents who attend this mission.

On motion, Dr. Smith and Rev. R. H. Bennett were appointed a committee to arrange for either a preacher or layman to conduct these exercises Friday night of each week.

The meeting began yesterday with a short religious service conducted by Rev. E. T. Dadmun, of Centenary Methodist church, after which the usual Monday morning reports were made.

Rev. R. H. Bennett reported that in the absence of the pastor Rev. J. J. Joliff, who was detained at his home by sickness, he preached at Queen Street Methodist church Sunday morning.

At the Seamen's Bethel, the congre-

Talmage's Sermon.

WASHINGTON. --In this discourse Dr. Talmage shows the folly of allowing forebodings to influence us and how expectation of evil weakens and destroys; text, Matthew vi, 34, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

The life of every man, woman and child is as closely under the divine care as though such person were the only man, woman or child. There are no accidents. As there is a law of storms in the natural world, so there is a law of trouble, a law of disaster, a law of misfortune, but the majority of the troubles of life are imaginary, and the most of those anticipated never come. At any rate, there is no cause of complaint against God. See how much he has done to make you happy—his sunshine filling the earth with glory, making rainbow for the storm and halo for the mountain, greenness for the moss, saffron for the cloud and crystal for the billow and procession of bannered flame through the opening gates of the morning, chaffinches to sing, rivers to glitter, seas to chant and springs to blossom and overpowering all other sounds with its song and overarching all other splendor with its triumph, covering all other beauty with its garlands and outflashing all other thrones with its dominion—deliverance for a lost world through the Great Redeemer.

I discourse of the sin of borrowing trouble.

First, such a habit of mind and heart is wrong because it puts one into a despondency that ill fits him for duty. I planted two rosebushes in my garden. The one thrived beautifully; the other perished. I found the dead one on the shady side of the house. Our dispositions, like our plants, need sunshine. Expectancy of repulse is the cause of many secular and religious failures. Fear of bankruptcy has up-torn many a fine business and sent the man dodging among the note shavers. Fear of slander and abuse has often invited all the long beaked vultures of scorn and backbiting. Many of the misfortunes of life, like hyenas, flee if you courageously meet them.

Evils of Brooding.

How poorly prepared for religious duty is a man who sits down under the gloom of expected misfortune! If he prays, he says, "I do not think I shall be answered." If he gives, he says, "I expect they will steal the money." Helen Chalmers told me that her father, Thomas Chalmers, in the darkest hour of the history of the Free Church of Scotland and when the woes of the land seemed to weigh upon his heart said to his children, "Come, let us go out and play ball or fly kite," and the only difficulty in the play was that the children could not keep up with their father. The McCherynes and the Summerfields of the church who did the most good toiled in the sunlight. Away with the horrors! They distil poison. They dig graves, and if they could climb so high they would drown the rejoicings of heaven with sobs and walling.

You will have nothing but misfortune in the future if you sedulously watch for it. How shall a man catch the right kind of fish if he arranges line and hook and bait to catch lizards and water serpents? Hunt for bats and hawks, and bats and hawks you will find. Hunt for robin redbreasts, and you will find robin redbreasts. One night an eagle and an owl got into fierce battle. The eagle, unused to the night, was no match for the owl, which is most at home in the darkness, and the king of the air fell helpless, but the morning rose, and with it rose the eagle, and the owls and the night-hawks and the bats came a second time to the combat. Now, the eagle in the sunlight, with a stroke of his talons and a great cry, cleared the air, and his enemies, with torn feathers and splashed with blood, tumbled into the thickets. Ye are the children of light. In the night of despondency you will have no chance against your enemies that flock up from beneath, but trusting in God and standing in the sunshine of the promises you shall "renew your youth like the eagle."

Do Not Borrow Trouble.

Again, the habit of borrowing trouble is wrong, because it has a tendency to make us overlook present blessing. To slake man's thirst the rock is cleft, and cool waters leap into his brimming cup. To feed his hunger the fields bow down with bending wheat, and the cattle come down from the clover pastures to give him milk, and the orchards yellow and ripen, casting their juicy fruits into his lap. Alas, that amid such exuberance of blessing man should growl as though he were a soldier on half rations or a sailor on short allowance; that a man should stand neck deep in harvests looking forward to famine; that one should feel the strong pulses of health marching with regular tread through all the avenues of life and yet tremble at the expected assault of sickness; that a man should sit in his pleasant home, fearful that ruthless want will some day rattle the broken window sash with tempest and sweep the coals from the hearth and pour hunger into the bread tray, that a man fed by him who owns all the harvests should expect to starve; that one whom God loves and surrounds with benediction and attends with angelic escort and hovers over with more than motherly fondness should be looking for a heritage of tears! Has God been hard with thee that thou shouldst be foreboding? Has he stinted thy board? Has he covered thee with rags? Has he spread traps for thy feet and galled thy cup and rasped thy soul and wrecked thee with storm and thundered upon thee with a life full of calamity?

If your father or brother come into your bank, where gold and silver are lying about, you do not watch them, for you know they are honest, but if an entire stranger come by the safe you keep your eye on him, for you do not know his designs. So some men treat God not as a father, but a stranger, and act suspiciously toward him. It is high time you began to thank God for present blessing; thank him for your children, happy, buoyant and bounding; praise him for your home, with its fountain of song and laughter; adore him for morning light and evening shadow; praise him for fresh, cool water bubbling from the rock, leaping in the cascade, soaring in the mist, falling in the shower, dashing against the rocks and clapping its hands in the tempest; love him for the grass that cushions the earth and the clouds that curtain the sky and the foliage that waves in the forest; thank him for a Bible to read and a Saviour to deliver.

Many Christians think it a bad sign to be jubilant and their work of self examination is a hewing down of their brighter experiences. Like a boy with a new jackknife hacking everything he comes across, so their self examination is a religious cutting to pieces of the greenest things they can lay their hands on. They imagine they are doing God's service when they are going about borrowing trouble, and borrowing it at 30 per cent, which is always a sure precursor of bankruptcy.

Sufficient Unto the Day.

Again, the habit of borrowing trouble is wrong because the present is sufficiently taxed with trial. God sees that we all need a certain amount of trouble, and so he apportions it for all the days and years of our life. Alas for the policy of gathering it all up for one day or year! Cruel thing to put upon the back of one camel all the cargo intended for the entire caravan. I never look at my memorandum book to see what engagements and duties are far ahead. Let every week bear its own burdens. The shadows of today are thick enough. Why implore the presence of other shadows? The cup is already distasteful. Why halloo to disasters far distant to come and wring out more gall in the bitterness? Are we such champions that, having won the belt in former encounters, we can go forth to challenge all the future?

Here are business men just able to manage affairs as they now are. They can pay their rent and meet their notes and manage affairs as they now are, but how if a panic should come and my investments should fail? Go tomorrow and write on your daybook or on your ledger or on your money safe, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Do not worry about notes that are far from due. Do not pile up on your counting desk the financial anxieties of the next 20 years. The God who has taken care of your worldly occupation, guarding your store from the torch of the incendiary and the key of the burglar, will be as faithful in 1910 as in 1901. God's hand is mightier than the machinations of stock gamblers or the plots of political demagogues or the red right arm of revolution, and the darkness will fly and the storm fall dead at his feet.

So there are persons in feeble health, and they are worried about the future. They make out very well now, but they are bothering themselves about future pleurisies and rheumatisms and neuralgias and fevers. Their eyesight is feeble, and they are worried lest they entirely lose it. Their hearing is indistinct, and they are alarmed lest they become entirely deaf. They felt chilly today and are expecting an attack of typhoid. They have been troubled for weeks with some perplexing malady and dread becoming lifelong invalids. Take care of your health now and trust God for the future. Be not guilty of the blasphemy of asking him to take care of you while you sleep with your windows tight down or eat chicken salad at 11 o'clock at night or sit down on a cake of ice to cool off. Be prudent and then be confident. Some of the sickest people have been the most useful. It was so with Payson, who died deaths daily, and Robert Hall, who used to stop in the midst of his sermon and lie down on the pulpit sofa to rest and then go on again. Theodore Frelinghuysen had a great horror of dying till the time came and then went peacefully. Take care of the present and let the future look out for itself. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Thorns in Life's Path.

Again, the habit of borrowing misfortune is wrong because it unfits us for it when it actually does come. We cannot always have smooth sailing.

Life's path will sometimes tumble among declivities and mount a steep and be thorn pierced. Judas will kiss our cheek and then sell us for 30 pieces of silver. Human scorn will try to crucify us between two thieves. We will hear the iron gate of the sepulcher creak and grind as it shuts in our kindred. But we cannot get ready for these things by forebodings. They who fight imaginary woes will come out of breath into conflict with the armed disasters of the future. Their ammunition will have been wasted long before they come under the guns of real misfortune. Boys in attempting to jump a wall sometimes go so far back in order to get impetus that when they come up they are exhausted, and these long races in order to get spring enough to vault trouble bring us up at last to the dreadful reality with our strength gone.

Finally, the habit of borrowing trouble is wrong because it is unbelief. God has promised to take care of us. The Bible blooms with assurances. Your hunger will be fed, your sickness will be alleviated, your sorrows will be healed. God will sandal your feet and smooth your path, and along by frowning crag and opening grave sound the voices of victory and good cheer. The summer clouds that seem thunder charged really carry in their bosom harvests of wheat and shocks of corn and vineyards purpling for the wine press. The wrathful wave will kiss the feet of the great storm walker. Our great Joshua will command and above your soul the sun of prosperity will stand still. Bleak and wave struck Patmos shall have apocalyptic vision, and you shall hear the cry of elders and the sweep of wings and trumpets of salvation and the voice of hallelulah unto God forever.

Have Courage and Faith in God.

Your way may wind along dangerous bridle paths and amid wolf's howl and the scream of the wind, but the way still winds upward till angels guard it, and trees of life overarch it, and thrones line it, and crystalline fountains leap on it, and the pathway ends at gates that are pearl, and streets that are gold, and temples that are always open, and hills that quake with perpetual song, and a city mingling forever Sabbath and jubilee and triumph and coronation.

Let pleasure chant her siren song;
'Tis not the song for me.
To weeping it will turn ere long,
For this is heaven's decree.

But there's a song the ransomed sing
To Jesus, their exalted King,
With joyful heart and tongue.
Oh, that's the song for me!

Courage, my brother! The father does not give to his son at school enough money to last him several years, but as the bills for tuition and board and clothing and books come in pays them. So God will not give you grace all at once for the future, but will meet all your exigencies as they come. Through earnest prayer trust him. People ascribe the success of a certain line of steamers to business skill and know not the fact that when that line of steamers started the wife of the proprietor passed the whole of each day when a steamer sailed in prayer to God for its safety and the success of the line. Put everything in God's hands and leave it there. Large interest money to pay will soon eat up a farm, a store, an estate, and the interest on borrowed troubles will swamp anybody. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

"THE MAN THAT CAME AFTER THE ANGEL."

(A Ministerial Experience, Profitable also to the Lally.)

It was rather a bitter laugh to come from a young, strong fellow with a good-natured face. But there in his lonely study, thawing at the stove from the cold of a long winter drive and the chill of a half-warmed church, sat Rev. John Brown, B. A.

During his round of visits that day he had come to old Uncle Billy Wood-yatt, who "enjoyed" at once, as he said, "poor health and a second wife."

"No," said Uncle Billy to the minister, as he sought from him sympathy for his various troubles and came at last to the subject of his second wife. "No, I ain't got nothing to say against this one, but my first was an 'angel!'"

And Rev. John Brown laughed bitterly as he repeated quietly to himself, "nothing to say against her—but the first was an 'angel,'" then he added softly, "poor thing!" Then he began musing while the fire burned, and said again, "Poor thing, to come after an 'angel,' but it's just my luck, too. There was my brother Bob, his pants lasted longer, his boots were always better blacked, his lessons better learned, and if I said anything out of the way it was, 'Bob would never have said that or done the other thing.' At school old Dominie Wilson used to say, 'Your brother Robert would never have made that mistake!' In the games, too, no matter how well I did, the boys used to say to the new comers, 'Oh, but you ought to have seen Bob Brown!'"

"In college Cousin Tom was the 'angel' and won all the medals and delivered the valedictory, and was held up to me by all the professors, and now"—and there was an ill-defined mumble that sounded very much like "bother take it," "and now—it's worse than ever. Nothing to say against me! oh, no! not at all, but 'the first was an angel,'" and again the rather grim laugh echoed through the lonely room, for Rev. John Brown, B. A., was only human, and a good deal tired and rather disposed to be blue.

Now John Brown was naturally a cheery, hearty fellow, a good average student and athlete, a fairly good preacher and a thoroughly honest, above-board fellow, whom all men as well as women liked, and children all trusted. But to-day he had a considerable overdose of "the 'angel.'" "The angel" in this case was Rev. Frederick Kittering, Ph. D., John's immediate predecessor in the pastorate of the Evanston Congregational church. He was a good man, there was no doubt of that, for John knew him, but as John said, "You know the fellow must have been an 'angel,' for Deacon Jones said, 'Mr. Kittering used to hold prayer-meeting every Tuesday evening at Bolton's Corners, and Wednesday in our home church, and Thursday at the Landing,' while Deacon Sitwell, who lived eight miles in the other direction from Deacon Jones, said, 'Yes, sir, rain or shine, Mr. Kittering never missed a prayer-meeting Tuesday evening at the Glen school house' (ten miles from Bolton's Corners and at the same hour) 'and Thursday at the Old Union church in Springfield' (thirteen miles from the Landing)."

Then John learned that Mr. Kittering used to preach "every" Sunday afternoon in two places sixteen miles apart at the same hour, and, moreover, that he "was the greatest man for exchanging with his brother ministers," though when he got the time John could not tell.

Then about visiting, at least forty families told John that Mr. Kittering used to visit "a great deal oftener than you do. Why you are quite a stranger. He used to come and bring Mrs. Kittering and spend the day with us once every month at least." "Forty into thirty-one doesn't go with me," said John to himself; "the fellow must have been an angel and not subject to the usual limitations of space and time."

But that wasn't all, for three different sick folks claimed the honor of Mr. Kittering's Monday afternoons. With all that, as Mr. Barber put it, "Mr. Kittering, sir, was a great visitor; he was always on the road." He must have been," John very feelingly replied. "Oh, the depth of Mr. Kittering's sermons," said old John McLeod, more familiarly known as "Holy John," "that man spent days and nights in his study." "Just so," said John, and I am afraid he meant more than he said.

Beyond all this, Mr. Kittering could sing like a lark, draw on the black-board like an artist, and play the organ like an angel. John couldn't do any of these things, but he heard that Mr. Kittering could. Mr. Kittering gave lectures in the college, was a popular stump speaker, and even wrote poetry, which the choir sang to music of his composing.

His Sunday school addresses were wonderful, his funeral orations deeply sympathetic, his power in prayer remarkable, and his visits to the sick a real means of health. Everywhere he went John heard of him and the singing of his praises, but at last this very afternoon John had gone into Widow McCamus', and there, on the mantel, in the very centre stood the photo of Mr. Kittering. "Oh," said the old lady, "but he was a darling."

So as the fire died down John got bluer and bluer. It seemed no use. He knew they must be unconsciously exaggerating, for at least no man could be in two places at once, but after such a man could there be any chance for a plain, humble man to win their hearts and do good work?

Just then John thought of Uncle Esek Martin, who, in his later bachelor days, sought comfort in the form of a widow, and found it not.

One day she led him to the cemetery where reposed the remains of her first husband. There she wept so copiously that Uncle Esek lost patience and said to a friend he bottomholed, "I'd give ten dollars if she only had him again." And John thought, too, "Well, I'd give something if they only had their angel, Mr. Kittering, back."

But being young and healthy Christian John took his Bible, turned to the verse which says of a certain woman, "She hath done what she could," and said to himself, "Well, the Master knows I have tried to, so it's all right with Him," and giving himself a mental and spiritual shake, turned into bed.

All the same he couldn't forget Kittering. He didn't get any chance to, and when a year later the way opened for his long-cherished desire to go abroad as a foreign missionary, I am afraid there was just a little Kittering mixed in with the application he sent in for a place to do pioneer work, "not building on any other man's foundation." He went to the Congo after the usual addresses and presentations and farewell meetings, all of which John, being modest, set down to the fact of his going as a foreign missionary.

A year later the same John, but tanned and a little thinner, under the thatched roof of his mud-walled hut, reading the appointment of Rev. Alex. Saunders, a very decent fellow, to the Evanston church, having in mind "the angel," sat down and wrote him a letter of sympathy in view of the excellencies of Mr. Kittering.

Six months later again Rev. John Brown made the very walls of his hut to ring again with hearty laughter when the mail came in. Between spasms he handed the letter to his colleague. It was from Alex. Saunders, and this is all it said:

"My Dear Brown: Thanks for your letter, but human nature is still the same. The fish we lose is always bigger than any we catch. Distance lends enchantment to the view. There was nothing personal in your experience. Kittering isn't in it; you are the angel now."—Rev. Wm. T. Gunn, in The Congregationalist.

The Washington, Richmond, and Florida Limited is the name of the Southern's new train inaugurated November 24, 1901, and now being operated daily between Washington, Richmond, and Jacksonville, Fla. It is in every detail a complete train, composed of day coaches of the very latest improved patterns, Pullman drawing-room cars, and dining cars. The day coaches go through from Washington and Richmond to Charlotte, Columbia, Savannah, and Jacksonville, and at Richmond a drawing-room sleeper is added, going through to Atlanta and Birmingham. At Charlotte this sleeper is attached to the United States Fast Mail, forming through service for New Orleans, Memphis, and all the South and Southwest. Connections are made at Charlotte with sleeper for Charleston, S. C. It leaves Washington daily at 10:50 A. M., Richmond at 2:30 P. M.; arriving at Jacksonville at 9:15 A. M. the following morning, and correspondingly quick time is made to all other Southern points. This service is in addition to the numerous trains operated daily over the main line, thus making five limited trains daily, with dining-car service between the North and South over the Southern.

Captain C. W. Westbury, the courteous and alert district passenger agent of the Southern Railway, is very proud of this train, and recently showed a number of newspaper men through it. It is indeed a thing of beauty, and for the travelling public a joy forever.—Foreign Mission Journal.

TWO STORIES OF WASHINGTON.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale, in his "Memories of a Hundred Years," now publishing in The Outlook, adds to his own memories those of his father and of others. Some of these anecdotes go beyond the limits of the century; in the instalment for January, for instance, are collected several reminiscences of Washington, from which we take two:

An old parishioner of mine, once told me that the day when Washington entered Boston in triumph—that is, on the 17th of March, 1776, he took up his headquarters at the best public house in Boston, which was at the head of State street, until then called King street. According to my old friend's account, General Howe had occupied the same inn. The mother of my informant was the daughter of the keeper of the inn, and was a little girl playing about the house, and, of course, interested in all that passed. Washington, with his usual kindness to children, called the child to him, and said: "You have seen the soldiers on both sides; which do you like best?" The little girl could not tell a lie any more than he could, and with a childish frankness, she said she liked the redcoats best. Washington laughed, according to my friend's story, and said to her, "Yes, my dear, the redcoats do look the best, but it takes the ragged boys to do the fighting." This is one of many well-authenticated anecdotes which disproves the old demigod theory that Washington never smiled.

When I was in college, Jared Sparks, always a near friend, was lecturing on American history. I stopped after the lecture to ask him some questions, and he told me this story of the battle of Princeton. I dare not call it my personal touch with the Revolution, but it removes me from it by only one gap. Sparks told me of the Massachusetts officer, whose name he did not give me, who was at Princeton on the day of the battle. There is a certain bridge, which the well-informed reader will remember, which it was important to destroy. Washington instructed this Massachusetts captain to take a file of men and destroy the bridge. The captain touched his hat and said, "Are there enough men?" and Washington said, "Enough to be cut to pieces." This gentleman told Dr. Sparks afterwards that as he went back to his men he pinched his cheeks for fear that they should see that he was pale; and they destroyed the bridge.

All one's life is a music, if one touches the notes rightly and in time.—John Ruskin.

OUR FRIENDS, THE DRUGGISTS.

—It is a pleasure to testify to the generally high character of druggists. But because of a few exceptions to the rule, it is necessary to caution the public to be on guard against imitations of Perry Davis' Pain-Killer. See that you get the right article, the soothing, helpful Pain-Killer that was used in your family before you were born. Don't be taken into buying a substitute. There is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

gations were the largest since the Bethel has been at its present location.

Huntersville—Rev. H. C. Cheatham reported the Christmas entertainment at his church Friday night one of the most pleasant in the history of that school. The audience was a very large one, and the programme rendered by the children exceptionally fine. He preached to large congregations Sunday morning and night. His morning subject was on "The Angel's Message Announcing the Birth of Christ." At night his theme was, "What Shall the Answer Be?"

Rev. D. J. Traynham, the new preacher in charge of the Norfolk Circuit, Portsmouth District, was present for the first time. He gave an interesting account of the work on his field.

Epworth—Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith preached at the 11 o'clock service Sunday morning and at 7:30 o'clock Rev. R. H. Bennett preached, taking as his theme, "For if our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." The sermon was a very able one.

Rev. C. H. McGhee reported that the Methodist congregation at Lambert's Point united with the Presbyterians. The retiring pastor, Rev. G. B. Hanrahan, preached his closing sermon on "Faith." At night the Presbyterians united with the Methodists, and Mr. Hanrahan, who was to have preached, was unable to do so on account of sudden sickness. The pastor supplied the pulpit.

Rev. N. R. Smith, the new preacher in charge of Oaklette and Bethel churches, was present for the first time.

Cumberland Street—The audience was an unusually large one Christmas Day. Rev. H. C. Cheatham preached. Mr. Bane preached morning and night on Sunday.

The pastors of Monumental, Memorial, Central, Wright Memorial, Owens Memorial, Trinity, and McKendree churches, conducted the usual services. At the latter church the music by the choir was exceptionally fine.

Rev. J. W. Crider, who has recently returned from a visit to his friends in South Carolina, was in attendance. He said he was glad to be with his brethren again. He gave a most interesting account of his trip and stay in South Carolina.—Virginian-Pilot.

Miss Annie Lou Edwards was quietly married this evening at her home here to Rev. J. W. Smith. The ceremony was performed by Bishop J. C. Granbery, and was witnessed by members of the family only. The bride is an accomplished and attractive daughter of Rev. Dr. W. E. Edwards, of Randolph-Macon College, while the groom is a graduate of the college here, and a popular teacher and preacher at Bethel Military Academy. Rev. and Mrs. Smith left on train 78 for an extended northern tour.—Leader.

NEW CONSTITUTION ADOPTED.

Announcement has been made that the new Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which was adopted at the last General Conference of that denomination held at the Auditorium in May, 1900, and referred to the various conferences throughout the country, has finally been approved by the three-quarters vote required. The vote was: Ayes, 8,196; nays, 2,513.

The element which opposed the new organic law of the Church because it provided for the admission of women as delegates to the General Conference, made war on the propositions all along the line, but met with defeat. One hundred and twenty-one Annual Conferences voted on the question, a total of 10,709 ballots being cast by delegates.

The principal changes provided for by the new Constitution are: It gives women the right to sit as delegates in the General Conference. It gives laymen's electoral meetings authority to vote on constitutional questions. It changes the vote necessary in the General Conference to amend the Constitution from three-fourths to two-thirds.—Sun.

CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENTS.

As announced in Sunday's issue of the Virginian-Pilot, the Christmas entertainment of Epworth Methodist Sunday school came off in the lecture room at 8 o'clock last night, and despite the stormy weather, was largely attended. The programme, as published, which was a highly meritorious one, was presented in its entirety, and to the great delight of all who were present. A very pleasing feature of the entertainment was the talk of Rev. R. H. Bennett on a "Happy Christmas." At the close of the musical and literary programme presents were distributed to the children. Many of them were not only beautiful and useful, but costly.

Centenary Methodist Sunday school had its Christmas entertainment last night, when the very choice and elaborate programme, entitled, "The Spirit of Christmas," was rendered in a faultless manner, and to the great delight of the large audience. The pulpit and chancel decorations were exquisitely beautiful, which added much to the attractiveness of the entertainment. At the conclusion of the programme the children received the usual presents, many of them being of intrinsic value.—Virginian-Pilot.

WHERE FOUR STATES MEET.

In the United States there is but one "four corners," where four States and Territories join. More than this, it is the only place of its kind in the world. This point, upon a spur of the Carizo mountains, is the one where Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona join.

At no other place on the globe do we find four States, Territories or provinces uniting to form such a junction.

This spot is not easy of access, and few tourists ever see it, yet a monument stands at the point, erected by United States surveyors and inscribed with the names of the States and Territories whose boundaries meet there. The point is reached by a trail from the road leading from Navajo Springs in Colorado, in the Ute Indian reservation, to the San Juan river. The trail leaves the road and crosses the river near Scott's trading-post, in Utah, and leads to the monument, which is of the usual type erected by government surveyors to mark State corners.

A former monument was destroyed a few years ago by Navajo Indians, and only the cairn of rocks was left, but during the past summer another surveying party visited the spot and rebuilt the monument.

HOW RHODES GOT EVEN.

In clubs in Cape Town and London they are reciting the details of a little "curtain raiser," in which characters no less distinguished than Cecil Rhodes and Rudyard Kipling are the dramatis personae. Friends of both declare the plot to be an apocryphal one, stating that Kipling is too wary to be caught napping, as he is reputed to have been in this case.

It is a well-known fact that Kipling and Rhodes, though fast friends, delight to play practical jokes on each other, and unless this latest account of their amiable contests can be substantiated, the wit of the author has triumphed throughout over that of the statesman. The story in question was brought to America by some American mining engineers who related it recently at a dinner party given in Washington.

According to the tale, Kipling and Rhodes were fellow-passengers on a Cape railway train bound toward Kimberley. Up to the moment of departure from Cape Town, Rhodes had been busy sending political dispatches, and it fell to the lot of the poet to book their seats and berths. The author is a man of boyish build; the empire builder is ponderous, and has a decided aversion to sleeping in a top berth. Knowing this, the poet determined to have fun at the expense of the man of destiny. When that night the ex-Premier found that he had been assigned to an upper berth his rage was great. He pleaded with the agile Kipling to exchange with him, but the poet with a sardonic smile assured Rhodes that he could not think of exalting himself above so mighty an Imperialist, and so the bulky statesman had to climb laboriously to bed.

After midnight the train stopped at a small station on the desolate karroo, and the wife of a Colonial official got aboard. When she discovered that, notwithstanding her telegram, no reservation had been made for her, she lifted up her voice in loud protest. The commotion awakened Rhodes, who thrust his head out between the curtains and demanded to know the cause of the disturbance.

"I am the wife of Colonel —," she exclaimed, "and although I wired for a berth, none has been saved for me."

"That's all right," thundered the Colossus; "my little boy is occupying the berth just under mine; turn in there with him."

The lady was appeased and proceeded to take advantage of the offer. Presently there was an insurrection in the lower berth.

"Now, don't cry and make a fuss," the lady was heard to say; "your father told me I might sleep here."

"Madam," gasped the author of the Jungle Book, "do you know who I am?"

"You are the little son of the gentleman in the upper berth, are you not?" faltered the now startled woman, peering into the dark compartment.

"Nothing of the sort," roared the poet; "I am Mr. Rudyard —"

Before he could confess further the frightened woman fled to another car. The upper berth shook with convulsive appreciation as the poet with the mingled vocabulary of several tongues berated the South African statesman.

"Ring off on the cuss word and the swear," exclaimed Rhodes from his altitude of mirth, "and give us something about a rag and a bone and a hank of hair."

But with picturesque wrath Kipling stuck to his impromptu programme, and the remainder of the night was filled with impassioned utterance.

A VICTORY TO BE PROUD OF is the final and absolute cure of a sore throat, in which the rawness and tenderness have been spreading dangerously near those guardians of life, the lungs. The luxury of a sound throat and robust lungs is most keenly enjoyed by people who, having suffered all the consequences of "a little cold, you know," have been rescued from misery and danger by Allen's Lung Balsam.

intended to be read once in every ten or twenty years," writes Mary Y. Patterson in the Ladies' Home Journal. "I was present before the battle of Lexington, and saw General Cunningham, a prisoner of war, passed through the settlement. His cart was upset and all his wares were thrown out in the road. The villagers rushed to his aid, but when he took a hasty inventory of his stock he declared that much was missing, and furthermore denounced the place and said it should thenceforth be known as 'Pilfershire.' And thus it was known until 1825, when the village fathers called a meeting to take steps toward throwing off the ignominious name.

"As a substitute some one mentioned 'Red Rock.' This was met by the objection that there were no red rocks in the vicinity. Whereupon a shrewd old man suggested that they could paint one. So a great rock by the roadside was given a coat of deep, rich red, and since that time 'painting day,' which occurs about every dozen years, has been one of the great celebrations in Red Rock's history."

Canada Contented as It Is.

In various ways and under all sorts of disguises has annexation been presented. Sometimes its advocates have been lordly, threatening and coercive. At other times they have come as good friends, anxious to save us from "tyranny" and to make us really happy. The thing is now called "continental union," which implies a harmonious pooling of interests. But, call it what they may Canada will have none of it. There is plenty of room on this North American continent for the republic which has a four years' monarchy and for the monarchy which is a true republic. Side by side they can work out their destinies, each attending to its own concerns and entertaining the best feelings toward the other. The "Continental Union" association is apparently a source of amusement for the New York gentlemen who belong to it. If it satisfies them, it does not hurt us.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

A Technical Dictionary.

A complete dictionary of technical terms would be a welcome addition to the library alike of the scientist and the technical man. The Society of German Engineers of Berlin has undertaken to provide such a dictionary in German, French and English. The name of this work will be "Technolexicon." The society has already established editorial offices. Dr. Hubert Jansen, the well known lexicographer, being editor in chief of the work. The society asks for co-operation in the effort to make the "Technolexicon" a complete work in the three languages named and invites help from individual contributors.—Dry Goods Economist.

Most Durable Binding For Books.

The recently published report of the committee appointed by the Society of Arts on bookbinding condemns the use of calfskin and Russia leather as most liable to decay. Of replies from 39 libraries 31 recommend morocco and pigskin as the most durable. There is a general agreement that the use of gas in libraries has a most deteriorating effect on the bindings, the electric light being preferable.

Sorrow.

Sorrow has its ministry, but many find it hard at first to comprehend its meaning or to learn its lessons. Everything about it seems so dark and mysterious that they miss the guiding hand that sends and directs it, but by and by the light casts its rays over their path, and they begin to discern a good and gracious design in the trying dispensation. If while the vision lingered they were inclined to rebel, now they become acquiescent and bless God for His chastisement. The things that seemed adverse are found to be working out good to their souls. Hope and cheer have returned, and they accept the present with resignation and gratitude and read the future with a joyous and radiant anticipation.—Presbyterian.

CORN FODDER.

The Binder and Shredder Do Away With Drudgery in Handling It.

Every acre of good corn has standing on it the equivalent of the feeding value of from three-fourths to a ton of hay, and the welfare of the owner requires that it should be made use of. How to do it at the minimum expense in cash and labor is one of the serious problems on the western farm.

The problem of putting the corn in shock has been settled by the improved corn binders. There is but a few cents an acre difference between the cost of putting corn in shock and husking it out of the shock. The introduction of the corn binder has cheapened the cost of putting in shock, while the scarcity and the higher price of labor on the farm have increased the cost of husking.

Where a man has 40 acres of corn to cut up or where two or three neighbors have 40 or over we have not the slightest hesitation in saying that they had better purchase a corn binder. The difficulty comes in as to how to handle the corn after it is cut up. Husking corn out of the shock is entirely out of the question for two reasons, one the increased price of labor and the other the damage done to the fodder by exposing the inside of the shock to the weather. Where a man has to feed his corn and fodder separate the shredder will soon be indispensable.

The majority of farmers do not feed cattle and hence are compelled when their corn is cut up to thrash it and shred it so as to secure corn for the market or other feeding purposes and the fodder for forage. This is particularly valuable where dairying is a specialty on the farm and where silos have not yet come into use. We believe for the small farmer who is a special solution of the problem, but for the farm where dairying is but incidental and the farmer needs a large amount of roughage to carry through stock cattle or sheep, then the shredder furnishes the best solution that has been offered up to date.

In conclusion a Farm, Field and Fireside correspondent who advances these views expresses the opinion that the binder and shredder have practically done away with the drudgery in handling corn fodder, and it is time for farmers to wake up and see that it is no longer necessary for them to have their shirt sleeves torn to pieces and their arms and faces scratched with corn blades in order to get that other half of the value of the cornfields. One shredder will do for a neighborhood and will do much to rob farm life of its drudgery when properly used.

Churches may be better measured by their gifts than their gains.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Editorial.

A man has no more religion that he can command in time of need. His faith is no greater than his trust in God, at the very hour when he is about to lose his wealth, his health, his good name, or his life itself. Every man must give up wealth, health, and friends, and life some day. Is Christ more to us than all the world beside? Can we truly say, "In Thy presence is fulness of joy; and at Thy right hand there is pleasure forevermore"? If we cannot say it in hours of trial, we really cannot say it at all. If we can say it in health and cannot say it in sickness; if in wealth, and not in poverty; if when popular, and not when abused; if when surrounded by loved ones, and not when bereaved, then health and wealth and popularity and friends are the sources of the joy and pleasure, and not Christ. Let us not be deceived in this matter. Faith in God and love to God are unknown quantities till tested.

There is no truth more solemn and yet more precious than that of the individuality of the human soul. The great world about us swarms with life. We are not known outside of our little neighborhood. We are but one of hundreds of millions. Yes, but we are one. You are one. I am one. Nothing on earth can blot out that assurance of personal individuality. No king ever possessed more absolute authority than does each soul possess over its own real inner life. This is the foundation of all responsibility and of all possibility of any development of character.

No soul is so linked to any other soul that it cannot work out its own destiny. No ties of friendship or of love are so strong that they compel the soul to do or not to do the right or the wrong. It is never an excuse for wrongdoing that our dearest friends advised us, even urged us to do. The man or woman who begs us to violate the fundamental law of our nature and do what we believe to be wrong is no longer our friend. He loves opinion or plans more than he loves our welfare. The true friend wants us above all things to do right, and the right itself is wrong for us if we do it believing that we are doing wrong. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

To refuse to do what a friend asks may be painful, but to refuse to obey the truth is to lose self-respect, and to overturn the very foundation of all true friendship and love. To be loyal to the truth is a necessity for any spiritual life and growth. St. John has beautifully defined our relation: "Fellow-helpers to the Truth." We are not fellow-helpers to John Smith or Peter Jones or any other man, necessarily. They may reject our help, and they have power to reject it, and they often do reject it. But we can be and ought always to be "fellow-helpers to the Truth."

The great question of the judgment will be, "Did you do what you were placed in the world to do?" God had a reason for making you, and for making you with your talents and not with the talents of other men. His question will not be, "Did you make money? Did you dress in purple and fine linen, and fare sumptuously every day?" nor will it be, "Were you a beggar, and did the dogs lick your sores?" Neither the riches nor the poverty will be a satisfactory answer to His question. "Have you done what I placed you in the world to do?" If so, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things." If not, "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Christians are never so strong as to be able to slight or dispense with the regular means of grace. Peter and John went up to the temple to pray "at the hour of prayer." They had received the baptism of the Spirit; they were apostles, but they used the regular means of grace. There is possibility of mistake, if not of intentional wrong-doing in such matters. It is true that "the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." Nevertheless, it is a very good thing to know the letter, in order to be filled with the Spirit. Men tell me that they do not have to go to church to be good Christians; that they do not have to say their prayers night and morning, that every day is a Sabbath to them; all days are holy to God. I have heard all these things in my life. But I have never heard them from those whom we all recognize as among "the salt of the earth." The men and women whose piety and whose love for God have stood all manner of tests are like Peter and John. They go up to the temple to pray "at the hour of prayer." When a man begins to think that he does not need to use the ordinary means of grace, he had better begin to use both ordinary and extraordinary.

THE WAR CLAIM.

Bishop Morrison, writing in the Central Methodist of the work of the Conferences over which he presided, said in part:

"The work was fully completed and no undue haste at any session. Numerous memorials were directed to the coming General Conference. The 'Publishing House claim' was brought forward more than once, but was not discussed. There seems to be a quiet and general conviction that the coming General Conference will take such steps as will relieve the Church from all embarrassment or even suspicion of wrong doing."

NOTEWORTHY ANSWERS.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes was once asked two questions by a young man. His replies are worthy to be noted by all persons, young or old. The questions were:

"What are the three best books?"

"How shall I attain real success?"

Dr. Holmes wrote the following letter:

"The three best books? The Bible, Shakespeare's plays, and a good dictionary."

"To attain real success? Real work, and concentration on some useful calling adapted to your abilities."

One might well regret that the number of books was limited to three, instead of to ten, but an understanding personal appropriation of the three given will require the study possible in any ordinary lifetime, and will fit a man for any society, earthly or heavenly.

The answer to the second question cannot be praised too highly. There is not a flaw in it anywhere. It answers the exact question put by the young man. It answers it in simple, clear language, and it gives an answer, which, if honestly taken, and followed, will give the result desired. It will be a good thing, however, to impress the meaning upon one's mind, if the dictionary, spoken of above, is taken, and the meaning of "work," "concentration," "adaptation," and "abilities," is found and carefully absorbed. Work, concentration, and adaptation are words poorly understood by many persons. Work does not consist in a spasmodic effort now and then. The horse that can be speeded a mile in 2:02 may win the transient applause of the gaping crowd, but the horse that travels over hill and dale, through mud and sand, making eight and ten miles per hour or fifty and sixty and seventy miles a day is the horse that his master trusts when he has heavy and pressing and important work to do.

And yet toil, labor, employment are not enough. "Real work" is continuous effort or exertion of strength, directed to an end. And hence we come naturally to that second word, "Con-

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

The result of this was that, almost before Freeda knew it, she was preparing herself to go to Hope college in time to begin with the second term. It was late, but she was well fitted for the year's work and could enter then under certain agreed conditions. The uncle and aunt came on in January, and to Edward's delight his aunt proved a very ready and helpful partner with his mother in the daily work, while his uncle rapidly regained his health and in a few weeks was ready to enter an agreement with Edward looking toward a permanent interest in the farm as part owner and manager of it.

Matters were in this condition at the close of the following summer, when Edward Blake had another experience which was almost as unexpected to him as the proposal for a college course had been to Freeda.

She had come home for the summer with glowing accounts of her experience and enthusiastic recitals of events in the college life. The summer itself had been fairly prosperous, and Edward had taken genuine delight in knowing that all the expenses of his sister's college life had been met from the sale of grain and produce. There had not been a moment that his mother or uncle could discover when he had reverted in his own mind to the giving up of his own ambitions as a student. The uncle as he worked with the nephew about the farm had once or twice surprised the boy into a confession of his regret that the college doors were shut to him, but it was not a subject of discussion between them nor even of casual conversation.

So it came as a genuine surprise to Edward one evening late in August, when the work was all done and the family was seated together in the dining room of the farmhouse, and his uncle suddenly said, just after some remark Freeda had made about her college experience:

"What's the reason, Edward, that you can't enter college this fall?"

"Enter college!" exclaimed Edward, looking up in astonishment from a book.

"Yes; why not? I'm able to manage the farm this winter."

"But Freeda is planning to go back," stammered Edward.

"Not without you," spoke up Freeda, who was on the other side of the table.

Edward Blake looked from his sister to his uncle and then at his mother and aunt and was struck with a conscious look of conspiracy on all four faces.

"You've been working up this idea!" he said suddenly.

"You're right, my boy. That's just what we have been doing. Now, you listen to me as I make the thing clear." And his uncle went on to show how for some time he had been planning to arrange matters so that both Freeda and Edward could begin the year at Hope college together.

The result of that evening's talk was that Edward Blake began his preparations for college again, very much to his own astonishment, but with an unconcealed pleasure that his old ambitions were again to have an opportunity.

"What's the reason, Edward, that you can't enter college this fall?"

ty. When three weeks later he and Freeda went down to the station together and bought their tickets for Raynor, he could hardly realize that he was on his way over the same road to begin a life that a year before had seemed to be made impossible by the tragic event that had greeted him on the college grounds.

They were two days ahead of the date of opening the college, and brother and sister walked up the hill together. When the baggage came up a little later, Edward helped Freeda with hers and then went over to the old dormitory, Rankin hall. He had not been able to make any arrangements for a room, and the college was full to overflowing, so that he expected to have some difficulty in finding a place.

There were a few new students around the building, and Edward as he walked into the hall thought of Willis Preston. He had not heard anything of him except what Freeda had said occasionally, and she did not know whether he was coming back for his junior year. Edward had promptly returned the money Preston had lent him at the time of his father's death. Preston had acknowledged the letter in a brief note, and that was all.

So Edward went on up two flights and knocked at the door of the room which he remembered Preston had said was his at the time.

"Come in!" exclaimed a voice that sounded as if it was muffled.

Edward went in and saw Preston with his head down in the bottom of a trunk.

"I'm trying to get these hammock sticks out," said the muffled voice. "Now that I'm a junior—through a dispensation of Providence that I don't understand, for it's a wonder to me how the professors ever managed to pass me along—I'm going to try to be comfortable a part of the time if I can. I understand from the seniors that every effort will be made by the college this year to make things easy for the juniors, but"—

At this moment the sticks that he was tugging at came loose, and the head came out of the trunk with a bound. He lost his balance and fell over backward, dragging out a part of the hammock, together with a miscellaneous collection of clothing, books, knick-knacks of various sorts, including a tennis racket, some balls and a pair of boxing gloves.

Edward could not help laughing, although it was a rare habit with him. Preston sat on the floor and rubbed his head, which had struck the cover of the trunk. But the minute he recognized Blake he got up on his feet at once and went over and shook hands heartily.

"Well, well! So you've come back?" he asked, with just a touch of seriousness that reminded them both of the events of a year before.

"Yes, and you're the only person I know here, so I just came up to see you."

"Glad to see you. Of course, seeing I'm a junior and you are still a freshman, I suppose we won't quarrel?"

"We didn't quarrel any before," said Edward, with a grave smile. "You were very kind, and I haven't forgotten it."

"Don't mention it," said Willis as he began picking up the things on the floor and throwing them carelessly into the trunk. "It's a habit of mine that I can't help. Anything I can do for you? And if so why not?"

"I don't know," said Edward, hesitating. "I haven't found a room yet. Do you know where I can get one?"

"Rooms are scarce," said Preston, sitting on the edge of his trunk at the imminent risk of falling into it. "There is a great untamed lot of freshmen coming in, and they've—excuse me, I forgot you are one of them. But hold on a minute. What do you say to rooming with me?"

"Rooming with you!" exclaimed Edward in astonishment. He sat staring at the easy going, good natured fellow on the edge of the trunk. He was one of a type of college men as far removed as possible from Edward Blake's idea of what a college man ought to be. He was apparently in easy circumstances financially. He was going through college as if it were more or less of a good joke. He was careless in his habits, and while perhaps not fast in the worst sense of the word he was perhaps far from what he ought to be in many ways that were already to Edward Blake almost established rules of daily life.

"Yes; why not? I need a guardian. You can see that plain enough. Now, you're two years older than I am and"— "I don't think I would undertake the task of being your guardian," interrupted Blake, with a smile that was almost grim.

"Well, it wouldn't be fair to tax your nervous system too severely at the start, I'll allow," replied Preston soberly.

"But honest, now, I'm in earnest about the room. If you want to come in here you're welcome, if you think you can stand it. If you'll make the beds and sweep out and build the fires and bring up the coal and black the shoes and mend broken windows and repair the furniture, I'll do the rest and call it square."

Edward Blake smiled, and Willis Preston grinned good naturedly at him.

Then they sat and talked the matter over soberly, and the result was that Edward finally agreed to come in and room with Willis on conditions to which both agreed in the matter of division of labor, Blake's share of expense for the furnishing, and so forth. There were grave objections still in Edward Blake's mind over the final arrangements which made him a roommate of Preston, but he began his college life with great interest in everything, and not the least interesting of his experiences were those he began to have with his new roommate.

But after a month of the year was gone he was seriously confronted with the financial problem of his school life.

The farm had yielded sufficient to start Freeda and himself fairly well on the term, but the uncle at home did not understand the situation as well as he ought, and Edward, while planning liberally as possible for his sister, silently accepted a smaller sum for his own share of expenses than he really needed. After paying for his part of the furnished room with Preston, settling his matriculation fee, buying a number of expensive books and paying for a month's board at the club he woke up one day to the fact that he was practically at the end of his resources. His uncle had written of certain purchases of stock necessary that had taken all the ready cash at home. Edward had replied that he would look after himself and that the folks at home need not worry about him. But as he wrote the letter he had no plan in view and no work of any definite kind that he was sure would bring in his needful expenses. He had reckoned on about $3 a week as the lowest sum that would carry him through. If he could get that much on some regular job and then add to it by picking up other work in various ways, he thought he could make his way. But how to get any regular work was the question.

He sat in the room one morning when Preston was out seriously considering his prospects and resolved to start out after dinner after anything he could find, when Thad Rankin came in.

Rankin roomed just across the hall, and Edward had not exchanged a dozen words with him since coming back.

He asked Rankin to take a chair and wondered what he had called to see him for.

"Might as well come to business at once, I suppose," said Rankin, who was a rather fine looking fellow, dressed exceedingly well and was the son of one of the college's financial supporters, the man who had put up the dormitory named after him.

Edward nodded and waited curiously for him to go on.

"I've bought a paper route," continued Rankin a little nervously, trying to be indifferent. "You know the fellows carry daily papers here to work their way through?"

"Yes; I know. I wanted to get a route, but couldn't raise the money."

"You're right. They come high. Well, my father wanted me to do something for myself, so he bought a route for me and says I am to manage it for my current expenses. Of course I don't want to carry the papers myself, but I want to find a fellow who will, and I will pay him a good price. I want to rent the route, you understand, and get my share out of it."

"How much of a route is it?" asked Edward. He had heard the boys talk about their routes, but was not very familiar with the matter.

"It's one of the best routes in the city." Rankin went on to give details concerning the location of the route, the number of the subscribers, the time it took to make the delivery and so on.

Edward listened eagerly.

"I'll give $3 a week for carrying if you'll take it," Rankin finally proposed.

"That seems fair," said Edward. The way seemed opening for his expenses, in a way, too, that meant little or no loss of time or strength needed for college work.

"Of course I don't mind telling you," continued Rankin, "that it is a rule at the office that the owner of a route must carry the papers himself. But it's a rule that is disregarded a good deal, and the fellows all understand it."

Edward looked at Rankin quietly and said, "Do you mean that I shall have to pretend that I own the route which I really rent from you?"

"Why, yes, if you want to put it in that way. We can make arrangements about that so that the proprietor of the paper and the other fellows need not know anything about it. It will be your route to all intents and purposes, just the same as if you owned it."

"In other words," said Edward Blake, looking at Rankin again with the same earnest look, "you mean that all I will have to do will be to lie about this transaction a little?"

Rankin turned red and then pale. He was just on the point of replying, when the door opened and Willis came in.

As Willis came into the room he nodded to Rankin and threw a book down on the table. He was going over to his own side of the room, where he was in the habit of swinging Indian clubs, when he seemed to notice something unusual about the looks of his roommate and stopped abruptly and said:

"What's the matter?"

Edward looked at Rankin and was silent. Rankin kept still a moment and then, more quietly than was natural for him, said:

"I'm trying to get Blake to take my paper route. He has scruples about renting it because he thinks he will have to"— "Have to lie about it," added Blake as Rankin stopped.

"Oh, pshaw!" replied Willis as he turned toward the wall and took down his clubs. "Don't be so finicky. It's "In other words," said Edward Blake, "you mean that I will have to lie?" nothing but a technicality anyhow. It's as common as flunking. I owned a route last year and never carried a paper in my life. The fellows all understand it. It's a mean rule anyway, and the paper has no right to make it. If you've got a chance to rent from Rankin, go ahead. It's the best chance you'll have."

CHAPTER II.

It was not until a long time afterward that Edward understood fully just how much interest his roommate had in making this little speech. Preston had a dislike for Rankin that he seldom tried to conceal. And yet he had within the year borrowed several sums of money from him and was indebted to him now in a way that worried him much as one of his nature is ever worried about anything. He wanted to keep Rankin on good terms, if possible, without too much trouble.

Edward for the first time since the proposition of the route was clear to him began to hesitate. He asked one or two questions in a low voice, nervously rolling a lead pencil back and forth over his desk. Willis put in a word here and there as he swung his clubs. Rankin was evidently very desirous of getting Edward to agree to the arrangement. He had seen enough of him even in the month to believe that the route would be safe in his hands and probably result in a working up of the subscriptions in such a way as to make the weekly income from them a more satisfactory figure than it ever had been before.

"I don't just like the idea of deceit in the matter," Edward finally said in a hesitating manner. "I can't get around the fact that I shall have to pretend that I own the route when I don't own it, and Rankin knows I don't own it."

"Oh, well," put in Willis, and Rankin had used the same argument several times, "lots of the fellows do it. It's understood by them. It's been the custom here for years." And before any one sneers at these young men's ideas of what constitutes strict honesty, let us remember that they are, many of them, the sons of reputable business men who for years have lied about their taxes and other details in business life, simply because so many other men do the same thing and the custom is common. Is it strange that their sons grow up with loose definitions of truthfulness and careless habits in the matter of exact honor?

"Of course," said Rankin after a pause, during which Edward kept a troubled look on the table and was evidently having a great struggle to decide the matter, "I can get plenty of fellows to take the route. But I know if you take it, it will be run straight and if you increase the number of subscribers I'm willing to make it more than $3 a week."

Still Edward did not reply. He was making a calculation as to chances for getting something else to do. He had entered college with the determination to get through somehow. He knew that a hard struggle was before him. The farm could not help both Freeda and himself without more privation on the part of the home folks than he was willing to see. How could he earn $3 a week easier? And after all, if it was understood by the fellows, and if the rule was obnoxious, and if—

Rankin rose and walked over to the door.

"Well, what do you say? Will you take the route or not?"

"I'll take it," replied Edward gravely.

Rankin came back and sat down while he went on to arrange the details a little more fully. Finally he went out, and Edward picked up a book and tried to study, but he was uneasy, and Willis noticed it.

"If I had a conscience as delicate as yours, I'd want to trade off for a good time once in awhile," he said as he hung up his clubs, pulled a book out of the shelf and sat down to his table, putting his feet on it and yawning sleepily.

Annual Conference Echoes.

(Rev. J. E. Deshazo.)

SPLENDIDLY ENTERTAINED

That Newport News would be able to entertain an Annual Conference, there was serious doubts. That she would be able to do it with such ease and grace as turned out, was still more surprising. But she did it; and to the usual entertainment were added several unique features. An elegant dining hall, where the most charming hostesses administered the most elegant cuisine, was an especially delightful feature. Such waitresses! What hotel could compare? The great St. Charles in New Orleans couldn't boast such a corps. And the basement post-office, with its beautiful and polite postmistress, in place of the old arrangement! And last, but not least, the telephone! Did ever a Conference enjoy greater facilities for dispatch of business, consisting at the same time with such comfort? To these facilities we are no doubt indebted for the earlier completion of the work than at the last quadrennial election in Danville.

The third term in the chair of Bishop W. W. Duncan was another feature that gave satisfaction, and in the thinking of this writer, puts the question of the Bishop's working by the same rule of appointment as the rest of the preachers entirely at rest. At neither previous presiding did his rulings give greater satisfaction, nor was he so much at home in the chair or so much at his ease. And the appointments were never better made, nor the different questions better managed. Never, too, were the appointments more entirely made by the Bishop. The reasons are, he is learning the men and the places. Were the Bishops more familiar with these, other influences would not be so powerful. Many, no doubt, will be glad to see Bishop Duncan returned to us another year to preside.

Mistakes are inevitable, doubtless, after all the facts are in and all the light poured on from all sources. The Bishop, in his ante-appointment talk, pointed out several sources from which many of these emanate—interference by laymen and preachers in the appointments. One would think that modesty—if not religion—would restrain preachers from such a course as the Bishop seemed to condemn. Wonder such a preacher could ever again contemplate his features with satisfaction in a glass. But times change, and we change with them. As for the interference of the laymen, they are more pardonable, because their view-point is so limited. If they knew some things some of the rask and file know, the sleekness of Dr. Incomparable's hat and tongue would impress them differently. Sometimes they find out their overweening self-confidence before the process of deglutition is complete, and try to repent. Sometimes it is hard to turn a giraffe around in his stall to lead him out, and unbecoming expletives are employed. O, if we might only all be good Methodist preachers and people!

An unusual occurrence was the apparent discourtesy visited upon a connec-tional magnate well known throughout Southern Methodism; a thing deeply revolting to the gentlemanly feeling of Virginia Conference preachers. And yet it is hard to see just how it could have been avoided under the circumstances. No officer of the Church should forget that he was created by the Church, and with St. Paul subscribe himself: "Ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." And this leads us to remark that too long terms in office are not the best in Church or State. After years of continuance in office we easily become spoiled into the feeling that the office belongs to the man, and not the man to the office. When such a man dies, we sometimes are impressed with the fact that he, after all, was the lesser of the two, that the office survives him, and that the world will wag after he's dead.

Another revelation was the election of delegates to the General Conference. No man could have predicted such a revolution in sentiment in the short space of four years. Men high up in the delegation four years ago fell to the foot of it, and others who were not seriously thought of at the last election were placed high on the delegation this time. Moreover, the eldership, which heretofore furnished so much material for General Conference delegates, seemed this time to cut but a small figure. It is easy to see that old Virginia conservatism came in to prevent almost utter revolution. It seems to mean a very determined pull for a limited term in the eldership, and a repudiation of the methods by which the Publishing House claim was collected. Insistent as may be the bidding, this Banquo's ghost will not down. It is disagreeable as seen in the action of the Bishops and of the Book Committee to grapple these matters and settle them right. But, as F. W. Robertson has said, "The best way to meet the inevitable is by submitting to it." No matter will remain settled until it is settled right. The conscience of the Church will never rest easy until that Publishing House matter is settled right, and the sooner the better. Now, for a man to stand up "in the council" and say how! As for the eldership, there may be "uncrowned kings" among our elders, but we will not acknowledge them as kings until they are crowned.

Peace on earth and good will were, nevertheless, apparent, in spite of this revolution, and that seems to forebode good to the Church in its outworking. At least, we will hope so. For does not Dr. Edward Young say: "To hope the best is pious, brave and wise?" A distinct line of change was revealed in the discussions and election. On the minority side were most of the presiding elders—the men of gray hairs; on the other, the younger men, who are pushing to the front. But the temper of all was excellent, and a brotherly spirit seemed to prevail. Although Paul withstood Peter to the face because he saw another side of truth, yet there was no estrangement. So may it be with us.—Danville Methodist.

WASHINGTON RELIGIOUS LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

The last day of the year is a fitting time for a little retrospection. Of our material progress all the world knows, but what of our moral and spiritual progress? There is yet much to be done—work worthy of the greatest talent, in which success earns a more lasting reward than is given to the winners of great battles in time of war—but work has been done and done well during the year 1901. It is evident to even the most casual observer that as a whole the national capital has been growing better every year. Our churches steadily increase in number, and there are few of the old ones that do not increase in both membership and influence. The public standard of morality, although yet far from what it should be, is growing higher all the time, and no man, no matter how high his position, now dares to openly live an immoral or intemperate life. The activity of the Anti-Saloon League and other temperance organizations has put an effective curb upon the growth in the number of saloons in Washington, and sooner or later will abolish the saloon as a government licensed institution. We shall start the New Year with a new divorce law, making violation of the Seventh Commandment the only legal cause for which a divorce can be obtained in the District of Columbia. If Congress will only refuse to listen to the divorce lawyers and let that law alone it will be a powerful factor in bettering the moral atmosphere of Washington, as there is not the slightest doubt that easy divorces tend to loose morals, and that loose morals tend to general demoralization.

It has been said that during times of prosperity religious fervor wanes and the wells of charity dry up, but anyone who had closely observed the religious and charitable side of life in the national capital during the past week would doubt the truth of the assertion or would at least conclude that this year was an exception.

At the National Rifles' Armory on Christmas day there was a scene that could not but have appealed to the veriest skeptic. More than three thousand needy little ones were made happy by the generosity of the Almas Temple, Mystic Shrine. More than eighteen hundred pairs of stockings filled with toys and candy were distributed; these were followed by boxes to the number of fifteen hundred, and then the grown people had their turn. Some fifteen hundred odd baskets, containing the requisites for as many generous Christmas dinners, were distributed, while many a private donation in the way of money was distributed by the Shriners, whose red fezes were to be seen on every side.

The Saint Vincent de Paul Society, an institution which takes as its model the virtues of its patron saint, set a dinner for three hundred needy guests, while the wives of the members waited on table with all the care and attention they would have bestowed on guests in their own homes. At all the orphan asylums especially good dinners were provided by kind friends, and the boys at the reform school were not forgotten, nor the prisoners in the jail.

Members of the Christ Child Society, which was founded by Miss Mary Virginia Merrick, made five hundred visits and distributed gifts at every house where real poverty was found to exist. The principal object of the beautiful society is the preparation and distribution of layettes, and the young ladies who are enrolled as its members devote many hours to this charitable and not unenjoyable work. At Christmas, however, the work of the society is not confined to making garments for the very young, and many older children have these young ladies to thank for a goodly portion of the wardrobe which makes it possible for them to go about properly protected from min-try blasts.

The work of the Young Men's Christian Association is being pushed with creditable vigor, and many of the young men in the capital, who are away from home and friends, have found congenial companions and innocent recreation under its auspices, where otherwise they would have been compelled to spend their holidays in the solitude of a boarding house chamber or amid the great temptations of a large city.

Commander Frederick Booth-Tucker, head of the Salvation Army in America, who was the speaker at this week's Y. M. C. A. mass meeting, was introduced by Hon. H. B. F. Macfarland, president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. After stating that the Salvation Army had begun its work in London less than forty years ago, and ten years later in this country, Mr. Macfarland said: "Notwithstanding this comparatively short time the Salvation Army has become the best known religious organization in the world. This was accomplished by the organizers and directors of the movement realizing in the beginning that to do effective work it is necessary not only to take care of the spiritual side of man, but that an interest is needed in his physical being. The Salvation Army is a happy blending of the two, and the literal carrying out the command of Christ to 'preach the Gospel to all' is supplemented by supplying food and clothes to the needy. We are very fortunate in having with us to-day the commander-in-chief of the forces in the United States, and I am proud to claim him as a personal friend. He needs no introduction to this audience, but I take great pleasure in presenting Commander Frederick Booth-Tucker." The special feature of Commander Booth-Tucker's address was the story of the ten lepers cured by Jesus, only one of whom returned thanks for being cured, told in his inimitable way.

Gen. O. O. Howard has written a long letter to a local paper, giving his reasons for opposing the re-enactment of the Chinese exclusion law. Following is an extract therefrom: "If the Chinese are to be Christianized and civilized there must be some chance for assimilation with our people. The reason up to the present moment for so little assimilation has been the stringency of our laws, which have given him (the Chinaman) no right to enjoy the fruits of his labor, and which have positively denied him in spirit and letter every privilege of citizenship. Some Chinamen that I know became citizens of the United States before the statutory prohibition. They have uniformly behaved well, and shown themselves industrious and worthy citizens. I have yet to see an exception to this rule. I know, furthermore, many families that have grown up in spite of the prohibition of citizenship, and have become thoroughly American, the children attending our schools, and the larger youth graduating from our academies and universities. One Chinaman said to me a few weeks ago in the city of Portland, Ore., that he had been in this country more than twenty years; that he had paid many dollars of taxes into the treasury of the United States, and had done his duty to the full acceptance of his neighbors, and yet he could not be allowed the privileges of citizenship, which have been given to thousands of worthless men of other nations after a short residence in the land.

The Epworth League reports that contributions towards the cost of the beautiful Epworth League College of Literature, which is to be erected in connection with the American University, are coming in rapidly and in gratifying amount. Various and numerous entertainments are being held all over the country for the purpose of raising funds, and the results are proving most satisfactory to those who get them up as well as to those who have the management of the college fund.

A member of the League, who resides in this city, but has recently been in Pittsburg, relates an amusing incident which happened to Bishop Joyce, president of the League, in that city. The Bishop was delivering an eloquent address on the subject of the Chinese missions, and apostrophizing the work of the missionary. He said: "I wish I were a missionary in China to-night." Just then a brother, who had perhaps been taking a wee nap, shouted out "Amen." The Bishop and his audience were greatly amused.

Speaking of the Girls' Friendly Society, in which she is particularly interested, Mrs. Roosevelt said recently: "One of the most practical and beneficial features of the society are the 'vacation houses' which have been established in a number of places under its auspices. These houses provide places where young girls, who are employed during the greater part of the year, can spend their vacation in the country at a minimum expense, and among healthful and refined surroundings. They are a great blessing to many girls of moderate means."

Already there are signs that a vigorous campaign will be made in favor of the army canteen soon after Congress reassembles. Numerous petitions and papers have been filed with the Committee on Military Affairs, asking that the matter be reconsidered. The advocates of the canteen have enlisted the support of the Association of Military Surgeons, and that Association has issued a book by Major Louis Livingston Seaman, in which he claims that he has proof that there has been an increase of intemperance and of court martials since the abolishment of the canteen. Eternal vigilance on the part of temperance workers alone will prevent the re-establishment of the canteen on former lines.

A pretty instance of the fondness of President Roosevelt for young people occurred last Sunday. In the absence of his family the President attended church alone. After the service the congregation followed the usual custom, and remained seated until the President had left the building, all but the young son of Mr. E. J. Milliken, of Jersey City, who was unaware of the prevailing etiquette, and immediately started down the aisle. Just as he met Mr. Roosevelt he discovered his mistake, and was covered with confusion, but the President, perceiving his embarrassment, shook hands with him, and then, putting his arm around the boy's shoulders, the two walked down the aisle together.

THE CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.

By Rev. G. H. Wiley.

[This article first appeared in the Home and School, and has been published in tract form at the request of friends.]

I believe in the "White Ribbon Brigade," "The Sons and Friends of Temperance," "The Good Templars," and any other organization that has shown itself able to stop men from drink, if only for a time.

I am a member of the "Anti-Saloon League" and the Prohibition Party, and pray for the success of every one who tries in these or any other legitimate ways to remove temptation from the drunkard. Yet if I am to speak honestly, I must say that the grace of God, as found in Christ, so far transcends all else in what I have seen and read, in its power to save the drunkard, that really it is no violence to truth to speak of it as the cure.

I am always anxious for the man who stops drink under any other influence than that of grace. I am glad if he should do so, and hope for him with all my heart; but I cannot help having disturbing fears.

If, on the other hand, I am satisfied that he has received Christ, I urge him to use the means of grace; but on my word, Armenian though I am, I am not tantalized with fears, though I well know what may happen.

The change in a man's views, not only about whiskey, but about everything else, is so radical when he has been born of God, that even if he fall again into the mire, he will hardly remain there. Get the drunkard into the Societies if you can; close the bar-rooms within his reach, if possible; but if you want to save him from drunkenness, do not stop until he has received the nature of Christ.

After twenty-five years of observation along this line, the past two having been spent in city mission work, I am prepared to stand by the above statements. Get them to stop if you can by any sort of legitimate means, but the best and by far the surest means is the grace of God.

Let me give you some cases that have occurred in our mission in the past two years, that your faith in this means may be increased.

On a miserably cold and stormy night in the early part of last winter, at an hour of the night when the only cheerful places that could be found in the lower part of Richmond were the many bar-rooms that are thickly scattered over that part of the city, and the large, brightly lighted building known as the Methodist Institute for Christian Work, a place of rescue for the lost and depraved among men, a noble enterprise conducted by the Methodist laymen. As superintendent, I was seated in my office, at my desk, with possibly twenty-five out of the seventy-five visitors that night, yet remaining in the brightly lighted and comfortable room, looking over the papers or playing games.

A party of three men entered; one of them, the youngest, I should now say, about thirty-five years old (then he looked much older) approached me, and, acting as spokesman, asked for a place to sleep. I saw in his case, as I did in the other two, that they bore the marks of hard drink and dissipation—in fact, every evidence of the confirmed tramp might be seen at a glance. Dirty and ragged, from long neglect, bloated, and even then stupefied from cheapest drink, with that boldness which was born of the desperate condition of being penniless in a strange city, at such an hour on such a night, they argued with me, when I told them that every bed was taken, and that I had already agreed to allow half dozen to sleep on the floor, and did not want more, and that there were other places and they must seek them.

The leader pleaded so earnestly and looked so dejected at the thought of going out again in the storm, that I finally consented that they should lie on the floor in the room used as a chapel, where we had held services that night, and where there was an anthracite fire that would keep the room comfortable until morning. Not to go into all the details, at an early service the next forenoon that man, on hearing in simple language of Christ and His power to change his desires and appetite, asked for prayers. Within two days he accepted by faith the Lord Jesus Christ. From that hour to this he has never taken one drink, though for six years before he had been a vagabond; had forsaken wife and children, and was a curse to himself and others. We obtained employment for him at the Locomotive Works and, after a few weeks he connected himself with Broad Street Methodist church.

For months past he has had entire charge of our lunch room, handling all the money and buying all of the supplies. For consistency, for humility, for point and telling effect in his talks to individuals or in our religious meetings, for tact in his difficult position as manager of the lunch room, he is a marvel. He has brought his wife and five children from Philadelphia, and they are living happily in their home near the mission.

Let me give you another striking example of the power of God's grace to save the drunkard. The first of last December, a man knocked at our side door while we were at breakfast and asked for a bite to eat. He was a typical tramp. The extreme sins that are known in the life of the average tramp render him either vicious and brazen, or they will crush and dispirit him. This man was of the latter type. He was evidently ashamed of his condition and appreciative of what was given him; but in every other respect he could hardly have been farther gone from hope; morally and physically, a wreck. He was a bar-room chorister, at the end of his rope. A bar-room chorister is one who in his best days may be found in the bar-rooms of New York and other large cities singing at the busy hours of the evening and receiving money remuneration. He almost invariably has a soft tenor voice, for that is the most popular among the "boys." But he soon reaches his zenith and begins to decline, from too much singing or too much drinking, or from both; and then sings with the understanding that his pay is to consist only of drinks tendered him by the mellow, and at such times, good-natured customers.

Finally, on account of his cracked voice and the pitiful and ridiculous efforts he insists on making to try to sing as in former days (for the uncontrollable appetite for drink has come to him while his voice has gone from him), he is told to move on, that he is no longer wanted there.

Then begins a life of deepest misery, when the only happiness known is in drunken dreams, when he hears the applause that was his in other days, the click of the glasses as they wish him the mocking toast that his voice may never fail. Such a man came to our door, and we took hold of him to secure, if possible, some work that he could in the then enfeebled state of his body and health do. Again I must desist from details, as the length of this article requires me to do, and only say that two weeks afterwards he made a profession of faith in Christ in our mission one night, in the midst of a few earnest souls, who surrounded him while he prayed. For more than eight months he has been our janitor. I am sure that if they were asked, any and all of the thirty Christian workers who regularly visit our mission to engage in its work, will tell you that they thoroughly respect J. McL. as a Christian and a gentleman. My own opinion is that he is a man of steady and deep piety, and finds in it both joy and deliverance from former evil habits. He is a loyal member of the Presbyterian church.

I select another from among many where 't would have been a fatal and eternal mistake to have substituted anything else for the grace of God.

J. H. D. came into the mission first of June, bordering on delirium tremens. In a day or so utter collapse followed, and he was sent to the hospital. Mrs. G., one of our workers, followed him there, and offered Christ as a Saviour from the guilt and power of sin.

He accepted Him, was recovered from his sickness, came from the hospital and engaged with burning zeal in God's work. His face and manner revealed marks of intelligence and culture, and it was soon found that he was in possession of valuable and rare knowledge about the manufacture of glass, and at once several prominent business men of Richmond put thousands of dollars in a stock company, bought a plot of ground, and one month ago began the foundations of a large building in which to conduct a business with this man D., so worthy of confidence, in their estimation, that

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 19, "Intelligent Piety"—Text, Acts xvii, 10, 12.

"They searched the Scriptures daily, therefore many of them believed."

Our Object.—"The object of the League is to promote intelligent and vital piety in the young members and friends of the church and to aid them in the attainment of purity of heart and in constant growth in grace and to train them in works of mercy and help."

Our aim is clear cut. We purpose to be truly Christian. This means growth in all inner graces of the spirit, all outward efficiency in helpfulness to others and fuller understanding of all knowledge that is elevating. The best Christian is many sided. Habits of devotion and benevolence are balanced by practices of reading, study and thinking.

Never before was so much reading matter available as now. Never was the quality so excellent and the nature so varied. The price of the best literature places it within the reach of the poorest of the people. The magazine articles of a single month, if carefully culled, are often of great value. If one has the taste for reading, there is no lack of material of the very best for its satisfaction.

Herein lies a danger. The mass of matter is so great that careful selection is required to get that which is adapted to personal needs. Unless a plan is formed and adhered to there is an inevitable drifting into careless ways. Whatever comes to hand is read indiscriminately. The result is a confused condition of mind where many things are heaped together. Little is properly sorted, less is well understood, and almost nothing is fully mastered. Still worse, the mind has become dissipated and shrinks from solid work, craving mere amusement or distraction of attention from serious work.

Some reading should be always in progress of a solid sort, so that when the leisure quarter hour is found it can be at once taken up where it was left the last time. Some work for information, to increase the knowledge as well as to discipline powers of the mind.

The League reading course has been selected specially for meeting the needs of our average young people. The price of the set is very low, and in no chapter will it be found difficult to get at least a few who will club together for its purchase and then for its study and discussion.

Much of value lies in getting together and discussing the subjects and their special treatment in the books read. Points which are obscure to one person are plain to another, and all minds are stimulated to greater activity by contact with others and comparison of views.

In no particular is this more clear than in the matters of Bible study. Frequent interchange of opinion and united study will make marked improvement in the grasp of Scripture truth and also in relish for it.

Some light reading will be helpful, but too much is harmful. It is a serious mistake to read stories more than anything else. It is not a mark of culture to have read many of the popular novels, but to have read discriminatingly what is worth reading does show a trained mind.

God's Plans.

God has His plans in providence and grace. They do not develop in a day. They ripen by degrees. This does not suit the human mind. Men call for the speedier processes. They become discouraged and doubting at seeming delays or slow movements. But this does not help matters. Our God takes His own time. He makes no mistakes. He will not be forced; neither will He force His creatures. He will not deviate from His ordained operations. He will not shorten the steps between the beginning and the end of His purpose. Every man must live out his appointed life. Between his birth and the grave lies an interval of preparation, discipline and development, and, whether the period be long or short, there is no escaping it. The intervening process is as much decreed as are the beginning and the ending. It stands related to the final outcome. It forms an important part in God's great scheme in regard to time and eternity. At times the experience may be very trying, but the Christian will recognize God's hand in it and abide the issue with patience, resignation and hope, assured that "all things work together for good to them that love God, who are the called according to His purpose."—Presbyterian.

Sorrow.

O Sorrow, thou art only a gateway to joy, only a hand to lead us to light! Thy cups are hard to swallow, yet when bravely lifted and swallowed they bring us deeper and purer joys. Let us never grieve because of sorrow, but let us take it and go straight to God with it and make it turn out to be one of the greatest blessings of our whole lives.—Bible Reader.

The Bright Side.

More than half of the unhappiness in the world comes from a perverse unwillingness to look on the bright side so long as a dark side can be discovered.—United Presbyterian.

The Sunshine of Gladness.

Take thy self denials gayly and cheerfully and let the sunshine of thy gladness fall on dark things and bright alike.—James F. Clarke.

Before We Sleep.

Like unto an infant's restful gaze
Would we, Lord, upraise our eyes in prayer;
Resting then in faith within Thy sight,
Peace will bring us visions clear and fair.

Bless us each, we pray, before we sleep;
Guard us as we linger nigh to death;
Let our heart throbs dedicate to Thee
Higher aims with every indrawn breath.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

We shall not really live until we live again.—Rev. Dr. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Will.

Nothing can take the place of a resolute will.—Rev. Dr. John T. M. Johnston, Baptist, St. Louis.

Evolution.

Life comes out of death; progress comes out of suffering.—Rev. R. F. Coyle, Presbyterian, Denver.

The Noblest Victory.

To be willing to suffer defeat rather than to win unworthy victory is itself the noblest victory.—Rev. Dr. J. L. Jackson, Baptist, Chicago.

Best For This World.

Religion is the best philosophy and the best morals and the best instrument for time merely.—Rev. Dr. J. C. Armstrong, Baptist, St. Louis.

How to Retain Favor.

Nations as well as individuals retain the favor of the skies only as they do the will of the infinite.—Rev. Dr. Polemus H. Swift, Methodist, Chicago.

Do Your Part.

If we make the church of Christ manifestly worth loving, the people will not fail to love her.—Rev. Dr. S. B. Warner, Methodist, St. Louis.

Honor in All Stations.

A bootblack who does his duty is as honorable as the governor of the state and, being honorable, can afford to rejoice.—Rev. J. C. Solomon, Baptist, Atlanta.

The Only Saving Power.

Righteousness is the only thing which can save the nation, the state, the church or the individual from failure.—Professor John W. Wetzel, Congregationalist, Yale University.

Earnest Citizenship.

God give us a citizenship that shall be trumpet tongued for the right until the powers that be are supplanted by the powers that ought to be.—Rev. C. J. Hall, People's Tabernacle, Denver.

Unchangeable Religion.

The thought of no century is final, and each century brings different ideas and interpretations, but religion as an active principle is always the same.—Rev. Charles W. Byrd, Methodist, Atlanta.

The Fountain Head of Wisdom.

Man, with all his learning, has not got beyond the Bible. All our ideas of progress, with all the forward looking spirit of modern Christendom, are due to the Bible.—Rev. H. P. Aston, Baptist, Philadelphia.

Holy Lives.

It may not be ours to utter convincing arguments, but it may be ours to live holy lives. It may not be ours to be subtle and learned and logical, but it may be ours to be noble and sweet and pure.—Dean Farrar, Anglican Church, Canterbury, England.

Difficulties.

Let us all learn to thank God for difficulties. They are a part of our discipline. Canaan lies on the other side of Red seas and the Jordan. We need not cross either of them till we come to them.—Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

Why We Are Here.

You are not put into life for a mission or to do great things. You and I are put into life to be made men and women, to do the things that God puts into our hands to do, be they great or be they little.—Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

The Only Reality.

We argue and dispute about the gospel, but it remains airy and unreal until we come face to face with genuine Christian love in action, bearing and hoping and enduring all things.—Rev. Thomas H. Darlow, Literary Superintendent Baptist and Foreign Bible Society.

Our Noblest Treasure.

Man lives not by bread alone, but by love and hope and faith, and because the so called "sacred Scriptures" of the world more or less perfectly voice these higher aspects of human nature, they constitute our noblest treasure.—Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, Before the Chicago Liberal Society.

Forget Sin.

Forget your own sins. Forget the sins of your neighbors. Our memory of them is sometimes more vivid than the memory of our own. Do not allow such remembered transgressions to spoil the peace and purity of your soul.—Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, Presbyterian, President Princeton University.

Successful, but Had Groveled.

A few years ago a man of many millions called me to his bedside when he was dying. In his last hours he spoke out frankly. "Doctor," he said, "I've failed, for I've groveled." Yet the world called him successful. His phrase, "I've groveled," has stuck to me as expressing much.—Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York,

Feed Your Children's Souls.

In so called Christian homes children are neglected as to their spiritual natures. As little animals they are well cared for, but that is all. Parents think they must clothe and feed them and decide questions of amusement and companions and politics, but the subject of religion, the most important of all, they must decide for themselves.—Bishop James M. Thoburn, Methodist.

How to Find True Happiness.

Man possesses fame, but this does not satisfy the cravings of his soul; he seeks sensual pleasure, but with this come repulsion and a reaction, and then, still desiring, he accumulates money, but none of these brings true happiness, for all of them are only of the external of man and not of man himself. It is only by a constant seeking for something noble and better than we can ever possess in this life, by ever seeking a fuller, truer and wider life, that we can expect to become men.—Rev. Nathaniel Mooney, Catholic, Chicago.

LIQUOR TRADE STATISTICS.

An Array of Figures That Should Prove Productive of Thought.

Analyzing data relating to the liquor business, The Corn Belt says:

"There are 199,729 persons holding licenses granted by the states of the United States to sell spirituous liquors, an increase from 195,964 on Jan. 1, 1899. In addition to these there are 12,327 persons licensed to sell malt liquors only, an increase of 244 from the previous year, making a total of 12,156 retail liquor dealers in the United States, 4,121 more than in 1898. There are 4,496 persons licensed as wholesale dealers, 1,959 brewers and 1,907 rectifiers, making a total of 220,518 licenses granted for the manufacture and sale of liquor.

"It is fair to estimate that at least three persons are employed under every license. This is undoubtedly a small average, because some of the brewers and distillers employ several thousand men, but even at that rate there are less than 661,554 persons engaged in the manufacture and sale of liquor in the United States. Estimating the population of the country at 75,000,000, this would make an average of one liquor seller to every 114 of the population.

"During the last year 25,202,901 bushels of grain and 2,198,513 gallons of molasses were used for the manufacture of liquor in this country, which produced 107,618,120 gallons of spirits and 1,657,808 gallons of rum, making a total of 109,275,928 gallons."

"THE BASEST OUTLAW."

Some Strong Words From Michigan Concerning the Saloon.

The Michigan Christian Advocate, under the title, "A Protected Fiend," comments upon the eternal and inevitable lawlessness of the saloon and points to the outbreak at Owosso recently as illustrating its assertions. It says:

The liquor traffic is the basest outlaw ever tolerated in a civilized country. It raises up a class of men who consider themselves amenable to no authority and justified in resisting even by violent methods all attempts to restrain them in their unlawful operations. Murder, assault, dynamite outrages, bullying, bluff, mobs and other criminal practices are resorted to whenever attempts are made to eradicate the saloon or even to confine its detestable work to the limits of the law.

Any community can have a mob on its hands by undertaking to enforce the prohibitory features of the liquor law.

No community will venture to cope with the monster unless strong and fearless citizens who count not their lives and property dear unto themselves stand ready to lead the van. As a rule influential men in every community prefer social quiet to tumult and would rather let the saloon, like a mad wolf, go free than to undertake to corral it or destroy it.

Whisky Does Not Kill Bacteria.

A particular fallacy is that cherished by many as to the efficacy of whisky or brandy as a germ killer when added to water supposed to be infected. The whisky is assumed to sterilize the water and make it germ free. This, it is declared, is absolutely untrue. Whisky will do nothing of the kind. It is quite certain that microbes can live and thrive in the ordinary mixed drink of whisky and water, the average amount of alcohol in a tumblerful of whisky and water, in the proportion usually adopted, being not more than 10 or 11 per cent. Bacteriological investigations have shown that most germs are not affected by a liquid containing 22 per cent of alcohol, while their corresponding spores are unharmed in 83 per cent alcohol. Alcoholic drinks, therefore, cannot be regarded as effectual destroyers of microbe life.—Leslie's Weekly.

A Plea For Enthusiasm.

Never in the world's history has the subject of temperance received so much attention as at the present, says Christian Work. New methods are being employed, and greater victories are being achieved. Public sentiment is rising like a mighty tidal wave that threatens to sweep the traffic out of existence. Let us rally with new courage, fresh strength and abounding enthusiasm and send the cause forward with a shout, spread our literature, plan new meetings, follow up every point of vantage, be sweet spirited, insistent, practical, believing. This is God's work, and it shall triumph gloriously. Be not slow nor faithless nor fearful nor asleep. Let not the enemy take you unaware. Keep him on the defensive. Let your actions outrun your words.

Milwaukee Private Barrooms.

The Milwaukee Sentinel is authority for the statement that the latest innovation in that city is the "private residence barroom." All the attractive furnishings of the best fitted up saloons are adapted for this purpose, and the only noticeable difference between the "home" barroom and the ordinary one is that there is no license on the wall of the former. Photographs of this latest creation for the worship of Gambrinus are published.

Those who know not God are slain by sorrow, but those who do know Him are brought into a closer walk with Him in the fellowship of suffering.

NOTEWORTHY ANSWERS.

centration." The waste of thousands of lives is due to a scattering of forces upon trifles. The greatest generals the world has ever known have been those who have known how to concentrate all their forces upon one point, and having carried that, to repeat the operation till every point had been won. The old proverb, "Jack of all trades and good at none," has sound philosophy underlying it. Few men are so versatile as to be able to scatter forces successfully. "Too many irons in the fire" results in the overheating of some of them. There are sometimes apparent exceptions to the rule. The prime object of the cotton planter is to raise cotton, from which to make what are known as cotton goods. But there are certain "by-products," as they are called, such as cotton-seed meal and oil, and cotton-pod forage, etc. All these the planter must save, if he is going to make a success of his plantation. And so in every calling or trade, there are certain incidental products or side-lines, which, with care, can be made a help to the main work of the life. But these side-lines must never be allowed to assume an equal place with the great work of life. Many illustrations might be given did space permit, but I must condense, or I will lose my readers. I should say that "concentration" is the bringing together of all one's powers for the accomplishment of a definite aim. And hence we come naturally to the third word, "Adaptation." If we accomplish our aim, the aim must be one to which our abilities are adapted. Many lives are wasted because the powers are set to work upon things which should be left to other men. To discover and to clearly appreciate one's own limitations is a great and inestimable achievement. I say achievement, because it is usually costly and painful. Happy the man who has learned to be quiet and stand aside when matters are at the front for which he has no fitness or training. "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread" is too true of many men. The "burnt" child dreads the fire, but it is too sadly true that it is only after it is "burnt." Advice, persuasion, warning, all are often wasted, except that after the child is burnt it has more respect for the views of the adviser.

Some men say that they are not adapted to any calling; if so, they have never found out what it is. Usually the trouble is that such persons "despise the day of small things," and because they cannot at once do large things, are unwilling to do anything. They confound greatness with largeness. The huge fly-wheel of the engine went whirling round on the axis and the machinery in the room went singing on its work. The pump sent water to the tank, the fan drove heat through the house, the dynamo gave light to the students. But suddenly the engineer heard a slight clink on the floor, and saw the great wheel slipping sideways on the crank shaft. He cut off the current. The wheel slowed down; the pump, fan, dynamo, all stopped, and the water and heat and light ceased flowing. He went to the wheel, examined it, and then looked on the floor and picked up a piece of iron an inch in diameter and six inches long. It was a wedge. How little and insignificant beside the huge wheel. It was nothing but a little piece of iron! Yes, but it was just as great in its place as the fly-wheel, the pump, the fan, or the dynamo. The engineer took it up and drove it back into its place, took a punch and hammer, and made a little countersink in the iron on the side of the groove, so that it could not slip out again, turned on the current, started the engine, and the water, heat and light again flowed in their regular channels. When shall we learn the lesson that greatness consists in always doing those things to which we are adapted, and whether they be little or large they may be equally great? "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much."

The readers will please excuse the editor. He has preached a sermon on Dr. Holmes' definition as a text, without intending to do so. But the hour for the pressman approaches, and it must go, even if it is not "adapted" to the modern newspaper, or to the patience of the reader.

THE METHODIST INSTITUTE FOR CHRISTIAN WORK.

The editor dropped in upon the Richmond Preachers' meeting on Monday, and found a full attendance. The subject under discussion was the support of the city mission work. The report of the committee asked for $1,250 from the various churches for the coming year, and the amount was cheerfully accepted and divided out among the churches. As many of our people are not fully acquainted with the character of this work, and as it is directly under the care of our Methodist churches, and as Bro. George H. Wiley, the superintendent, is a member of our Conference, and appointed directly to this work, and furthermore, because it is interesting reading, the report of the committee is given below in full. There is a value in this work above the actual good done to needy men. It is an evidence to the world that there are men and women in the Church of Christ who are thinking of the poor, the degraded, the sinful, the lost, and anxious to help them to come up out of the "slough of despond" to the fullness and blessedness of the Christian life. The report follows:

In presenting his second annual report of the Methodist Institution for Christian Work, we call attention to this statement made in our former report, "that we hoped to enlarge the scope of the work and thereby more fully realize our desire to make it the most practical Christian work engaged in in this city," we have not done all that we hoped to do; yet, under the blessing of God, we have done much; and that you may get a fair idea of what we have done and are doing, it seems well to me to divide this report under three heads:

We will notice, first, what has been done for the bodies; second, for the minds; and third, for the souls of those with whom we labor.

1ST.—FOR THE BODY OF MAN.

For nine months every Sunday morning, an average of 35 men have sat down to a breakfast of bread and butter, with coffee, and, often, this attractive meal to the characters who visit us has in addition a plate of beans or a bowl of soup. The W. C. T. U. and the Y. W. C. T. U., with some zealous Epworth League members, have supplied the table at an average of $2 per Sunday for the 40 Sundays. Last Christmas 200 persons were fed abundantly, and a score of families had baskets of food sent them. It is difficult to make or give a correct estimate in dollars of the charities dispensed by the mission, but it is within bounds to say that monetary value of fuel, food, clothing and medicines given out the past year reaches several hundred dollars, and not $30 of this was allowed by the committee from the fund raised in the churches for the support of the work.

The next thing under this head to which we call your attention is the sewing school, where the children are being taught the needful art of sewing. The president of this school reported an average of 25 in the weekly gatherings throughout last winter and spring.

The boys' military company has proven a source of delight to its members. Each has a real gun, and within a few days a neat uniform will be received from New York. When thus equipped, and marching to the music of drum and fife, we can hardly imagine boys happier than will be these lads. This equipment has not cost the treasury one penny.

We have sheltered and lodged 600 men in the past twelve months. We have received pay for beds in 300 cases, and, with the $30 thus secured, have kept the beds and rooms clean. Many of the 600 slept on benches, for which we made no charge. We received over the lunch counter about $225 in the five months it was running, which means 4,500 lunches of coffee and sandwiches. It is proper to say that this feature of our work is in the hands of certain ladies, and that receipts from it are turned over to them, and consequently it is not a source of profit or loss to the institution. We do not wish it understood that the ladies are engaged in this work for a profit, far from it, for it is purely their love for the Master which prompted them to assume all the expense and bear whatever loss might result from this branch of the mission work.

2D.—FOR THE MIND.

We have a library and more than 200 volumes; a reading room, in which is found daily papers, magazines, and popular games for men. We also have similar entertainment for boys under 17 years of age.

Throughout last winter and until late spring a corps of teachers, with a superintendent, taught a night school two nights in each week, with an average attendance of about 40 scholars. A musical club was comfortably arranged for by a young man, who furnished one of the rooms in the building for their meetings at a cost of $40. This club was sustained throughout the winter with weekly gatherings. A dozen times last winter we offered a free entertainment to those in the community, and in every case the superintendent (Bro. Wiley) congratulated himself as he saw the room packed with people, and knew that the pleasure derived was from innocent and oftentimes helpful exercises.

3D.—FOR THE SOULS OF THOSE WITH WHOM WE LABOR.

Our religious work is of course the most important, and is what all else is expected to lead to. We have five strictly religious services. One following the Sunday morning breakfast, the Sunday school, preaching Sunday and Tuesday nights, with service on Thursday night led by a layman. The service at the breakfast is a most enjoyable one, and not a few have given the best reason to suppose that they have been truly converted during this service. The Sunday school runs from 75 in the summer to 125 about Christmas times. The Sunday night services are well attended, though during the week not so largely so. At least 87 have joined some Protestant church through the work of the mission in the building and tent. This is not simply an estimate, but a fact established by careful inquiry of the pastors in the city. About 30 of our ladies have formed a board, with Mrs. Michaels, of Park Place, president; Mrs. Maybee, of Centenary, vice-president, for the purpose of co-operating with Bro. Wiley in this work, along such lines as in their judgment may be productive of most good. All honor to them. We welcome them as co-workers, and trust that others may add themselves to this branch of the work.

Your committee feels that the work thus outlined is accomplishing in that quarter of the city more than could be done by any other than a similar agency, and, under the continued blessing of God, is destined to do more in the year to follow.

It would not be just to close this report without alluding to the earnest, faithful efforts of Bro. Wiley, who planned and executed the major part of what has been herein alluded to, for the committee felt that in all matters pertaining to the conduct of the institutional work he should be given a free hand, subject, of course, to the approval of the committee when an expenditure of money was involved. We believe Bro. Wiley has demonstrated his adaptability to this work, and that it would be a misfortune should he not be returned to it. Love for the work, energy far beyond his strength, and at all times a cheerful acquiescence in the plans and views of the committee when not in accord with his own, makes him pre-eminently the right man to be in charge of it another year.

In conclusion, you responded nobly to the call made for funds, thereby evincing interest of a positive and substantial character, and we feel that you will not let this God-given opportunity to obey the command of our Saviour, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," escape you in the years to come. May His blessing, the consciousness of duty well done, be your portion for thus "seeking to save."

Religious News.

Dr. S. S. Lambeth, D. D., pastor of Liberty Street M. E. church, at the morning service Sunday preached a new year sermon. Subject, "Proper Views of Life." In the evening his subject was, "The Power of a Guilty Conscience to Torment Its Possessor." Under the management of the new superintendent, Mr. W. J. Miller, elected about a month ago, the Sunday school is on a boom, and the interest is increasing with the membership. The school has determined to give a gold medal to the teacher bringing in the greatest number of new scholars, and a similar medal to the scholar doing likewise. Another medal will be given the teacher making the best record for punctuality and efficiency, and likewise a similar medal to the scholar making the best record in this respect during the present year.

The pastor of Memorial M. E. church, Rev. W. Asbury Christian, at the morning service preached on the new Christ. Text, "I count all but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." At night the third of the series on popular sayings, "Perseverance Conquers All Things," was handled with marked ability and was of no little interest to his hearers. Quite a large congregation was on hand at both the morning and evening services. In the Sunday school a vote of thanks was extended the committee that prepared the Christmas entertainment. The subject for next Sunday, the fourth of the series, is "Sowing Wild Oats."—Virginian-Pilot.

METHODIST MINISTERS' MEETING.

The Methodist preachers held their regular weekly meeting at Epworth church at 10:45 o'clock yesterday morning, with the president, the Rev. W. R. Proctor, in the chair.

The devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. W. P. Jordan, a superannuated member of the Virginia Conference. He read as the Scriptural lesson the fifteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. John.

The Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins, presiding elder of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore District, being present, was granted the privileges of the floor. He spoke specially on the work of a general source of religion in all the churches, referring to the fact that last year was a most successful one, there being over eleven hundred conversions in the district, and almost as many accessions. He desired the present year should be one of general revival, and that a great harvest of saved souls should be gathered into the Church, and he earnestly desired that the preachers in the cities would make this a special feature of their work.

The Rev. A. Coke Smith spoke earnestly on the importance of a forward movement in the Church for a more general revival of God's Holy Spirit and grace among the people, and a general awakening of sinners to the calls of the Gospel. He desired to see the power of the Holy Spirit visibly manifested in every church, and a union of feeling and Christian fellowship between all the churches. He said that he was at the disposal of his brethren to work earnestly at any and all times for a pentecostal time in the salvation of the unconverted.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun referred to a meeting held in Pittsburg while he was pastor there, in which all the Methodist preachers united. Meetings were held in all the churches at stated times, which resulted in a spiritual uplifting of the members and the salvation of souls.

The Rev. W. Asbury Christian strongly favored a similar meeting being held in Norfolk, Portsmouth and Berkley. He thought that all of the meetings could be held at the same time, and that the preachers could be divided up, five going to each church and conducting the exercises. On his motion, the president appointed a committee of five, consisting of the Revs. W. Asbury Christian, E. T. Dadmun, R. H. Bennett, C. L. Bane, and E. H. Rawlings, to meet and discuss the feasibility of holding such meetings and formulate a plan for conducting them and to bring in their report at the meeting next Monday. After the appointment of this committee by the president, Rev. H. C. Cheatham, offered a powerful prayer for the committee to be guided by God's Holy Spirit in planning the programme for these meetings.

REPORTS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The following reports were received from the churches:

Wright Memorial, Portsmouth—The Rev. W. C. Vaden preached at 11 A. M. The pastor, Rev. George M. McFaden, preached at night and made an address in the afternoon before the Missionary Society of the Court Street Baptist Sunday school.

Epworth—Dr. Smith reported a good day and large congregations. Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at the 11 o'clock service; subject, "A New Year's Message." At night Dr. Smith preached. He received eleven new members by certificate.

Huntersville—Rev. H. C. Cheatham preached at 11 A. M., and 7:30 P. M. Sunday. There was a good Epworth League meeting in the afternoon and a fairly good Sunday school in the morning.

Owens Memorial—The pastor, Rev. Ernest Stevens, preached Sunday morning, and the Rev. W. C. Vaden at night. A very interesting watch-night was held Tuesday night.

Cumberland Street—Rev. C. L. Bane attended the Sunday school in the morning, preached at 11 A. M., conducted the Epworth League in the afternoon, and preached again at night to a large congregation. He received two new members by certificate.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt reported a large increase in the attendance on the Sunday school at Port Norfolk and large congregations at the regular services, and a fine Epworth League meeting in the afternoon.

Central—Rev. W. T. Green reported that, without any special effort, $210 was raised in the Sunday school towards completing the new Sunday school and lecture-room of the new church now in course of erection. He preached to large congregations morning

WASHINGTON. —Most encouraging to all Christian workers is this discourse of Dr. Talmage while denying the accuracy of statistics which represent Sunday audiences as diminishing; text, Hebrews x, 25, "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together."

Startling statements have been made in many of the pulpits and in some religious newspapers. It is heard over and over again that church attendance in America is in decadence. I deny the statement by presenting some hard facts. No one will dispute the fact that there are more churches in America than ever before, one denomination averaging two new churches every day of the year. The law of demand and supply is as inexorable in the kingdom of God as it is in the world. More churches supplied argues more church privileges demanded. More banks, more bankers. More factories, more manufacturers. More ships, more importers. More churches, more attendants.

In all our cities within a few years churches have been built large enough to swallow up two or three of the old time churches. I cannot understand with what kind of arithmetic and slate pencil a man calculates when he comes to the conclusion that church attendance in America is in decadence. Take the aggregate of the number of people who enter the house of God now and compare it with the aggregate of the people who entered the house of God twenty-five years ago, and the present attendance is four to one. The facts are most exhilarating instead of being depressing. That man who presents the opposite statistics must have been most unfortunate in his church acquaintance.

You are not to argue adversely because here and there a church is depleted. Churches have their day. Sometimes merchandise will entirely occupy a neighborhood and crowd out the churches and families ordinarily attendant upon them; sometimes a church perishes through internecine strife. But there are no facts to overthrow the statement that I have made in regard to the increasing attendance upon the house of God. Now, I am ready to admit, as every intelligent man will admit, that there are churches which have been depleted, and it is high time that a sermon be preached for the benefit of young men who are just entering the gospel ministry and for the warning of prosperous churches as to what are the causes of decline in any case. If merchandise crowd out a church, that cannot be helped, but under all other circumstances decadence in church attendance is the fault either of the church or of the pastor.

Modern Church Methods Needed.

Churches are often cleared of their audiences by the attempt to transplant the modes of the past into the present. The modes and methods of fifty years ago are no more appropriate for today than the modes and methods of today will be appropriate for fifty years hence. Dr. Kirk, Dr. McElroy, Dr. Mason, Dr. De Witt, Dr. Vermilyea and hundreds of other men just as good as they were never lacked audiences, because they were abreast of the time in which they lived. People will not be interested in what we say unless we understand the spirit of the day in which we live. All the weebegonish statistics are given by those who are trying in our time to work with the wornout machinery of the past times. Such men might just as well throw the furnaces out of our church basements and substitute the foot stoves which our grandmothers used to carry with them to meeting, and throw out our organs and our cornets and take the old fashioned tuning fork, striking it on the knee and then lifting it to the ear to catch the pitch of the hymn, and might as well throw out our modern platforms and modern pulpits and substitute the wineglass pulpit up which the minister used to climb to the dizzy height of Mont Blanc solitariness and then go in out of sight and shut the door after him.

The trouble begins away back in the theological seminaries. It is a shame that larger provision is not made for ministers of religion, for the sick and the aged and the infirm who have worn themselves out in the service of God. We have naval asylums and soldiers' asylums for men who fought on land and sea for our country when these men have become aged or crippled, and it is a shame that larger provision is not made for the good soldiers of Jesus Christ who have worn themselves out in battling for the Lord. But lack of provision in that respect makes a tendency to turn our theological seminaries into hospitals for sick and aged and infirm ministers. When a man begins to go down, they give him the title of D. D. by way of resuscitation. If that fails, then the tendency is to elect him to a professorate in some theological seminary. There are grand exceptions to the rule, but it is often the case that the professorate in a theological seminary is occupied by some minister of the gospel who, not being able to preach himself, is set to teach others how to preach. In more cases than one the poorest speaker in the faculty is the professor of elocution. We want more wide awake, more able-bodied ableminded men, more enthusiastic men, in our theological seminaries and in the professorates—men like Addison Alexander, who could during the week teach young men the theory of preaching and then on Sunday go into the pulpit and with the thunder and lightning of Christian eloquence show them how. What would you think of a faculty of unsuccessful merchants to train young merchants or a faculty of unsuccessful lawyers to train young lawyers? It is often the case that theological seminaries cut a man and clip him and square him and mold him and bore him and twist him until all the individual is gone out of him and he is only a poor copy of a man who was elected to a professorate because he could not preach. We want less deadwood in the theological seminaries and more flaming evangelists. I declare that a man who cannot preach himself cannot teach others how to preach.

Practical Gospel.

At a meeting of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States a clergyman accustomed on the Sabbath to preach to an audience of two or three hundred people in an audience room that could hold 1,500 was appointed to preach a sermon on how to reach the masses! I am told the incongruity was too much for the risibilities of many of the clergy in the audience. Now, a young man coming out from such bedwarding influences, how can he enter into the wants and the woes and the sympathies of people who want on the Lord's day a practical gospel that will help them all the week and help them forever?

Young ministers are told they must preach Christ and him crucified. Yes, but not as an abstraction. Many a minister has preached Christ and him crucified in such a way that he preached an audience of 500 down to 200 and from 200 to 100 and from 100 to 50 and from 50 to 20 and on down until there was but little left save the sexton, who was paid to stay until the service was over and lock up! There is a great deal of cant about Christ and him crucified. It is not Christ and him crucified as an abstraction, but as an omnipotent sympathy applied to all the wants and woes of our immortal nature, a Christ who will help us in every domestic, social, financial, political, national struggle, a Christ for the parlor, a Christ for the nursery, a Christ for the kitchen, a Christ for the barn, a Christ for the street, a Christ for the store, a Christ for the banking house, a Christ for the factory, a Christ for the congressional assembly, a Christ for the courtroom, a Christ for every trial and every emergency and every perturbation.

It is often the case that the difficulty begins clear back in the home circle, with misapprehension as to which child ought to be consecrated to the ministry. John is a keen, bright boy. He is good at a bargain. When he trades at school, he always gets the best of it. Make him a merchant. He will soon gather a fortune and go right up to take his place among the commercial princes. George has great cerebral development. Phrenologically, language is large. Make him a lawyer. He will argue his way to the front, and he will take his place among the Mansfields and the Storys. Henry has large girth at the chest and is military in his step and bearing. Send him to West Point. We shall see him yet a brigadier general. William is fond of sketching, especially of sketching ships, and he knows as much about a vessel as an old sailor. Make him a shipbuilder. The vessel that he builds will successfully wrestle with the Caribbean whirlwind. Aleck is not very well. He has never had very good digestion. Since that last malarial attack his spleen is enlarged. He has a morbid way of looking at things. He will sit for hours looking at one figure in the carpet. His manners are so mild, so soft, so gentle, so affectionate, so heavenly, and he cries easily. Make him a minister. Now, my friends, that is a great mistake. If you want to consecrate one of your sons to the gospel ministry, take the one widest awake, the brawnfiest, the most brilliant, the most irresistible, the most potent. A tremendous work opens before a profession whose one object is to lift the nations toward God and prepare them for heaven.

Ministerial Laziness Denounced.

Ah, my friends, churches will be largely attended just in proportion as we ministers can meet their wants, meet their sufferings, meet their bereavements and meet their sympathies. If there be a church with small help, small audience; medium help, medium audience; large help, large audience. If there be a famine in a city and three depots of bread and one depot have a hundred loaves and another depot five hundred loaves and another depot ten thousand loaves, the depot that has a hundred loaves will have applicants, the depot that has five hundred loaves will have far more applicants, the depot that has ten thousand loaves will have throngs, throngs, throngs.

Oh, my brethren in the Christian ministry, we must somehow get our shoulder under the burden of the people on the Lord's day and give them a good stout lift, and we can do it. We have it all our own way. It is a great pity if, with the floor clear and no interruption, we cannot during the course of an hour get our hymn or our prayer or our sermon under such momentum we can, by the help of God, lift the people, body, mind and soul, clear out of their sins, temptations and troubles.

I think that ministerial laziness often empties the church of auditors. Hearers who are intelligent through reading newspapers and by active association in business circles will not on the Sabbath sit and listen to platitudes. Hearers will not come to sermons which have in them no important facts, no information, no stirring power, no adaptation, no fire. The pew will not listen to the pulpit unless at least on the subject that day under discussion, the pulpit knows more than the pew. Ministerial laziness has cleared out many churches. Such ministers saunter around from parlor to parlor under the name of pastoral visitation and go gadding about through the village or the city on errands of complete nothingness and wrap their brains around a cigar and smoke them up and then on Saturday afternoon put a few crude thoughts together and on Sunday morning wonder that the theme of Christ and him crucified does not bring a large audience and on Monday sit down and write jeremiads for the religious newspapers about the decadence of church attendance.

Advice to Young Preachers.

People will not go to church merely as a matter of duty. There will not next Sabbath be a thousand people in any city who will get up in the morning and say: "The Bible says I must go to church. It is my duty to go to church; therefore I will go to church." The vast multitude of people who go to church go to church because they like it, and the multitude of people who stay away from church stay away because they do not like it. I am not speaking about the way the world ought to be; I am speaking about the way the world is. Taking things as they are, we must make the centripetal force of the church mightier than the centrifugal. We must make our churches magnets to draw the people thereunto, so that a man will feel uneasy if he does not go to church, saying: "I wish I had gone this morning. I wonder if I can't dress yet and get there in time. It is 11 o'clock; now they are singing. It is half past 11; now they are preaching. I wonder when the folks will be home to tell us what was said, what has been going on." When the impression is confirmed that our churches, by architecture, by music, by sociality and by sermon, shall be made the most attractive places on earth, then we will want twice as many churches as we have now, twice as large, and then they will not half accommodate the people.

I say to the young men who are entering the ministry, we must put on more force, more energy, and into our religious services more vivacity if we want the people to come. You look into a church court of any denomination of Christians. First you will find the men of large common sense and earnest look. The education of their minds, the piety of their hearts, the holiness of their lives qualify them for their work. Then you will find in every church court of every denomination a group of men who utterly amaze you with the fact that such semi-imbecility can get any pulpits to preach in! Those are the men who give forlorn statistics about church decadence

The Home Circle.

THE GROCER'S TEST.

By Agnes E. Wilson.

"What I want," said Mr. Philpotts, leaning over the counter of his own grocery in a confidential sort of way, "is a good, thoroughly dependable sort of a boy. He must be careful and obliging, accurate and quick at figures. Got any boys like that?"

It was the village schoolmaster to whom the grocer was talking.

"Two of them," came the reply. "There they go now," and he looked across to the other side of the street, where Jack Willis and Charlie Crawford were sauntering along together.

"I don't need two," said Mr. Philpotts. "D'ye reckon I could get one of these fellows without the other?"

"They aren't quite so inseparable as that," the schoolmaster said, laughing. "Either of them will suit you. Jack is the quickest at figures, but— You'll be safe in choosing either," he added, turning to go.

Mr. Philpotts scratched his head. "Now, how am I to know which one I want?" he said in perplexity. "If he'd just recommended one of them, there wouldn't been any trouble. So Jack's the quickest at figures? That is one thing in favor of Jack; but let me see."

Mr. Philpotts must have been in a brown study for as much as a minute. Then he went and weighed out fifty pounds of granulated sugar and twenty pounds of bacon for an out-of-town customer. He chuckled while he was doing it, and it was evident that he had hit upon a plan.

"And as sure as you live, sir," he said to himself, rubbing his hands together, "if I find they both do, I'll hire 'em both, sir; I'll hire them both."

Mr. Philpotts did not trouble himself about the possibility of not being able to get either boy. The privilege of clerking for Mr. Philpotts during the vacation was too eagerly coveted by the schoolboys to render it likely that he could fail to secure the lad he chose.

As it happened, both Jack Willis and Charlie Crawford had been longing for the place. It was well known, however, that Mr. Philpotts usually made his own choice, and that there was little advantage in making application for the place.

But it was with a little thrill of excitement that Charlie replied to Mr. Philpotts' query that evening, as he went into the store on an errand for his mother.

"Are you in a hurry, Charlie?" the grocer had asked.

How Charlie wished that he were not!

"Mother needs these things for supper," he replied, "and I promised to hurry back. Was there something you wanted of me, Mr. Philpotts?"

He could not keep the eagerness out of his voice, and Mr. Philpotts understood.

"Only to ask you about something," he answered, indifferently. "Drop in some time when you are passing, if it isn't too much trouble, Charlie."

"I'll come in this evening," Charlie promised, and was off like a flash.

"He wanted to stay," Mr. Philpotts mused. "But he was faithful to his mother's errand. That's one for Charlie. But Jack's quicker at figures, and that's one for Jack. Well, we'll see, we'll see." And Mr. Philpotts rubbed his hands and waited for Jack.

As luck would have it, it was not many minutes before Jack entered, also on an errand for his mother.

"Are you in a hurry, Jack?" asked the grocer, weighing out the pound of tea which Jack had asked for.

"Not particularly," Jack answered. "Doesn't your mother want this tea right away?" queried Mr. Philpotts, sharply.

"Oh, I guess not, not for a little while, anyway. Did you want something, Mr. Philpotts?"

"I wanted a little talk with you," the grocer began. Jack's eyes sparkled. "To tell you the truth," Mr. Philpotts went on, "I wanted to ask you about Charlie Crawford."

"I notice that you and he are pretty thick," the grocer continued, "and I have a notion that nobody knows so much about a boy as his boy friends. Now, I've been thinking about having him in the store with me this summer, and I thought I'd ask you if you could recommend him. I know I'm a queer old duffer, but I'd rather have your opinion than the schoolmaster's. You know Charlie better. Now, what can you say for our friend?"

It looked very much as if Jack could not say anything. How was he to know that Mr. Philpotts was saying over to himself: "Faithful to his promise, and that's one for Charlie. But Jack's quicker at figures and that's one for Jack. Maybe Jack's mother didn't tell him to hurry, so I won't call this delay one against Jack."

Jack was silent so long that the grocer resumed his questioning.

"Is Charlie neat and careful and courteous and trustworthy?" asked he.

"Oh, yes!" Jack at last found his voice. "He's all that." Someway his words didn't sound one bit enthusiastic. He wanted that place so much for himself.

"And quick at figures?" the grocer pursued. "I'm very particular about that."

"He's fair," admitted Jack. "He isn't the best in the class."

"Never knew him to cheat in games, or do any mean little thing like that, did you?"

"No," Jack replied. You would have thought he spoke reluctantly.

"Anything else you think I ought to know?" queried the grocer.

"N—no," stammered Jack. "Charlie's a good fellow, but—"

"But I see you don't want to tell me," Mr. Philpotts said suddenly. "You are too loyal to your friend to finish that 'but.' I'm obliged to you, Jack. I'll make further inquiries."

Now, Mr. Philpotts had not put the faintest trace of sarcasm into his sentence regarding Jack's loyalty, but some way Jack did not feel very happy, although he hoped that the "further inquiries" would turn Mr. Philpotts' attention to himself. He would have felt less happy had he known that the further inquiries were to be made of Charlie himself.

That evening Charlie called on the grocer. Perhaps he was disappointed when that individual began to inquire about Jack Willis, but if so, he had conquered his chagrin before it came his turn to speak.

"I'm sure Jack would just suit you, Mr. Philpotts," he said, and although his voice was quiet, it was enthusiastic still. "Everybody likes Jack, and he is so bright and quick. And he's a splendid scholar—the best in the class."

Mr. Philpotts went on with his searching questions, but Charlie became still more spirited in his admiration of his friend. There was no faint praise in his words or voice. At last the grocer asked quite suddenly:

"Wouldn't you like the place yourself, Charlie?"

Charlie hesitated. Then he spoke the truth.

"Yes, Mr. Philpotts. But I would not stand in Jack's way a minute. I'll be glad to see him get it."

It has always been an unexplained mystery to Charlie why Mr. Philpotts answered as he did.

"The place is yours, Charlie. I was only testing you. I didn't have the faintest notion of hiring Jack."

Charlie demurred a little.

"It will be you or some other boy, not Jack," Mr. Philpotts said firmly. "I have my reasons."

Charlie never knew, nor did Jack, but Mr. Philpotts summed up his reasons this way:

"Quick at figures, that's one for Jack. Not true to his friend, that's one against him. One from one leaves nothing. Faithful to his promise and faithful to his friend, that's two for Charlie. Two against none is a pretty fair score. I guess I can wait a little longer for him to do his figuring, if he's as loyal to my interests as he's shown himself to be to others tonight."—Selected.

NO MORE BUTTONS.

A clergyman's wife was mending clothes for her boys when one of her lady neighbors called in to have a friendly chat. It was not long before the visitor's eye was attracted by a large basket, more than half filled with buttons. Thereupon she began to turn them over, and suddenly exclaimed:

"Here are two buttons exactly the same as those my husband had on his last winter suit. I should know them anywhere."

"Indeed," said the clergyman's wife, quietly. "I am surprised to hear it. As all these buttons were found in the collection bag, I thought I might as well put them to some use."

Before she had finished speaking the visitor hastily arose and said she must be going.

The story soon got about, and since then no buttons have been found in the collection bag.—Selected.

THE CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS. he was made the most important and necessary factor in it all.

The day on which work on the factory began, he was forced to take his bed, and within a week he held the hand of one who was a stranger three months before, but at that time a weeping friend and brother, and said:

"All is well; Jesus sent me to Richmond to get ready for an eternal home, not as we thought to go into this business to make money for His use and glory. Tell my father I die with the presence of Christ consciously known and without fear. I am the chief of sinners, but His blood is sufficient."

For ninety days, in every hour he planned for his Lord and for His glory in coming years; but the most of his life had been spent in dissipation before he received the truth that Christ could and would do what he had tried in vain to do—that is, make him to hate drink and love the right.

Light and darkness are not more in contrast than was the life and heart of this man in the last ninety days of life and before that time. So I say get them to stop drink, but above all, get them to Christ.

The Washington, Richmond, and Florida Limited is the name of the Southern's new train inaugurated November 24, 1901, and now being operated daily between Washington, Richmond, and Jacksonville, Fla. It is in every detail a complete train, composed of day coaches of the very latest improved patterns, Pullman drawing-room cars, and dining cars. The day coaches go through from Washington and Richmond to Charlotte, Columbia, Savannah, and Jacksonville, and at Richmond a drawing-room sleeper is added, going through to Atlanta and Birmingham. At Charlotte this sleeper is attached to the United States Fast Mail, forming through service for New Orleans, Memphis, and all the South and Southwest. Connections are made at Charlotte with sleeper for Charleston, S. C. It leaves Washington daily at 10:50 A. M., Richmond at 2:30 P. M.; arriving at Jacksonville at 9:15 A. M. the following morning, and correspondingly quick time is made to all other Southern points. This service is in addition to the numerous trains operated daily over the main line, thus making five limited trains daily, with dining-car service between the North and South over the Southern.

Captain C. W. Westbury, the courteous and alert district passenger agent of the Southern Railway, is very proud of this train, and recently showed a number of newspaper men through it. It is indeed a thing of beauty, and for the travelling public a joy forever.—Foreign Mission Journal.

JUST AS A FIRE spreads in dry grass and weeds, so does an inflammation of the throat—the result of a cold—grow down into the sensitive air-passages of the lungs. The cold, like the fire, should be promptly dealt with. When you begin to cough, use Allen's Lung Balsam. It will certainly heal the sore throat and lungs, and it may save you from consumption.

REV. J. G. BAILEY DEAD.

We are sorry indeed to announce to our readers the death of Rev. J. G. Bailey, a local minister of our Church on the North Pittsylvania Circuit. His death occurred on December 27th. He served with great fidelity the Staunton River charge as a supply for a number of years; he was ever ready to render service for his Master. He was held in the highest esteem by his neighbors and friends. In his death a faithful workman has been called to his reward. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved ones.—Danville Methodist.

A brave retreat may show greater courage than a foolhardy advance.

A FABLE.

(By Carolyn Wells.)

A man there was, endowed with wealth,
Friends, fortune, fame, good looks and health,
Obedient children, loving wife—
Uncounted blessings crowned his life.

But, though he viewed his lot with pride,
Think you this man was satisfied?

No; not content with fame and pelf,
He borrowed trouble for himself.

As copy-books have often taught,
The borrower's way's with sorrow fraught;
And one who asks a loan, some day
The obligation must repay.

Now, he who borrowed trouble found
That when the pay-day came around,
He had to own, with grief and shame,
He hadn't a trouble to his name!

So he was fettered hard and fast,
And in a debtor's prison cast,
And there he weeps with bitter moan
Because he can't repay his loan.

MORAL.

Don't borrow trouble, for, alack,
You may have none to pay it back.

THE HIGHWAY OF TRADE AND TRAVEL.

The Southern Railway begs to call attention to its unequalled facilities for reaching all points in Florida, the South and Southwest. It is justly termed the representative railway of the South, the highway of trade and travel. Its important through connections, through car arrangements, complete dining-car service, quick and convenient schedules, commends it to the travelling public.

In addition to many local trains operated by this progressive company, the following through limited trains are run daily: "The Washington and Southwestern Limited," "The New York and Florida Express," "The United States Fast Mail," "The New York and Atlanta Express," "The Washington, Richmond and Florida Limited," "The Washington and Chattanooga Limited."

The Southern's Palm Limited, formerly known as the New York and Florida Limited, will be inaugurated early in January, 1902, and will run solid between New York and St. Augustine, Fla. All of these trains carry dining cars, thus providing a great convenience and time-saver to the traveller.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON II, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 12.

Text of the Lesson. Acts ii, 1-21.
Memory Verses. 2-4—Golden Text,
Acts ii, 39—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association.]

1. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come they were all with one accord in one place." This day, called Pentecost, or "fiftieth day," is mentioned again in chapter xx, 16, and I Cor. xvi, 8, as a day to be remembered and observed and is foreshadowed in Lev. xxiii, 15, 16, in the new meal offering of first fruits fifty days after the sheaf of first fruits, the former representing the resurrection of Christ on the day after the Passover Sabbath and the latter, fifty days later, suggesting the event of our lesson in connection with the beginning of the gathering of the body of Christ from all nations. The leaven in the fiftieth day offering sets forth the sin even in the believer, for leaven is always a type of evil, but it is met by the blood of the sacrifice (Lev. xxiii, 17-21). Christ is the first fruits; we are a kind of first fruits (I Cor. xv, 23; Jas. i, 18). While the disciples of Christ waited for the promise of the Father they continued in prayer and supplication (Acts i, 4, 14), but whether the election of Matthias to fill the place of Judas was of the Lord or of Peter is a question. Some disciples still find it difficult to pray and wait without the transaction of some other business. We may possibly find Paul and not Matthias as the twelfth. See the one accord of the Lord's people in i, 14; ii, 1, 46; iv, 24; v, 12; viii, 6; xv, 25; just seven times; the one accord of Satan's followers in vii, 57; xii, 20; xviii, 12; xix, 29; just four times, the worldwide number, suggesting the whole world in the wicked one hating God (Rev. vii, 1; I John v, 19; R. V.; John xv, 18, 19). The word is only used once elsewhere (Rom. xv, 6), and teaches us with one mind and one mouth to glorify God.

2-4. "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost." When the Holy Spirit came upon Christ at His baptism, He came in the form of a dove, for there was no need of a purifying or consuming fire, but saved sinners need the Spirit as a fire. The saying in Isa. lxiv, 2, "The fire causeth the waters to boil to make Thy name known," taken in connection with the water as the word (Eph. v, 26), and the Spirit as fire helps us to understand why some people who know much of the word of God seem to have no power or go in them. The water is not boiling; they need the fire of the Holy Spirit. The Spirit came as the Lord Jesus said He would and took possession of these redeemed ones, His temples, and at once they began to speak, or rather the Spirit who filled them began to speak through them. See in Acts iv, 31, how when they were filled on another occasion they spake the word of God with boldness. While yet with them in His mortal body Jesus had told them, "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you" (Matt. x, 20). Neither the thoughts nor the words were theirs; but, as in the case of the sweet psalmist of Israel, the Spirit of the Lord spake by them, and His word was in their tongue (II Sam. xxiii, 27).

5-11. Jews from all nations were gathered at Jerusalem, and quickly they came together and heard these unlearned Galileans talking in the languages of all lands concerning the wonderful works of God. The Holy Spirit had taken full control of these men and was telling through them the things of God and of Christ as Jesus said He would (John xvi, 13-16). He who first gave different languages to people (Gen. xi, 7) can as easily cause others to speak these languages when He sees fit, and, although we do not hear of missionaries in our day acquiring a foreign language in that way, yet I am acquainted with missionaries who, in reliance upon Job xxxvi, 4, were able to speak in a foreign tongue in a very short time. One whom I know passed an examination in six months that would ordinarily require a year of study. The Spirit does not talk of the works of man, nor does He honor man, but He loves to honor God. Like the servant of Abraham when he went to obtain a wife for Isaac, He tells of the only Son and how the Father had given all things into His hand. The messenger of the Lord is not expected to think out his message and tell the people his thoughts, but he is expected to receive it from the Lord and deliver it as the Lord's message (Ex. iv, 12; Jer. i, 7; John xii, 49; I Pet. iv, 11).

12-15. This supernatural occurrence was to these devout Jews wholly incomprehensible, and they tried to explain it by saying that these men were full of new wine, about as silly an explanation as is given by some of the wise and professedly devout men of our day of some of the wonderful works of God. The natural man, however educated or religious he may be, cannot receive the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto Him (I Cor. ii, 14), and these devout, religious Jews needed just what Nicodemus needed, a new birth, the gift of God, which many of them a little later received. That the wisdom of this world cannot comprehend or explain the things of God is repeatedly shown in the book of Daniel, a book which some of the wise men seem to wish out of the Bible, perhaps because therein is shown the utter inability of the wisdom of Egypt to explain the things of God. The wise of this world are drunken, but not with wine (Isa. xxix, 9). Consider also Eph. v, 18, and some similarity between a man filled with wine and one filled with the Spirit.

16-21. Peter does not say that this was the fulfillment of that part of Joel's prophecy which he quotes, but that it was a sample of it or, if you prefer, a fulfillment, for one has truly said that prophecy may have a germinant accomplishment while the complete fulfillment is yet in the future. That Joel's prophecy has not yet had its fulfillment (if you will suffer the word) or its final fulfillment is seen in the context, for Israel is still ashamed and humiliated among the nations, and Jerusalem is not holy, for strangers still possess her, and the Lord has not yet returned to dwell in Zion (Joel iii, 17, 21). The judgment of nations (Joel iii, 1, 2), of which our Lord spoke in Matt. xxv, 31-46, has not yet taken place, for He has not yet come in His glory. When He thus comes, we will come with Him to be associated with Him in judging the nations (Col. iii, 4; I Cor. vi, 2; Rev. ii, 26-28). Let us be filled with the Spirit and be His faithful witnesses till He come.

FTOGs never croak in running water; always in stagnant. But I say to all Christian workers, to all Sunday school teachers, to all evangelists, to all ministers of the gospel, if we want our Sunday schools and our prayer meetings and our churches to gather the people we must freshen up. The simple fact is the people are tired of the humdrum of religionists.

You say that all Sunday school teachers and all evangelists and all ministers must bring their illustrations from the Bible. Christ did not when he preached. The most of the Bible was written before Christ's time, but where did he get his illustrations? He drew them from the lilies, from the ravens, from salt, from a candle, from a bushel, from long faced hypocrites, from gnats, from moths, from large gates and small gates, from a camel, from the needle's eye, from yeast in the dough of bread, from a mustard seed, from a fishing net, from debtors and creditors. That is the reason multitudes followed Christ. His illustrations were so easy and so understandable. Therefore, my brother Christian worker, if you and I find two illustrations for a religious subject, and the one is a Bible illustration and the other is outside the Bible, I will take the latter because I want to be like my Master. Looking across to a hill, Christ saw the city of Jerusalem. Talking to the people about the conspicuity of Christian example, he said: "The world is looking at you; be careful. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." While he was speaking of the divine care of God's children a bird flew past. He said, "Behold the ravens." Then, looking down into the valley, all covered at that season with flowers, he said, "Consider the lilies." Oh, my brother Christian workers, what is the use of our going away off in some obscure part of history or on the other side of the earth to get an illustration when the earth and the heavens are full of illustrations?

Modern Christianity.

Why should we go away to get an illustration of the vicarious suffering of Jesus Christ when at Bloomfield, N. J., two little children were walking on the rail track and a train was coming, but they were on a bridge of trestlework, and the little girl took her brother and let him down through the trestlework as gently as she could toward the water, very carefully and lovingly and cautiously, so that he might not be hurt in the fall and might be picked up by those who were standing near by? While doing that the train struck her, and hardly enough of her body was left to gather into a funeral casket. What was that? Vicarious suffering; like Christ; pang for others; woe for others; suffering for others; death for others. What is the use of our going away off to find an illustration in past ages when in Michigan a mail carrier on horseback, riding on, pursued by those flames which had swept over a hundred miles, saw an old man by the roadside, dismounted, helped the old man on the horse, saying, "Now whip up and get away?" The old man got away, but the mail carrier perished. Just like Christ dismounting from the glories of heaven to put us on the way of deliverance, then falling back into the flames of sacrifice for others. Pang for others; woe for others; death for others; vicarious suffering. What is the use of our going away off in ancient history to find an illustration of the fact that it is dangerous to defy God when in the Adirondacks I saw a flash of lightning and bolt so vivid I said, "That struck something very near?" A few hours afterward we found that two farmers that Monday morning had been seated under a tree, the one boasting how that the day before, on the Lord's day, he had got his hay in and so cheated the Lord out of that part of the time anyhow and both of them laughing over the achievement by which they had wronged the Lord of his holy day, when the lightning struck one dead instantly and the other had been two weeks in bed when we left the Adirondacks and has become an invalid, I suppose, for life. He did not make as much out of the Lord as he thought he did. Was it any less an illustration for my soul because I met the clergyman on his way home from the funeral and he told me of the facts and said the body of the man who had been destroyed was black with the electricity?

Heaven Very Near.

Oh, Christian workers, we have got to freshen up. What is the use of our going back in the Christian classics to find an illustration of the victorious Christian deathbed when my personal friend, Alfred Cookman, a few years ago went away in as imperial grandeur as did Edward Payson? Is it any less an illustration to me and to you because I met him a few weeks before in front of Trinity church, Broadway, and I said, "Cookman, you look as if you were working too hard?" Where in all the classics is there such a story as that of Cookman, when in his last moment he cried, "I am sweeping through the gates washed in the blood of the Lamb?"

What is the use of going away off to get an illustration when in a house on Third avenue, Brooklyn, I saw a woman dying, and she said, "Mr. Talmage, heaven used to be to me a great way off, but it now is just at the foot of the bed?" What is the use of your going away off to get illustrations of a victorious deathbed when all Wales was filled with the story of the dying experience of Frances Ridley Havergal? She got her feet wet standing on the ground preaching temperance and the gospel to a group of boys and men, went home with a chill, and congestion set in, and they told her she was dangerously sick. "I thought so," she said, "but it is really too good to be true that I am going. Doctor, do you really think I am going?" "Yes." "Today?" "Probably." She said, "Beautiful, splendid, to be so near the gate of heaven." Then after a spasm of pain she nestled down in the pillows and said, "There, now, it is all over—blessed rest." Then she tried to sing, and she struck one glad note, high note of praise to Christ, but could sing only one word, "he," and then all was still. She finished it in heaven.

Oh, fellow Christian workers, what is the use of our being stale and obsolete and ancient when all around us are these evidences of God's grace, God's deliverance, God's mercy and God's wisdom? We have got to freshen up in our sermons, freshen up in our songs, freshen up in our zeal, freshen up in our consecration, and if we do it, my brethren and sisters, we will no more have to coax people to come to church than if you throw corn on the ground you have to coax pigeons to come and eat it, no more than you would have to coax a tired horse to eat the oats you throw in his manger. Yes, we must freshen up in our Sunday schools and in our prayer meetings and in our pulpits.

For spiritual blessings, let our prayers be importunate, perpetual and persevering; for temporal blessings, let them be general, short, conditional, and modest.—Jeremy Taylor.

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 200x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas, large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Editorial.

Men and women are finite and narrow. They lay down certain laws of life. They dig out certain channels and say, "Now, let us be blessed, but let our blessings flow through these channels: Meat and drink, shelter and clothing, health and good name. If we are to be blessed, we must be blessed through these channels. To lack in these is to lack the favor of God." Job stands to-day as for ages past—God's denial of the narrow philosophy of devils and of men. And Jesus adds the final touch, "Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

If God's idea of the highest blessings is one thing, and ours a different thing, somebody must yield before there can be harmony, and consequent peace. The All-knowing, the All-wise cannot yield to us, ignorant and short-sighted men. He will break up our narrow ditches and fill them with sand and cut out new paths, through which to send His blessings. Like the lame man at the beautiful gate, we look up, expecting to receive an alms, but God's answer comes, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have, give I unto thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." Not money, but life and power; not little things, but great things. We walk through life in this fashion, crying out for things of to-day and to-morrow, and ignoring the fact that the things of all days, of all years, of eternity itself, are ours for the asking.

Delightful! Satisfying! What? The knowledge of helpfulness. The assurance from needy ones that we have given to supply their needs. How broad, how inviting the field! Room enough for all to dwell therein. The ones we help can help us in their turn. We need not weep and mourn because we cannot give the things that others give. Responsibility for each one is measured by the opportunity of each one. If our opportunity is to give money, food, raiment, medicine, then our responsibility follows. If our opportunity is to give an example of courage, patience, humility, forbearance, brotherly kindness, then the responsibility is upon us to do so. If our opportunity is to give a smile, a kind word, a sympathetic tear, then responsibility follows. Let us give to each other such as we have, then there will be delight and satisfaction in our hearts. Let me quote one of Bishop Fitzgerald's sayings in "Whetstones": "The new year comes to you with a jewel in its hand—the jewel of opportunity. Lay hold of it by doing what conscience dictates now. Now means—now."

Beware of spiritual pride! Christ is the foundation! The building rests upon Him. The world accepts Him in name, but rejects Him in fact. Is a man good because he eats his dinner, or accepts an invitation to spend an evening with the President? Do we claim any goodness because we eat or because we go? Shall we think ourselves to be good because we go to church and get spiritual food, or because we get on our knees and talk with God, the Lord of all the earth? Let us not deceive ourselves! The Pharisee thanked God that he did all these things. We are not good because we do these things. If we are trying to be good, we will do them, but we will do all things whatsoever in the name of the Lord Jesus. "Not by works of righteousness, which we have done, but by His mercy He saves us." Let us not commend ourselves because we do these things, but let us thank God that we have the opportunity to do them.

THE BOOK COMMITTEE'S CHOSEN AGENT.

A few days since the Vendome Theatre, of Nashville, Tenn., burned out to such an extent that it is unfit for use. An effort was made to secure the Tabernacle to meet engagements already made by the theatrical management. The Tabernacle had been erected chiefly by the efforts of Capt. T. G. Ryman, a convert of Sam Jones, for evangelical purposes, but had been placed under a directory, of which Major E. B. Stahlman was chairman. The chairman sought to induce the directory to allow the use of the Tabernacle for the purposes proposed. Capt. Ryman opposed the occupancy with such energy that the efforts of the chairman met with defeat. Thereupon, the chairman at once offered his resignation, as reported by himself in an article in one of the city papers.

This is the man, whom the Book Committee selected to represent our great Church at Washington. Did they know the character of the man, and his views and principles before they selected him? The Church would like to know whether anything was considered in the employment of this man, except his ability to collect difficult claims. Prudence and piety both should have suggested the most careful investigation into the character of any man before committing to him the honor of a great Church in a transaction, involving such possibilities of wrong-doing, and of damage to the fair fame of the Church.

AN ASTONISHING STATEMENT.

"I simply rise, without any expectation of changing any vote in this house, to enter my protest against the proposed action. This State is struggling to build up a system of education. There is not in the State a college to which any man would rather send his son than to the University of Virginia. I speak without any personal attachment towards it. There is not a college in this State, however, through which any man would rather have his son receive his final education, if he could afford to send him to the University."

The above statement was made by Mr. C. V. Meredith, of Richmond, in the debate on the appropriation to the University of Virginia. It is surely astonishing that any man, who is familiar with the history of education in Virginia, or who has ever heard the subject of education presented from a Christian standpoint, should display such ignorance of the facts in the case. He asserts that there is not a man in the State who would not prefer to send his son to the University of Virginia, if he could afford to do so. He little understands the views of thousands of Christian people in this State. This writer feels confident that there are more men who prefer to send their children to the denominational colleges than there are men who prefer to send to the University of Virginia. The editor was not opposed to the appropriation to the University. He believes that it would be better for the cause of education, if the appropriation had been fixed by the Constitution. But he would never think of preferring to send his son to the University rather than to his denominational college. He does not believe that the University should compete with the colleges, nor does he think the University a fit place for boys of college age. There are thousands of Christian men and women who believe that their children should be trained in Christian and not in State institutions, and they show their belief by giving their money to their church schools and by sending their children there to be trained by teachers who are attested to them to be earnest believers in Jesus Christ, and anxious for the eternal salvation of the pupils under their care.

Mr. Meredith is mistaken. The Church of Christ has always led the way in the development of true learning, and she is not prepared to surrender her children to the care of State institutions, which may and often do have agnostics and skeptics and irreligious persons among the teaching force. The editor does not assert that any of the present faculty of the University are of this character. But it is a well-known fact that these matters are not matters of prime importance in the selection of teachers for State schools, while they are fundamental in the selecting of teachers in the denominational schools. If Mr. Meredith will get the facts, he will find that the majority of the young men in the denominational colleges were able to go to the University, but their parents would not send them there on spiritual grounds. There are still thousands of parents in the old State who are more concerned about the spiritual welfare of their boys, than they are about their being graduates of the University of Virginia.

CONDITION OF BRO. GILL.

Bro. John A. Gill is living at Bloxom, in the district parsonage. He has been sick since last June. In a note to the editor he reports that he is improving slowly, but is still confined to the bed. His diet is almost entirely confined to liquid food, but he can now take a little solid food by grinding it. He is still unable to talk, and has to be moved on a stretcher, but is hopeful that he may get out by spring.

Our brother is making a brave fight to conquer disease, that he may get back again to the work to which he devoted himself so faithfully during the days of strength. Let us give him and his family our sympathy, our prayers, and our practical help, that he may be restored to health.

THE CONFERENCE ANNUAL.

The Annual has come to hand once more, and, as usual, is gotten up in good style, and reflects credit upon the editor and the printer. It has 140 pages this year. It is surprising that no more than 2,000 copies of it are circulated. The proceedings, the reports, the obituaries, the opening sermon, the statistical tables, and the Conference roll and post-offices are all to be found in this one pamphlet for twenty-five cents. Some of the reports, etc., will be published later on.

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

"A bad time, you mean," said Edward, looking out of the window. "That depends. It's lots of fun to do as you please."

Edward looked over at his roommate and wondered at his easy, happy expression. He had been out the evening before at a late supper held in the Greek letter society rooms down town, where, if the rumors of such suppers were correct, there was dissipation of various kinds that resulted in no good to any of the students. Edward was wondering if Preston was as happy as he looked.

"Your conscience never troubles you, does it?"

"It used to," replied Willis, whistling a bar of a popular tune, "but I've trained it in the way it should go, and—all right!" he shouted as the door opened and a head with a tennis cap on it was thrust into the room. "I'll be out there in a minute. We're going to play off that set with Bruce and Clark."

He put on his tennis shoes, hunted up some balls, took down his racket and went out. Edward sat for half an hour by his table, looking out of the window and unable to study. Finally he threw down his book and put on his hat and went out to the tennis courts to watch the game. It was impossible for him to go on with his studies in the condition his mind was in. He was not in the habit of juggling with his conscience as Willis was, and he could not quiet it after that promise to rent the route.

Next day he went down to the office, and Rankin went with him to make arrangements. The proprietor was very busy and did not question Edward at all, so that Rankin did all the lying himself, a thing that Willis said, in talking it over with Edward afterward, Rankin was perfectly competent to do.

He started in with the work of the route with conflicting feelings. He had not actually said a word to the proprietor or to any one else about the ownership of the route, and he tried to quiet his conscience with the thought that he was justified in earning the money needed to carry him through college. And still he was not able to silence that little voice. His home training had been too exact. His father had been called by some of his neighbors overparticular in the matter of truthfulness. If he had not been so particular, they said, he would have got on faster. Edward's mother and Freeda had the same habit of scrupulous exactness, and Edward had never been able before to satisfy himself with any statement that stopped short of a solemn and perfect frankness. He was not satisfied now, but he was struggling to make the matter seem reasonable and persuade himself that, as Willis said, he was "too lucky."

For a while he worked on the route with all his energy. Matters in regard to Cuba and Spain's administration of that unhappy island were growing more and more important as news. People in the limits of the newspaper route who had never taken a paper began to subscribe. Before the week was out Edward had increased the subscription list by the addition of 25 new names.

When Rankin paid him at the end of the week, according to their contract, he was much pleased. He volunteered 50 cents extra on the $3, and Edward silently took it.

"I'm willing to make it a regular thing," said Rankin, "if you can keep up the list through the winter. Looks now as if there might be a war with Spain, and if there is people will want the news right along. The papers will probably have a boom."

"Probably they will," replied Edward briefly.

That was Saturday night, and, as his custom had been since entering college, he went over to the girls' hall to see Freeda.

When she came into the parlor, she noticed Edward's unusually grave face. He was habitually grave, but not somber, and Freeda was quick to see the difference.

"What have you been doing, Ned? You've been working too hard."

"No; I haven't," Edward hesitated to tell her the real cause of his trouble because he did not want her to know anything about the real struggle he was having to meet his expenses. But Freeda was a persistent girl, and Edward's old habits of frankness finally prevailed, and he told his sister briefly about the newspaper route and his contract with Rankin.

Freeda listened, and her face grew more and more distressed as he went on. They were sitting in a corner of the parlor, for there were other callers present, and Freeda said in a low voice:

"Ned, you never told me that uncle did not send you the money to pay the first term's bills. I am sure that was the understanding when we left home. You have given me all the money and not kept any for yourself."

Edward explained that their uncle needed the money to buy stock for the farm, but Freeda was evidently very much disturbed by her brother's confession.

"At any rate, Ned, you have been tempted to take this route against your convictions because you need the money so much. And I feel to blame for your having done so much for me. I could get a place to work somewhere in a private house instead of paying for board and room here in the hall."

"It isn't necessary," replied Edward doggedly, "so long as I am making this three and a half a week, and there will be some money coming to me from the farm in January."

Freeda was silent a moment and then said timidly:

"Do you think you will go on with the route?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

Freeda did not say anything. A num-dered and the brother and sister were not able to talk together privately any longer. Among the newcomers was Willis, jolly and as noisy as he dared to be with the principal of the ladies' department in the little room adjoining the general parlor.

Somehow as Willis came up and spoke to Freeda and made her grave face smile with some nonsense lightly spoken by him Edward felt a dislike for his roommate that he had never experienced before. He resented his easy going, happy carelessness. There seemed to be a disagreeable familiarity on Preston's part with all the girls, but Edward Blake noticed it for the first time in connection with his conversation with Freeda. It was Preston's manner, and Edward on this evening especially was probably more than usually sensitive.

He rose to go earlier than usual, and Freeda went out into the hall with him.

"I don't feel quite right about the route, dear Ned," she said as he took his hat up from the hall table, "but if you feel easy about it—I suppose"—

She hesitated for fear of seeming to discourage him from the only thing that seemed possible for him to do in order to make his way.

"If I could find anything else to do, I would do it," said Edward moodily. "Don't you worry about it, anyway. I don't want to spoil your happiness."

"The only unhappiness I can have, Ned, is to see you unhappy," Freeda replied impulsively, and then she kissed him, a thing she seldom did, but the girl's heart was sore at the sight of what she truly imagined her brother's struggle.

Willis lounged into the hall with two or three other students just as Edward went out.

"Wish I had a sister in college," he said, with a provoking smile.

Freeda reddened, and after a moment's pause she turned and went directly up stairs. The boys with Preston laughed louder than usual, and Miss Channing, the principal, opened her door and came into the hall. She looked at Willis sharply and said:

"Mr. Preston, if you don't obey the rules as to order on calling nights you will not be permitted to come any more this term."

Willis smiled good naturedly.

"Now, then, Miss Channing, am I to blame if the other fellows laugh at my witty remarks? What makes you always pick on me, a poor, inoffensive little junior?"

Miss Channing looked at him and tried to be severe, but Willis looked so absolutely and contentedly happy that she relaxed her own look and came out into the hall for a chat, and in a few minutes she was laughing with the others at an imitation on Willis' part of one of the professors who was exceedingly unpopular with both faculty and students. Afterward she reproached herself for letting Willis Preston impose on every one. But that was not the first time he had had his own way at the ladies' hall.

Edward Blake went out across the campus and started toward his room. Before he put his foot on the steps of the building he had gone over the whole matter of the paper route again. His sister's evident distress for him had moved him very deeply. In spite of the fact that he had not actually lied to the proprietor of the paper or to any one else he knew well enough that he had let Rankin do the lying for him, which was the same thing. Out there in the dark he fought the battle out, going over on the steps of the chapel opposite Rankin hall. As he sat there he was not able to think of any one in the whole college who could give him any help to settle the question. He was not a professed Christian, although he always had respect for religious life and had attended the college prayer meetings and association gatherings several times since entering the college. So he was not fighting out the question of right and wrong on any basis of Christian faith. His mother and sister were members of a church at home, and he had always attended and believed in it. Since leaving home he had been down town to different churches, but had not yet settled on any one regularly. The fight he was having now was carried on practically alone in the dark with his conscience and his God.

At last he came down off the steps and started again toward his own room. Rankin's room was on the front of the building, and Edward as he looked up saw a light burning there. He went on up and stopped at his own room. He put his hand on the knob of the door and waited there a second. Then he slowly walked across the hall and knocked at Rankin's door.

"Ned, you never told me that uncle did not send you the money."

When Rankin opened the door and saw Edward, he looked a little surprised, but invited him in politely enough and asked him what he wanted.

Edward remained standing by the table during the interview and never changed his position. Rankin walked up and down the room and grew more excited every minute.

"I've come in to say that I must give up the route," said Edward, coming at once to the point.

"Give up the route!"

"Yes; I can't make myself believe that the business is right for me, and I must give it up."

"But, see here!" Rankin spoke roughly, and the coarseness in him began to show through the veneer of his outward politeness. "There are two parties to a contract. What if I say that I will not go back on my contract? What then?"

"It makes no difference. I can't carry the paper any more."

"But you've made a contract with me to carry the papers, and you are legally bound by your written word. I can hold you to it."

Edward was silent a minute. He did not know enough about the law in the case to know whether Rankin was telling the truth or not. At last he said slowly:

"Will you let me see the contract?"

Rankin hesitated, but he knew that Blake had a copy in his own room. He opened a drawer in his desk and threw the paper on the table.

"There's no time mentioned here."

said Edward, reading the clause aloud. "I promise to carry the papers for so much a week and to keep up the regular list of subscribers, but the agreement leaves it open for you or me to dissolve the contract without naming any time."

It was true, for Rankin in drawing up the paper had in his own mind reserved the right to secure the services of another carrier if at any time he could get one at a cheaper rate.

"Anyway, you are under moral obligations to keep your promise," said Rankin, using an argument he never would have thought of with another student.

"I'm not under any moral obligations to continue lying."

"Who's done any lying, I'd like to know?" exclaimed Rankin savagely. "I've done all the talking, and I'm willing to stand the responsibility."

Edward made no reply. After coming back to the table from a walk over to the window Rankin exclaimed:

"It will put me in a hole with the paper at the office. How am I going to make them believe that the route is sold again to another party? They're suspicious of me down there now. If you quit now, it means no end of bother for me. What do you want to be so mighty particular for? We've got the thing started now, and you haven't had to tell any actual lies about it. You're getting good wages and no harm done. What's the use of knocking the business all over? Probably before winter is over I can make it $4 a week. It's the best route in the city by all odds, and you never can get another."

"I'm sorry about the whole matter," replied Edward slowly. "Your trouble in it is caused by the deceit that lies at the bottom of the whole business. I don't know that I am responsible for that. The only thing I regret is my connection with it at all. I'm willing to hand back the money on the week's work."

He laid the money on the table, and Rankin contemptuously struck it off on to the floor. Edward stood as still as before.

"You can pick up your money; I don't want it."

Edward still remained in the same place and said nothing. Rankin after his passionate gesture and exclamation walked over to the window again. Willis and a crowd of students were just returning from the ladies' hall. As they came noisily up the steps, singing, Edward walked to the door, saying as he opened it:

"I've made up my mind not to carry the papers another day. It's the only course I can take. Of course I will hand you the subscription lists as made up to date."

"Say, come back a minute!" Rankin spoke in a quieter tone, and Edward closed the door and stood with his back to it. He could hear Willis go into the room across the hallway, whistling and singing alternately.

"Won't you carry the route until I can find another renter? It's not an easy matter to transfer the route now that the term's so far along and the fellows all have secured some regular work."

Edward hesitated in real perplexity. He did not have any faith in Rankin's sincerity and did not know how long he would probably put him off and pretend that he could not find any one else to take the route. On the other hand, now that he had made up his mind to give up the business, Edward felt that every day added to his compliance with an untruth. Should he keep on lying merely to help Rankin find another poor student who would enter into the same compact to deceive? His answer when he finally gave it, was determined by that last consideration. The accommodation to Rankin simply meant transferring the same course of deceit to some one else.

"No; I won't carry the paper another day," he said doggedly.

"Then you can go to the devil!" said Rankin, with a burst of profanity.

"I've been to him already," replied Edward, with a gleam of excitement, the first he had shown, "and I don't intend to repeat the visit."

He went out without waiting to hear Rankin's reply, and after pausing just a moment in the hallway he entered his room.

Willis was blacking his shoes. It was a curious custom he had just before he went to bed. During the act he always whistled.

As Edward came in he looked up and stopped his whistling long enough to say:

"Hello! Thought you came in long ago."

"No," said Edward, going into his bedroom. He came out again at once and looked at his roommate thoughtfully. Willis put his other foot up on the chair and started a new tune.

"I've been in to see Rankin and told him I won't carry the papers any longer. I can't stand it to lie any more."

Willis took his foot down and stared at Edward.

"Well!" he exclaimed finally in a tone that Edward could not quite understand. "What did Rankin say?"

"The last thing he said was to tell me to go to the devil."

"And you came right in here. But say"— Willis suddenly walked over to Edward and, to his great astonishment, put out his hand. "I want to shake. I didn't think you would do it. I honor you for it. Not that my honor is of any value, but then I don't want you to think I don't have any right ideas about things, because I do. There isn't a boy in the college that doesn't know the whole miserable business of the paper route deception is lying outright. I know it, because I've done it a year at a time myself. What's the use of trying to smooth it over? We juniors haven't taken up evidences and ethics yet, but we have brains enough to know the difference between a lie and a truth. Stick to the truth, my boy. That's what I say."

"Then you can go to the devil!" said Rankin, with a burst of profanity.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

THE MEN OF NINEVEH.

The men of Nineveh followed the uncertain light, that glimmered but feebly in a storm-swept sky, but were led by it to safety; the men of Judea saw the Sun of Righteousness rising to grow stronger and stronger, until it shined over every land and sea, but obstinately closed their eyes and stumbled into darkness and destruction.

Fearful will it be when, in the day of judgment, the Ninevites become preachers of wrath and condemnation to us; they point to Jonah, and say: "We repented at the preaching of this man, an alien, a foreigner, and who so anxiously wished our destruction, that he watched many days to see it, and grieved sorely that we were not destroyed; you hear every Sabbath day of Christ, through men who beseech you to be reconciled to God with tenderness and tears."

"And behind the man there stands a mighty messenger of grace and power that bears witness to the truth of the word which he speaks." Listen to Him, I beseech you, for He is the great representative of Him, who said: "A greater than Jonas is here," and who reproves the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment to come.

Anti-Saloon League Convention.

[The Convention met on Thursday, January 16th. The report given below is taken from the Richmond papers. There are some matters which will be given special notice later on.—Editor.]

After a session lasting two days, the most remarkable temperance Convention ever held in this State, inaugurating a new and powerful campaign against the saloon, came to a close last night.

It was the first meeting of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia, a part of a powerful national organization, which rejects prohibition as a political movement, and proposes to oppose the licensed liquor traffic through the media of the old political parties, and by the education of public sentiment. The new movement is characterized by conservatism above all else, and it is in this that the strength of the new movement consists. In the first State Convention there has been a noticeable absence of anything bordering on the bitter or sensational.

The League has been organized but a year, but within that time those interested in the movement have sown the State down with literature and canvassed every county and town, with the result that the present gathering presents the most formidable opposition to the liquor traffic which ever came from the people of Virginia. Organization is the strength of the movement, and to that end every effort is being exerted.

There were present at the Convention perhaps 175 accredited delegates, representing temperance organizations of all kinds, churches, religious societies, and leagues of young people, lodges of Good Templars, and every variety of temperance organizations.

In fact, the Anti-Saloon League is an amalgamation of all organizations and individuals who oppose the sale of liquor. The movement is not political in the sense that those participating are of any one party, or that an attempt will be made to unite them into political organization. On the contrary, only a small proportion of those present are members of the Prohibition party, the majority opposing that line of work.

Many of those present at the Convention are ministers of the various evangelical churches, there being more Methodists and Baptists than any other denomination. Many of the delegates are ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and other organizations.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was called to order shortly after 3 o'clock by the president of the League, Dr. S. C. Mitchell, of this city. There were in attendance at this time about fifty or seventy-five persons, most of them delegates. As the meeting progressed the crowd gradually increased, until the lecture-room was comfortably filled. There were two hundred delegates present in all, representing thirty counties.

After a short devotional service, consisting of hymns, the reading of the Scriptures and prayer, Dr. Mitchell spoke briefly, expressing his pleasure at the presence of so many out-of-town delegates. The formal address of welcome followed, delivered by Rev. C. S. Gardner, pastor of the Grace-Street church. Speaking for his congregation, Dr. Gardner assured the Convention of his great interest in the work of the Anti-Saloon League, and of his gladness to welcome the body to his church. He felt honored, he said, in being allowed to appear before the body, offering to it the hospitality of his congregation.

With regard to the work for which the members of the League had assembled in Convention, Dr. Gardner declared that he sympathized in it most heartily. He had always liked to take a strike at the saloon. He believed it a safe principle to live by to oppose every movement made by those who were the friends of the sale of intoxicating liquor. For this reason he hailed the advent of the Anti-Saloon League, with its high-sounding motto, "The saloon must go." He considered the very name of the League to be a fetching one.

Great progress had been made in the temperance cause, said Dr. Gardner. This progress had been in the spirit of the workers and the recognition of the vital principle that the saloon is the point in the ranks of the enemy against which the forces of the temperance cause should be flung. The saloon should go, and must go.

The response to Dr. Gordiner's address was made by Rev. F. M. Edwards, of Onancock, who made a lengthy and interesting speech anent the saloon question.

GREETINGS FROM OTHER BODIES.

Greetings from various organizations represented in the audience followed next. Mrs. Hoge, of the W. C. T. U., made a short talk, in which she stated that she represented 2,000 or more white ribboners, who are heartily in sympathy with the work of the League.

The Rev. Mr. Guy represented the Good Templars, which organization, he said, stands for the destruction of the saloon, as well as for total abstinence.

The crying need in the temperance cause, in Mr. Guy's opinion, is organization. There is enough sentiment, he said, and if it could be solidified every saloon in Virginia could be closed within twenty-four hours. He hoped that the League would accomplish a thorough organization and prepare to go into the field for work. The only argument that counts with the politician is the vote, and if they will not promise good legislation the League should muster its forces against them. The Anti-Saloon League, he declared, can abolish the saloons if it will.

Rev. James Cannon, of Blackstone, moved the appointment of a Press Committee to disseminate information throughout the State, and "let the people know that we are here, and why we are here, and what we are doing."

Rev. Dr. Dickinson briefly addressed the League, commending the suggestion of Mr. Cannon.

Rev. J. E. DeShazo commented upon the fact that some of the newspapers had had very small references to the gathering, and he cordially commended the suggestion that a Press Committee be constituted.

Rev. Mr. Cannon suggested that the chair appoint local men on the committee.

The committee was appointed as follows: Rev. Mr. Cannon, of Blackstone; Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, of this city; Rev. Mr. Beazley, of South Boston; Rev. S. H. Thompson, of Farmville, and Rev. W. S. Campbell. The Committee on Credentials was announced as follows: Rev. Mr. Guy, Mrs. Hoge, and Rev. Mr. West.

Miss Eugenia Henry was elected assistant secretary of the League, to act in the absence of Dr. A. B. Greiner, the secretary.

After brief remarks by Dr. A. E. Dickinson, of this city, and one or two others, the meeting adjourned until the night session.

STRONG ADDRESSES AT NIGHT.

There was a large attendance last night. Many more delegates had arrived, and the large auditorium was comfortably filled. Many ladies were in the audience; the ministry of the city was well represented, and here and there were seen members of the Constitutional Convention.

The meeting was enthusiastic, as the speakers got well into their subjects, and from various sections of the audience came frequent responses of "amens" and endorsement of statements made by the speakers.

When the meeting was opened there were seated on the rostrum, Professor S. C. Mitchell, president; Judge Mann and Dr. Hawthorne. Professor Mitchell's opening address was along the lines of the League's work, and his confidence in the ultimate triumph of the cause which the organization stands for.

JUDGE MANN'S ADDRESS.

Closing he introduced Judge Mann, who said the subject he had been asked to speak upon was temperance reform, but that subject being one so wide he would confine himself to the legal phase of the controversy.

"To make the fight," he said, "we must know what we are to fight," and along that line he followed with explanations of the liquor license law of Virginia. He called attention to a decision of the Supreme Court in several cases where the question of granting licenses was involved. He said the word "may" in the law had been construed by the court to mean "must," and that though the judge before whom the application was made might be of the opinion that the location of the saloon might be a menace to public welfare and to the morality of the neighborhood it had nevertheless been granted.

INTRODUCED BILL.

At one time, he said, he had introduced a bill in the Legislature giving the judge discretion in the matter, in as plain English as he could command, but even his amendment had been held by the courts to mean absolutely nothing.

Discussing the remedy for the evil, Judge Mann spoke of and favored the Barbour-Charles resolution, now before the Constitutional Convention. "It will in all probability be defeated," he said, "in the Convention on account of the opposition to legislation in the Constitution; but I favor introducing the same in the Legislature."

If lost there, he said, the next practical step was to amend the law now on the statute books. Another remedy he spoke of was the dispensary law. He next discussed fairly its advantages and disadvantages. The objection he called attention to was the tendency the law had had, where in operation, to increase the trade for State and town revenue.

IN FORM OF AN APPEAL.

Dr. Hawthorne, in his address, said in part: "I have made my discussion of this subject in the form of an appeal to the Constitutional Convention and Legislature of Virginia, without expecting any considerable number of the members of those bodies to be present to hear it, but hope that they will have the opportunity to read it."

"The question is before them of dealing with the liquor traffic."

"In speaking to these representative bodies, I address myself also to every voter in the Commonwealth of Virginia. In every county where the supreme power is lodged in the people the Government is just what the people make it. Every man interested with the right of suffrage ought to feel that he is responsible for the laws enacted by the representatives of the people, and for the manner in which they are administered."

EVERY MAN RESPONSIBLE.

"Every man who knowingly gives his ballot and his influence to the cause of bad government will be punished in this world and in the next, if he does not repent of the sin."

"We are not a Commonwealth of infidels. We believe in God, in moral government, and in the everlasting distinctions between right and wrong."

"If one hundred men band together and rob a bank, the responsibility is not so divided that each man bears only a hundredth part of the guilt."

Each of the one hundred men is just as guilty before the law and in the sight of God as if he alone had committed the deed.

SO WITH CONVENTION.

"If one hundred men in our Constitutional Convention or in our Legislature should vote for a measure legalizing an immoral and crime-breeding traffic, every one of the one hundred would be just as deserving of the reprobation of God and the people as if he alone had made the law. The same responsibility is upon every man in Virginia who is clothed with the right of suffrage."

With this brief statement the speaker said he outlined the work of the great Anti-Saloon movement.

He traced the genesis of the Anti-Saloon movement, quoted Chief Justice Taney, of the Supreme Court, sustaining the right of a State to suppress the saloon, and declared that this opinion had been repeatedly reaffirmed.

"Our movement is a moral one. We are not a political party. We have no fellowship with those men who would make a convenience of our sacred cause to gratify their political ambitions.

"We need no Prohibition party to accomplish our purposes; we appeal to the members of our Constitutional Convention, the members of our Legislature and the citizenship of Virginia as moral beings under moral government, who must render an account to Almighty God for their conduct in reference to the greatest curse that has ever afflicted the world.

"What is our demand? It is that the State shall not legalize, but prohibit the saloon. Our argument in support of this demand has never been answered."

Continuing, Dr. Hawthorne spoke of the absurdity of licensing the saloon evil and regulating it, and asked why not regulate the gamblers and burglars.

LICENSE THE THIEF.

He said why not say to the thief you may prosecute your business of stealing except on Sundays. "A distinguished Southern statesman," he continued, "gave vent to his feelings upon this subject by saying that 'the womb of hell is too weak to bring forth anything worse than a legalized bar-room.' I wish he had said that out of the womb of hell there has never come anything worse than a license system, which makes the public schools of our country rest upon a foundation of bar-rooms."

In closing, Dr. Hawthorne said: "Gentlemen of the Constitutional Convention, some of you are far advanced in life. Some of you are drawing very near the close of your political career. There are veterans among you who are rendering their last service to the State in halls of legislation. Let me exhort these veterans to close their political life by giving their support to a measure—the Quarles-Barbour resolution—that will do more to promote the virtue, peace, happiness, and prosperity of the rising generation of Virginians than all else that is contemplated by the Convention.

"I envy your opportunity to bless and glorify this ancient Commonwealth. I envy your opportunity to discrown the wrong and diadem the right. I envy your opportunity to enlarge your spiritual treasure, to project yourselves into a distant future, and to win the eternal smile of God."

At the close of Dr. Hawthorne's address Rev. James Cannon, Jr., at the request of the Executive Committee, made a statement of the work of the League for the past year. He stated that the total indebtedness of the League to date was about $1,350, and asked for contributions to meet the same.

Rev. C. H. Crawford made a short statement, at the close of which he announced that he would give $500 of the amount. As a considerable portion of the indebtedness was balance due on salary of Mr. Crawford, it amounted to a reduction of his salary by $500. Of the balance of $850 about $650 was subscribed that night.

SECOND DAY.

The morning session opened with a devotional service, led by the Rev. Joel T. Tucker, pastor of the East-End Baptist church, of this city, and consisting of hymns and prayers to God for assistance in the work of the destruction of the saloon.

For a short time following notes from the field were heard, and short speeches from the workers. Several quite interesting talks were made. The Rev. Richard Ferguson said that he represented the Methodists of Middlesex county, where, he said, there is not a single saloon. Referring to the fight being made by the League before the Constitutional Convention, Mr. Ferguson said that he would not be disappointed if the League failed in getting the Quarles-Barbour resolution through. He wanted that if nothing better could be gotten, but he thought that the matter should be carried further. He was not in favor of giving people the option of voting on a matter which was absolutely bad. Hence he would shed no tears if the Convention would not favor the Barbour resolution.

Rev. Gustavus J. Suddith, of Longdale, followed next. He went into discussion of the work of the Anti-Saloon League and the merits of the saloon movement. He declared that the whiskey evil is entrenched in the ranks of the two political parties and in the law written in the statute books. He hoped that no man would vote the Democratic or the Republican ticket, but would stand firm in line with the Prohibitionists.

A hope was expressed by the Rev. Jas. E. Cook that politics would be kept out of the League. He objected to the reference of the preceding speaker to the political aspect of the temperance cause and the fact that members of the Anti-Saloon League were inconsistent in voting the Democratic or the Republican ticket and not the Prohibitionist. Mr. Cook said that, in all kindness, he felt constrained to state his objections to this view of the matter. The Anti-Saloon League, he said, should not ally itself with any political party, but should go into the field as a Christian body working against an evil. As soon as the League should see fit to dabble in politics then Mr. Cook said he would withdraw his name from its membership.

Mr. R. H. Beazley, editor of the South Boston News, said that there are a few saloons in South Boston, but the sentiment is strong against them. His only means of existence, said Mr. Beazley, is the publication of the South Boston News, yet he had never restrained his pen in fighting the whiskey traffic, and he had never suffered by it. A statement that he kept the columns of his paper closed to advertisements of saloon-keepers excited enthusiasm and applause.

RESOLUTIONS OFFERED.

Two sets of resolutions were offered, and were referred to the Committee on Resolutions. One set was presented by Dr. Winfrey, of Charlottesville, and is as follows:

Resolved, That the Executive Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia be requested to endeavor by correspondence during the present year:

1. To have every pastor of both races and of every denomination in the State preach at least one sermon on Christianity and the saloon.

2. To have all Sunday school superintendents make special effort to see that due emphasis is given to temperance lessons.

3. To have the press of the State invite a vigorous presentation of the aims and methods of the anti-saloon movement.

4. To have all teachers of public schools, presidents of colleges and principals of seminaries, academies and all other institutions of general culture, inaugurate a series of lessons or lectures on such topics as alcohol and health, alcohol and economics, alcohol and government.

The second set was offered by the Rev. James Cannon. It is as follows:

We, the members of the Anti-Saloon League, in Convention assembled, in order that the people of the State may thus better understand our purposes, adopt the following resolutions:

1. We will continue earnestly and persistently the campaign of agitation and education already begun, and strive to arouse and to band together in one great league all the forces desiring the economic and moral welfare of this historic Commonwealth.

2. We will use all proper means to influence the legislation of this State on this great question, by suggesting and urging the passage of such laws as will restrict the number and the influence of the saloons until we have accomplished our great aim—namely, the destruction of the legalized saloon.

3. That we hereby express our determination to use all legal means to aid officials in the enforcement of the laws as they exist, even to the employing of our own attorney in the various counties and cities of the State, and furthermore, we most emphatically assert that while as a League we will not join ourselves to any political party, Democratic, Republican or Prohibition, yet we are determined to use all our influence to secure the election of men who are known to be in favor of the destruction of the saloon, and who will enforce without fear or favor the laws restricting the liquor traffic. We believe that the time has come for the demand of the Legislature and executive officers of the State that their views be given more weight in the framing and execution of the laws of this State than the views of the brewers and saloon keepers.

4. That in a few words our motto is "The Saloon Must Go." Our methods are Agitation, Legislation and Law Enforcement.

5. That we pledge to our State Executive Committee our hearty co-operation in the plans they may make to carry out the great purpose of the League.

Interesting addresses followed by the Rev. F. M. Edwards, of Onancock, and the Rev. J. W. West, of Big Stone Gap. The latter thought that the temperance workers of the State could get anything they want in the way of laws if they would organize.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

The report of the superintendent of the League, submitted by the Rev. C. H. Crawford, showed there are now thirty-four Leagues in the State. Some of these are in a state of premature exhaustion, but for the most part the majority show a splendid vitality. There are now on record in the office of the League 17,000 names of Virginia people who have expressed an interest in the temperance movement. Reference is made to the fight for the Barbour-Quarles resolution, and it is set forth that the fight will be carried on with all vigor. Much more good could be accomplished, says the report, if more money were available. The report recommended the appointment of a committee to revise the constitution of the League in the respect of an increase in the Executive Committee from seven members to eleven members. With regard to the future policy of the League, the report recommends that the majority-signatures principle be made the rally cry of the temperance work here in Virginia until it is secured, either through the Constitutional Convention or the Legislature, applying to the whole State, both city and country, until it be through the length and breadth of the Commonwealth.

Quite an interesting discussion of the report followed, being engaged in by Dr. J. B. Hawthorne, the Rev. M. Ashby Jones, Judge Redd, and others. The sum total of the whole was that the temperance movement can be carried forward to a successful issue if the workers persevere in their efforts.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

The treasurer of the League, Dr. A. B. Greiner, submitted his report, showing the receipts of the League during the year to have been $1,783.86, and the disbursements, $1,755.18, leaving a balance of $28.68. The present indebtedness of the League amounts to $1,350.

The Committee on Revision of the Constitution, asked for in the report of the superintendent, was announced by the president, as follows: Dr. W. W. Lear, Dr. E. W. Winfrey, Captain W. J. Taylor, Rev. J. E. Cook and Professor J. T. Stinson.

A resolution, offered by the Rev. Jas. Cannon, was referred to the Committee on Resolutions:

"Whereas at this time there is a resolution before the Constitutional Convention known as the Quarles-Barbour resolution; and

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON V, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 2.

Text of the Lesson. Acts iv. 1-22.
Memory Verses. 8-10—Golden Text.
Acts iv. 12—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association.]

1, 2. "They preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead." It was this that they taught the people as they preached unto them repentance and remission of sins through Jesus Christ. It is not at death that the believer enters into the fullness of the benefits of redemption, but at the resurrection, for, although absent from the body and present with the Lord is a gain, and very far better, yet until the company of called out ones is completed, whether they are in heaven or on earth, all are waiting until Jesus shall come again; for that event will bring the resurrection of the just, not a resurrection of all the dead, but a resurrection of the righteous from among the rest of the dead, like the resurrection of Christ and of those saints who rose after Him (Matt. xxvii. 52, 53; Rev. xx. 5, 6).

3, 4. For their faithfulness to Christ and His doctrine Peter and John find themselves in prison; but, while they were for a time bound, they could rejoice that the word of God was not bound, and we rejoice to read that many who heard believed, and the number of the men was about 5,000. What a grand gathering from Israel to the glory of Israel's Messiah, for the gospel was not yet preached to the gentiles (chapter xi. 19). This great result was the work not of the apostles, but of Him who when on earth said on one occasion, "Give ye them to eat," and then used the apostles to feed the 5,000 with bread which He had provided.

5-7. "By what power or by what name have ye done this?" They asked Christ a similar question at one time (Matt. xxi. 23), but not for any good reason. Like some people today, they could not tolerate anything that did not proceed from themselves. But we must remember that all that is not of God shall come to naught (Isa. viii. 9, 10).

8-10. It thrills one to hear Peter declare to these rulers of the people that this work was wrought by Jesus of Nazareth, whom they had crucified, but whom God had raised from the dead. He knew that these men could kill him as they had killed Jesus, but he had no fear, for he was filled with the Spirit. It was a good deed which had been done to an impotent man, and it had been wrought by Him whom they delighted to own as Lord and Master, and they were His to be, His witnesses, and to die for Him if need be. In the latter part of this story (verses 29-31) they do not ask to be delivered from further persecution, but only that they may have boldness to speak His word and power to honor His name.

11, 12. "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders." Read here Gen. xlix. 24; Isa. viii. 14; xxviii. 16; Ps. cxviii. 22; Zech. iii. 9; iv. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 4-8, and see what a fruitful simile you have in this stone which so wonderfully speaks of Christ. Read also Dan. ii. 44, 45, and be sure that you are in the Rock and drinking from it (Ex. xxxiii. 22; Isa. xxvi. 4, margin; 1 Cor. x. 4). There is no other foundation and no other salvation (1 Cor. iii. 11; Isa. xlv. 22). They were familiar with the words "God is my salvation" (Isa. xlii. 2; Ex. xv. 2; Ps. cxviii. 14), but they (these rulers) would not accept Jesus as God. They were ignorant of God's righteousness and going about to establish their own, which in God's sight was only filthy rags (Rom. x. 4; Isa. xlv. 6).

13, 14. "They took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." Like their Master, they had not been taught in the schools. They had not the wisdom of man, but they had wisdom and power which man could not give them. The power of Christ manifest in us is the strongest kind of preaching, and when they saw it not only in the apostles, but in this poor, helpless beggar, they could say nothing against, though in their hearts they hated it, for they were but men, and the carnal mind is enemy against God. Paul so coveted the power of Christ that He would glory in infirmities if only the power of Christ might rest upon him (11 Cor. xii. 9).

15-17. "What shall we do to these men?" Having sent the apostles aside, they confer among themselves as a council on this to them important matter, and they determine that any more of such work as the healing of this impotent man in the name of Jesus must not be tolerated. Why do they imagine a vain thing and take counsel against the Lord? He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh. The Lord shall have them in derision (1's. ii. 1-4). Their counsel is vain, their purposes against the Lord shall surely be frustrated, for "every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" (Jer. ii. 29; see also Isa. xiv. 24). Think of mortal man determining that the work of the Lord God Almighty shall spread no farther! How plainly visible is the one behind the scene, the devil, who would, if he could, dethrone God, and who will before his final overthrow gather the nations against God (Rev. xix. 19).

18-20. "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." This is their reply to the command not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus, and this command was from the foremost religious people of the day, with the high priest at their head, whose lips should keep knowledge and who ought to have been the messenger of the Lord of Hosts (Mal. ii. 7). Let any one now preach the whole truth concerning the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the righteous, the restoration of Israel, no kingdom till Jesus comes, etc., and he will not fail to find prominent religious rulers who will if possible stop that kind of teaching.

21, 22. With some further threatening they were let go without punishment because the people were all glorifying God for that which was done. So they went to their own company of believers and told all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them, and with one accord they lifted up their voices to God, the creator of all things, and told Him all and left it with Him, asking only for boldness to speak His word and that through them He would honor His name. The Lord's answer was to shake the place and fill them again with His Spirit and cause them to speak boldly, as they had desired (verses 23 to 31). Believing that they were on earth for God, they feared not the face of man. Like Abram, who, being blessed by the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth, he wanted no favors of the king of Sodom; like Zerubbabel, who feared not the adversaries and took no help from them (Gen. xiv. 22, 23; Ex. iv. 1-3).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 2, "Time For Refreshment."
Text, Mark vi. 30-44.

Tension of mind and soul as well as of muscle needs relaxation to maintain strength and health. Quietness and rest must alternate with activity if we would keep up our power of doing well. Jesus took the disciples apart into a quiet place frequently after He had become worn with teaching and healing. We must have time for thought and feeling as well as hours for practical labor.

In too many Christian lives there is no time given to this essential thing. The "quiet hour" is coming to be recognized as of great value. Let all our young people plan so as to get some time each day to be alone and think a little while. Those who work hard and long in shop, in store, in school or home, on farm or in factory find few minutes of leisure in all the working hours. Many homes have no nooks where there is any privilege of privacy. But ingenuity will always find some place and some time when the pressure of care and ordinary toil can be laid by and the heart can quiet itself for a little talk with Jesus.

How precious these little breathing spaces become as we grow accustomed to use them! At first we may adopt the custom from a sense of duty, but soon we get to looking forward to the hour and planning for it with eager anticipation.

What do you do? How characteristic that is of our busy, rushing life to ask about doing! Why, just do nothing in particular. Sit still a few minutes. Think how good God has been today. What kindness to give health, friends, home, work, food, and so run over the blessings we have had so freely! What privilege to be now alive in God's world; to realize Jesus as present in spirit as truly as He was on the shores of Galilee with the returning disciples! How He talked with them of their work! Talk with me, blessed Lord, of my work, of Thy work! Have I done my work well today for Thy sake? How can I do it better tomorrow? Does it make any difference to Thee how I do my tasks? Help me, then, to do all cheerfully, faithfully. Am I weary, troubled, anxious, let me feel Thy arms of everlasting love folding me around. If Thou dost love me and help me, I can do all so much more gladly and well.

A few passages from the Bible, a verse or two of a hymn, some sentences from a book of devotion, a few minutes on the knees, some words or thoughts of prayer—any or all of these, and whatever else is simple and natural and brings the heart into peace and the quiet contentment and restfulness of God is the right thing for this "quiet time."

On all convention programmes we place some announcement of "refreshments." Why should we not make our daily programme of work to include some place and time for the soul refreshment?

Do not make the mistake of letting any other person share this time with you. Conversation is good in its place, but not in this place. Counsel and consult with others as you can, but never let any one intrude on the time of silence and conference with Jesus. "Come apart awhile."

"Enter into your closet and pray to your Father in secret."

Cultivate the art of quiet meditation if you would be strong and happy in Christ.

Truth First.

The truth is worth more than the man. The more truly a man pursues truth for truth's sake the more does he lose sight of himself in gaining sight of the truth. Many an investigator is more disturbed about his own priority than he is about the priority of the value of the truth. Few finer things could be said of any discoverer than what has been said of the eminent physicist Helmholtz, "He never indulged in one of those reclamations of priority into which scientific vanity is sure to be betrayed, but several times published notes to show that his own results were not so new as he and the scientific world had believed them to be." When the world is doing homage to one whom it acknowledges as its great master in science, what grim delight must be find in reminding his admirers that the truth is first, even though it compel them to regard him as second! Yet this is the true spirit, not alone for the distinguished scientist, but for every plain, obscure man, woman and child. Truth first.—American Friend.

The Test of Jesus.

King Jesus has a test for the loyalty of His followers which towers above every test. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Words will not answer with Him who looks upon the heart, where, concealed from mortal gaze, lie the springs of action. It is not the providence of the believer to judge a fellow Christian in respect of motive, but it is a privilege to discern fruits. Men do not gather grapes from thorn bushes nor figs from thistles.—Christian Herald.

The Discipline of Prayer.

What is prayer for? Not to inform God or to move Him, unwillingly, to have mercy, as if, like some proud prince, He required a certain amount of recognition of His greatness as the price of His favor, but to fit our own hearts by conscious need and the true desire and dependence to receive the gift which He is ever willing to give, but we are not always ready to receive.—Alexander MacLaren.

Divine Kindness.

If gracious kindness God bestows
 On those who act against His will,
 More surely kind He'll be to those Who strive His bidding to fulfill.
 —Rev. Isidor Myers, From The Talmud.

SOME OF RUM'S DANGERS.

Tendency to Transmit Passion For Drink a Menace to Mankind.

It is needless to enter into details as to the consequences entailed by over-indulgence in the use of alcohol. Most of us are familiar with cases of ruined lives and wretched homes as the result of the fatal habit, and it is becoming more and more common, says the Westminster Review. Mental worry, overwork, ill health, want of sufficient nourishment and clothing tend to swell the number of chronic alcoholists, and the habit so easily acquired is extremely difficult to relinquish.

The real danger to the race, however, lies in the fact that the great majority of inebriates need no incentive to acquire the habit. They are born with the tendency, and it is to this cause chiefly that we must ascribe the increase in the number of deaths from chronic alcoholism during the last twenty-three years. A reference to the table of statistics shows that in 1875 twenty-seven persons in a million died as the result of chronic alcoholism. In 1898 these figures had more than doubled themselves, the number then being returned as sixty-five in a million of population.

The following quotations point to the conclusion arrived at by some of the most eminent men of the day:

"Heredity as a causation is estimated to be present in nearly 60 per cent of all cases of chronic alcoholism."

"There are not a few human beings so saturated with the taint of alcoholic heredity that they could as soon 'turn back a flowing river from the sea' as arrest the march of an attack of alcoholism."

Much that has been said respecting insanity applies equally to inebriety. Both belong to the group of diseases of the nervous system, showing a marked tendency to degeneration, and both are liable to be transmitted hereditarily.

"NOT MRS. NATION, BUT"—

A Pathetic Incident That Took Place In a Hotel Barroom.

"I am not Mrs. Nation; I have no hatchet; I am not crazy." These words came from the lips of a Lewes woman as she met her husband face to face in a hotel barroom the other evening, says the Lewes Pilot.

They were directed to the bartender and the loungers as the former handed the woman's husband a glass of whiskey. She continued:

"That man has not done a day's work this winter, and I am worn out trying to support him and the rest of the family. I want to know if something cannot be done to keep him from destroying his own life and starving his family."

The woman was thin and pale. Her lips quivered as she spoke. Her frail body could hardly stand the strain of the unfamiliar environment. As she finished the little girl by her side burst into tears. The bartender took back the whisky. The abashed husband stood with bowed head. One by one the loungers left the room. Presently the bartender, gazing at the poor woman, solemnly vowed that the man should not drink at his bar again.

It was a pathetic scene. It was the last resort of a desperate woman. As she left the hotel with her husband and the little girl there was a lesson too painful for any pen to picture.

A Faulty Candidate.

A young man who had failed in his examination for admission to the marine corps appealed to Secretary Long, hoping he might in some way secure the coveted position. The secretary said to him: "How do you expect to get along in the world when you smoke so many cigarettes? Your clothes are saturated with their odor. Pull off your glove and let me see your fingers. There, see how yellow they are." While the young man was collecting himself to make reply the secretary asked him if he drank. "Once in awhile," was his answer. It is enough to say that the young man failed to secure his longed for position.—Antislavery Herald

Effects of Raines Law.

The Raines law of New York state during the four and a half years of its existence has brought about a decrease of 6,307 in the places where liquor is sold and a decrease in the number of arrests for drunkenness of from one in nine of the population to one in twelve.

A Tumbler of Claret.

"A friend" in the loneliest hours, "a companion" I called the red wine, And sometimes I poetized slightly and called it "a nectar divine," But today as I gazed on the claret that sparkled and glowed in the sun I asked it: "What have you done for me that any true friend would have done?"

"You have given me some pleasant feelings, but they always were followed by pain. You have given me hundreds of headaches and are ready to do it again; You set my blood leaping and bounding, which, though pleasant, was hurtful, no doubt, And if I keep up the acquaintance I am sure you will give me the gout."

"I remember a certain occasion when you caused me to act like a fool, And, yes, I remember another when you made me fall into a pool. And where is Tom Smither? You killed him! Will Howard you made a poor knave; Both my friends—and I might count a dozen—you have sent to prison or grave."

"Is this a loyal friend's treatment, and are you deserving the name? Say, what do you give those who love you but poverty, sorrow and shame? A few paltry moments of pleasure, an age of trouble and grief. No wonder you blush in the sunlight, you robber, you liar, you thief!"

"I'll have nothing more to do with you from this moment, this hour, this day. To send you adrift bag and baggage I know is the only safe way." And I poured out that tumbler of claret—poured it out and not down on the spot, And all this, you see, was accomplished by just a few moments of thought.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONVENTION.

Whereas it is proper and fit that this Convention should express its views on that subject;

"Resolved, 1. That we urge upon the members of the Constitutional Convention the insertion of such a clause in the new Constitution, believing that this question is of as great general importance as any before the Convention, and therefore properly the subject of constitutional enactment.

"2. That if the objection be urged that such a provision will endanger the adoption of the new Constitution, we assert our willingness as a Convention that this provision shall be submitted as a separate clause, to be voted upon separately by the same electorate as shall vote upon the rest of the Constitution."

At this juncture Dr. Hawthorne stated to the Convention that he had arranged to have the address delivered by him last night printed in pamphlet form, and that he would be glad to distribute copies among the members.

Dr. H. E. Johnson asked Dr. Hawthorne to strike out that sentence in the address which declares that there is no need of a Prohibition party. He thought this expression would be misunderstood.

In reply to this Dr. Hawthorne said that he meant by the statement that he would not approve of any politics in the Anti-Saloon League. He wanted the League to work as a Christian party, and not ally itself with the Prohibitionists or any other party.

"If the League goes into politics," said Dr. Hawthorne, "I will withdraw draw from it."

After some further speaking the Convention adjourned.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

The afternoon session opened with devotional exercises, led by the Rev. James E. Cook, pastor of Hoge-Memorial Presbyterian church, of this city.

The Committee on Revision of the Constitution, through its chairman, Dr. W. W. Lear, submitted a report, recommending several changes. The sections amended were taken up, discussed and adopted seriatim. In the first place, Article VI was revised so as to separate the office of secretary and treasurer, constituting two offices instead. Some change was made in the various departments of the League work. The department of law enforcement was abolished, and those of agitation and press were combined, making in all three departments, as follows: Legislation, finance, and press committee. The membership of the Executive Committee was reconstructed so as to consist of the president, the secretary, the treasurer and seven members of the Board of Directors. With these exceptions the old Constitution was recommended, and was unanimously adopted as a whole as the Constitution of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia.

MR. CANNON'S ADDRESS.

A highly interesting address on "The National Anti-Saloon League Convention" was delivered by the Rev. James Cannon, of Blackstone.

The speaker traced the history of the League movement from its inception eight years ago to the present, showing its wonderful growth in that short time. The League had originated in the city of Washington, and it was upon the lines of this original organization that the national body was based. Mr. Cannon gave an account of the sixth national Convention of the Anti-Saloon League in Washington, in which thirty-nine States were represented. There were 250 temperance organizations, who elected representatives to the Convention, of which nearly 100 were national bodies.

Mr. Cannon spoke of the systematic efforts of the leading foreign countries, especially Germany, Great Britain and France, to prevent or reduce the consumption of liquors. He contrasted the facts as drawn from official reports and utterances in those countries, showing the injurious effects of beer and wines on the workingmen and mechanics of those countries with the claims so commonly made in this country that drunkenness did not prevail there, though drinking was common. The statements of Emperor William, of Premier Waldeck-Rousseau, and of Lord Rosebery were quoted to show that the evils of drink had grown so in those countries as to demand remedial legislation.

Mr. Cannon discussed the underlying elements in the work of the Anti-Saloon League, declaring that it was an organization of all opposed to the saloon, banded together as citizens, not as politicians, as Methodists or Baptists, Democrats or Republicans. He referred to the argument against the League, that it had no right to curtail the personal liberty of individuals by saying that they shall not drink whiskey. Mr. Cannon declared that the personal liberty of the opponent to the whiskey traffic is as much a matter for consideration as the personal liberty of the drunkard. The saloon, he said, is a menace to the public peace, the home life, etc., and the citizens have a perfect right to demand of the State that it be abolished. The sympathizers in the temperance cause are entirely within their rights when they rebel against being taxed for the support of a thing which they regard as the greatest curse upon earth. The League must demand legislation which will make the conduct of a saloon a crime to make the saloon-keeper a legal and moral outlaw. He is a moral outlaw now, said Mr. Cannon.

Mr. Cannon referred to a statement attributed to a prominent liquor-dealer that the best way to fight prohibition movements was to buy up the newspapers. Apparently accepting this statement, the speaker complained that the secular press was nowhere advocating the Quarles-Barbour resolution.

"The League should make active effort to enlist the press on its side," said Mr. Cannon. Incidentally, he undertook to take the press to task. He said that the Associated Press had given reports of the various meetings in Washington until it came to the National Anti-Saloon League Convention, which it dismissed with a paragraph.

The speaker declared that one of the features of the convention at Washington was the complete refutation of

Religious News.

Dr. Huntington, of Nebraska, and Lieut.-Gov. Bates, of Massachusetts, have been appointed fraternal delegates from the M. E. Church to our General Conference in Dallas, Texas, next May.

Ashland, Va., Jan. 18.—Dr. John S. Bassett, of Trinity College, N. C., delivered a lecture on "History in the South" in the chapel here to-night under the auspices of the Historical Society of the college. The lecture was especially arranged by Dr. Dodd, of the chair of history, to commemorate Lee's birthday, which will be similarly observed each recurring anniversary.

MISS PARRISH'S SUCCESSOR.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Randolph-Macon Woman's College held a meeting on yesterday for the purpose of considering the resignation of Miss C. S. Parrish and the election of her successor. The meeting was called to order by the chairman, Major C. V. Winfree. Miss Parrish appeared before the committee, and, after stating her reasons for resigning, requested that the resignation be accepted, to take effect on the 1st of February. The committee accepted Miss Parrish's resignation, and elected as her successor in the chair of Psychology and Pedagogy, Dr. Wilmot B. Lane, at present a professor in Mount Union College, Ohio.

Dr. Lane is a graduate of the University of Toronto, Canada, having taken his degree there, and along with it the prize in the Department of Philosophy. For several sessions afterwards, up to and including the session of 1895-'96, he continued his studies in philosophy and pedagogy, and won prizes in both classes. He was appointed examiner in philosophy by the University of Toronto, and then spent a year in Cornell as an honorary fellow in Psychology, and was appointed assistant in Psychology in the Cornell summer school. His psychology laboratory work is particularly recommended by Dr. Tichener, head of that department at Cornell. Dr. Lane was shortly afterwards elected to a fellowship at the University of Wisconsin, where he continued his philosophical and pedagogical studies, and there took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Since leaving the University of Wisconsin, he has been professor of Philosophy and Pedagogy in Mount Union College, Ohio.

Testimonials submitted by Dr. Lane are from the highest sources, and the endorsements which he received from distinguished educators are unqualified. Dr. Tichener refers to Dr. Lane's wide training and his capacity for work, and states that he has marked individuality and originality in research, and shows a profound grasp of his subject. Dr. Tichener also says that Dr. Lane is a good speaker.

Dr. Ball, of Princeton University, says: "Dr. Lane made a very brilliant record under me at Toronto, and has since carried his graduate studies to high proficiency. His influence will be on the side of all that is high and good. As a student, I expect from him brilliant contributions in his chosen lines."

Dr. Charles Burwash, of the Victoria University, says: "I have had an ample opportunity of judging of his scholarship and ability. We have had few men who could rank with him in his subject. He is at the same time an earnest Christian man, wielding a good influence in his college life, and he is endowed with a disposition and manner which make him an agreeable associate in his work."

Dr. Riker, president of Mount Union College, the institution which Dr. Lane will leave to come here, speaks of Dr. Lane as a man of extraordinary capacity, and states that if they could pay him the salary he deserves they would never consent to part with him. "You can make no mistake in electing him," says Dr. Riker, in conclusion.

It will thus be seen that the Randolph-Macon Woman's College has secured a man who, after taking his college degree in the year 1893, with special rank in philosophy, devoted seven years to a diligent study of this department at the best universities, including three years in psychological laboratory work. At the Mount Union College, he had charge of the Department of Philosophy and Pedagogy.

The selection of Dr. Lane shows that the authorities of the Woman's College are determined to continue their policy of securing only the highest talent to fill the various chairs of the institution. Dr. Lane will reach Lynchburg on January 31st, and he will, of course, receive a warm and hearty welcome from the people of Lynchburg, all of whom will wish him great success in his work here.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Reid, of Korea, who has been a missionary to China for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for seventeen years, delivered a talk on Chinese characteristics yesterday morning at Emmanuel church. Rev. J. O. Knott, pastor, McCulloch and Presstman streets. Rev. Dr. Reid reached Baltimore Saturday. He will leave today for Washington.

Dr. Reid was transferred about four years ago from Central China to Korea. He was sent out last July, after an absence of two years, and found that in China and Japan great changes have taken place. He said yesterday that in Japan big revival movements have been started, and that since last May 10,000 converts have been made. Four thousand were recorded in Tokio in one month. Mr. John R. Mott, of the student volunteer movement, made a tour of the island kingdom recently, and preached to more than 12,000 students in the government schools, 1,500 converts being made, although Mr. Mott did not stay over a month.

In China, says Dr. Reid, the conditions have also improved. The missionary commended the action of his fellow-workers in the field in declining to demand an indemnity. This, he said, would only have embittered the Chinese, as the government officials would have squeezed the money out of the Christian converts and those favorable to them. Moreover, the Chinese themselves are sorry for the recent troubles, he says, and are doing all in their power to make amends. For this reason the missions will have a very smooth road in the future.

Dr. Reid further says a splendid Christian university is to be established at Ti-Yuan-Fu, where so many missionaries and converts were massacred. It is to cost 500,000 taels, or more than $500,000.

Dr. Reid spoke again last night at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church, South, Fayette street, near Carrollton avenue. An interesting feature of the service was a "question box," conducted by Rev. J. T. Meyer, missionary of the Southern Methodist Church at Kyoto, Japan. He is a Baltimorean, and is now here on a leave of absence.

Rev. Dr. Reid was the guest during the day of Bishop Wilson, 2408 Madison avenue.—Sun.

The Methodist preachers' meeting was well attended yesterday morning, every pastor in the three cities and vicinity being present, except three. The session was called to order by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, and prayer was made by Rev. J. B. Merritt.

The report of the committee on union services to be held at the various Methodist churches in the three cities was, by resolution of Rev. E. H. Rawlings, somewhat modified, and then referred to an executive committee, consisting of Revs. W. R. Proctor, R. H. Bennett and E. H. Rawlings, to bring in a new report at the next meeting. This committee is authorized to select the churches in which the meetings are to be held and to provide the preachers who are to conduct the services from time to time as long as the meetings are held.

Rev. C. L. Bane announced the death of the Rev. William F. Bain, a superannuated member of the Virginia Conference, at his home, in Charlottesville, Va., last Friday.

Rev. J. B. Merritt stated that the Rev. Mr. Steele, who was chaplain of a seamen's Bethel in New Orleans for seven years, and afterwards connected in a similar capacity with the United States navy, but now of Hampton, Va., was in the city for the purpose of establishing a club or rest for United States naval sailors here, and that he desired to form an advisory board, composed of one layman from each of the churches, to take the matter up with him and formulate a plan for the establishment of such a home for sailors. Mr. Merritt said that he had sent a request through him to the preachers' meeting, asking that they make such an appointment from the Methodist churches. The meeting unanimously recommended Mr. W. W. Vicar for membership on said board.

The call of the churches was taken up, and the following were heard from:

Rev. J. B. Merritt, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel, went his usual rounds Sunday, and had most interesting services.

Huntersville—Rev. H. C. Cheatham had a fairly good day and interesting services. He reported a large improvement in the Sunday school, and this was one of the strongest features in the church. The spiritual interest at the Epworth League meetings was fine.

Centenary—Rev. E. T. Dadmun had fine congregations to hear him Sunday.

In the morning he preached in the interest of "Home Missions."

Lekies' Memorial—Rev. Graham H. Lambeth reported a growing interest in the Sunday school along all lines. He preached morning and night to large congregations. At the morning service there were forty-two of the smaller Sunday school children present. He received two on profession of faith.

Monumental—Rev. Dr. Smith preached to a very large congregation on home missions Sunday morning, and the pastor, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, preached at night.

Lambert's Point—Rev. C. H. McGhee taught a Bible class in the Sunday school. He reported the addition of several new scholars. He preached to large congregations at the regular services; held an interesting prayer meeting in the afternoon. He received one new member by certificate.

Rev. Ernest Stevens reported the Sunday school at Owens' Memorial growing. He preached to a large congregation at the morning service and a fair-sized one at night, and received two by certificate into the church.

Park View—Rev. J. N. Latham had a good day, with interesting and profitable services. Captain E. V. White and wife contributed $150 toward the recent improvements on the church edifice.

Rev. R. H. Bennett attended the Sunday school at Epworth in the morning; preached at the 11 o'clock service; spoke at two Epworth League meetings, and preached at the Memorial church, Berkley, at night.

Queen Street—Rev. J. K. Jolliff reported a very large and interesting Sunday school, and preached to two of the largest congregations during his pastorate. The service at night was one of special interest. He reported several additions to the Sunday school.

Epworth—Dr. Smith preached at night to a large congregation, and received one member by certificate.

Port Norfolk—Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had a full day and large congregations. Rev. W. C. Vaden preached a very helpful sermon at night.

Wright-Memorial—Rev. George H. McFaden had a good Sunday school; preached at 11 A. M. for his own congregation and at Cottage Place in the afternoon. At night he preached a special sermon before the Jr. O. U. A. M. He reported his Sunday school as growing in interest and members.

Cumberland Street—Rev. C. L. Bane attended the Sunday school and Epworth League meeting in the afternoon; preached at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. to two of the largest congregations during his pastorate here. At the evening service every seat in the edifice was occupied. He preached the third of the series of sermons on Bible characters, taking as his theme, "Cain, the Slayer of His Brother."

Rev. D. J. Traynham, of Norfolk Circuit, preached at Beach Grove Sunday morning at Jolliff's at night.

Rev. Dr. S. S. Lambeth and Rev. N. R. Smith, of Oaklett and Bethel, exchanged pulpits Sunday morning.

Rev. W. P. Jordan attended the Methodist Sunday school at Park Place

WASHINGTON. —In this discourse Dr. Talmage shows how any one can be widely and forever recollected and cheers despondent Christian workers; texts, Job xxiv, 20, "He shall be no more remembered," and Psalm xliv, 6, "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance."

Of oblivion and its defeats I speak today. There is an old monster that swallows down everything. It crunches individuals, families, communities, states, nations, continents, hemispheres, worlds. Its diet is made up of years, of centuries, of ages, of cycles, of millenniums, of eons. That monster is called by Noah Webster and all the other dictionaries "Oblivion." It is a steep down which everything rolls. It is a conflagration in which everything is consumed. It is a dirge which all orchestras play and a period at which everything stops. It is the cemetery of the human race. It is the domain of forgetfulness. Oblivion! At times it throws a shadow over all of us, and I would not pronounce it today if I did not come armed in the strength of the eternal God on your behalf to attack it, to route it, to demolish it.

Why, just look at the way the families of the earth disappear. For awhile they are together, inseparable, and to each other indispensable, and then they part, some by marriage going to establish other homes, and some leave this life, and a century is long enough to plant a family, develop it, prosper it and obliterate it. So the generations vanish. Walk up Pennsylvania avenue, Washington; Broadway, New York; State street, Boston; Chestnut street, Philadelphia; the Strand, London; Princess street, Edinburgh; Champs Elysees, Paris; Unter den Linden, Berlin, and you will meet in this year 1901 not one person who walked there in the year 1801. What engulfment. All the ordinary efforts at perpetuation are dead failures. Walter Scott's Old Mortality may go round with his chisel to recut the faded epitaphs on tombstones, but Old Oblivion has a quicker chisel, with which he can cut out a thousand epitaphs while Old Mortality is cutting in one epitaph. Whole libraries of biographies devoured of bookworms or unread of the rising generations. All the signs of the stores and warehouses of great firms have changed, unless the grandsons think that it is an advantage to keep the old sign up because the name of the ancestor was more commendatory than the name of the descendant. The city of Rome, Italy, stands today, but dig down deep enough and you come to another Rome, buried, and go down still farther and you will find a third Rome. Jerusalem stands today, but dig down deep enough and you will find a Jerusalem underneath, and go on and deeper down a third Jerusalem.

A Hundred Years Hence.

Call the roll of the armies of Baldwin I. or of Charles Martel or of Marlborough or of Mithridates or of Prince Frederick or of Cortes, and not one answer will you hear. Stand them in line and call the roll of the 1,000,000 men in the army of Thebes. Not one answer. Stand them in line, the 1,700,000 infantry and the 200,000 cavalry of the Assyrian army under Ninus, and call the roll. Not one answer. Stand in line the 1,000,000 men of Sesostris, the 1,200,000 men of Artaxerxes at Cunaxa, the 2,641,000 men under Xerxes at Thermopylae and call the long roll. Not one answer. At the opening of our civil war the men of the northern and southern armies were told that if they fell in battle their names would never be forgotten by their country. Out of the million men who fell in battle or died in military hospitals you cannot call the names of a thousand nor the names of 500 nor the names of 100 nor the names of fifty. Oblivion!

In some old family record a descendant studying up the ancestral line may spell out our name and from the faded ink with great effort find that some person by our name was born somewhere in the nineteenth century, but they will know no more about us than we know about the color of a child's eyes born last night in a village in Patagonia. Tell me something about your great-grandfather. What were his features? What did he do? What year was he born? What year did he die? And your great-grandmother? Will you describe the style of the hat she wore, and how did she and your great-grandfather get on in each other's companionship? Was it March weather or June? Oblivion! That mountain surge rolls over everything. Even the pyramids are dying. Not a day passes but there is chiseled off a chip of that granite. The sea is triumphing over the land, and what is going on at our Atlantic coast is going on all around the world, and the continents are crumbling into the waves. And while this is transpiring on the outside of the world, the hot chisel of the internal fire is digging under the foundation of the earth and cutting its way out toward the surface. It surprises me to hear people say they do not think the world will finally be burned up when all scientists will tell you that it has for ages been on fire.

We Like to Be Remembered.

Why, there is only a crust between us and the furnaces inside raging to get out. Oblivion! The world itself will roll into it as easily as a school-boy's india rubber ball rolls down a hill, and when our world goes it is so interlocked by the law of gravitation with other worlds that they will go, too, and so far from having our memory perpetuated by a monument of Aberdeen granite in this world there is no world in sight of our strongest telescope that will be a sure pediment for any slab of commemoration of the fact that we ever lived or died at all. Our earth is struck with death. The axletree of the constellations will break and let down the populations of other worlds. Stellar, lunar, solar, mortality. Oblivion! It can swallow and will swallow whole galaxies of worlds as easily as a crocodile takes down a frog.

Yet oblivion does not remove or swallow anything that had better not be removed or swallowed. The old monster is welcome to his meal. This world would long ago have been overcrowded if not for the merciful removal of nations and generations. What if all the books had lived that were ever written and printed and published? The libraries would by their immensity have obstructed intelligence and made all research impossible. The fatal epidemic of books was a merciful epidemic. Many of the state and national libraries today are only morgues, in which dead books are waiting for some one to come and recognize them. What if all the people that had been born were still alive? We would have been elbowed by our ancestors of ten centuries ago, and people who ought to have said their last word three thousand years ago would snarl at us, saying, "What are you doing here?" There would have been no room to turn around. Some of the past generations of mankind were not worth remembering. The first useful thing that many people did was to die; their cradle a misfortune and their grave a boon.

In all the Pantheon the weakest goddess is Clio, the goddess of history, and instead of being represented by sculptors as holding a scroll might better be represented as limping on crutches. Faithful history is the saving of a few things out of more things lost. The immortality that comes from pomp of obsequies or granite shaft or building named after its founder or page of recognition in some encyclopedia is an immortality unworthy of one's ambition, for it will cease and is no immortality at all. Oblivion! A hundred years. But while I recognize this universal submergence of things earthly, who wants to be forgotten? Not one of us. Absent for a few weeks or months from home, it cheers us to know that we are remembered there. It is a phrase we have all pronounced, "I hope you missed me." Meeting some friends from whom we have been parted many years we inquire, "Did you ever see me before?" And they say, "Yes," and call us by name, and we feel a delightful sensation thrilling through their hand into our hand and running up from elbow to shoulder and then parting, the one current of delight ascending to the brow and the other descending to the foot, moving round and round in concentric circles until every nerve and muscle and capacity of body and mind and soul is permeated with delight.

Good Lives Forever.

Now, I have to tell you that this oblivion of which I have spoken has its defeats, and there is no more reason why we should not be distinctly and vividly and gloriously remembered five hundred million billion trillion quadrillion quintillion years from now than that we should be remembered six weeks. I am going to tell you how the thing can be done and will be done.

We may build this "everlasting remembrance," as my text styles it, into the supernal existence of those to whom we do kindnesses in this world. You must remember that this infirm and treacherous faculty which we now call memory is in the future state to be complete and perfect. "Everlasting remembrance!" Nothing will slip the stout grip of that celestial faculty. Did you help a widow pay her rent? Did you find for that man released from prison a place to get honest work? Did you pick up a child, fallen on the curbstone, and by a stick of candy put in his hand stop the hurt on his scratched knee? Did you assure a business man, swamped by the stringency of the money market, that times would after awhile be better? Did you lead a Magdalen of the street into a midnight mission, where the Lord said to her: "Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more?" Did you tell a man, clear discouraged in his waywardness and hopeless and plotting suicide, that for him was nearby a laver, in which he might wash and a coronet of eternal blessedness he might wear?

What are epitaphs in graveyards, what are eulogiums in presence of those whose breath is in their nostrils, what are unread biographies in the alcoves of a city library, compared with the imperishable records you have made in the illumined memories of those to whom you did such kindnesses? Forget them? They cannot forget them. Notwithstanding all their might and splendor, there are some things the glorified of heaven cannot do, and this is one of them. They cannot forget an earthly kindness done. They have no cutlass to part that cable. They have no strength to hurl into oblivion that benefaction. Has Paul forgotten the inhabitants of Malta, who extended the island hospitality when he and others with him had felt, added to a shipwreck, the drenching rain and the sharp cold? Has the victim of the highwayman on the road to Jericho forgotten the good Samaritan with a medicament of oil and wine and a free ride to the hostelry? Have the English soldiers who went up to God from the Crimean battlefields forgotten Florence Nightingale? Through all eternity will the northern and southern soldiers forget the northern and southern women who administered to the dying boys in blue and gray after the awful fights in Tennessee and Pennsylvania and Virginia and Georgia, which turned every house and barn and shed into a hospital and incarnadined the Susquehanna and the James and the Chattahoochee and the Savannah with brave blood? The kindnesses you do to others will stand as long in the appreciation of others as the gates of heaven will stand, as the "house of many mansions" will stand, as long as the throne of God will stand.

Oblivion Defeated.

Another defeat of Oblivion will be found in the character of those whom we rescue, uplift or save. Character is eternal. Suppose by a right influence we aid in transforming a bad man into a good man, a dolorous man into a happy man, a disheartened man into a courageous man, every stroke of that work done will be immortalized. There may never be so much as one line in a newspaper regarding it or no mortal tongue may ever whisper it into human ear, but wherever that soul shall go your work upon it shall go, wherever that soul rises your work on it will rise, and so long as that soul will last your work on it will last. Do you suppose there will ever come such an idiotic lapse in the history of that soul in heaven that it shall forget that you invited him to Christ; that you, by prayer or gospel work, turned him round from the wrong way to the right way? No such insanity will ever smite a heavenly citizen. It is not half as well on earth known that Christopher Wren planned and built St. Paul's as it will be known in all heaven that you were the instrumentality of building a temple for the sky. We teach a Sabbath class, or put a Christian tract in the hand of a passerby, or testify for Christ in a prayer meeting, or preach a sermon, and go home discouraged, as though nothing had been accomplished, when we had been character building with a material that no frost or earthquake or rolling of the centuries can damage or bring down.

There is no sublimer art on earth than architecture. With pencil and rule and compass, the architect sits down alone and in silence and evolves from his own brain a cathedral or a national capitol or a massive home before he leaves that table, and then he goes out and unrolls his plans and calls carpenters and masons and artisans of all sorts to execute his design, and when it is finished he walks around the vast structure and sees the completion of the work with high satisfaction, and on a stone at some corner of the building the architect's name may be chiseled. But the storms do their work, and time, that takes down everything, will yet take down that structure until there shall not be one stone left upon another. But there is a soul in heaven. Through your in-in the morning, and worshipped at the Presbyterian church at the regular services.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

Central—Rev. W. T. Green reported a good Sunday school and preached to fine congregations morning and night. He received two on profession of faith.

Liberty Street—Rev. Dr. Lambeth said the spiritual condition of his church was very fine, and everything moving along harmoniously, and the year's outlook is very hopeful.

McKendree—Rev. W. R. Proctor reported a most interesting day and large congregations to hear him.—Virginian-Pilot.

The Rev. Ernest Stevens, the earnest and impressive pastor of Owens' Memorial church, was greeted Sunday with congratulations of such number that he must have felt inspired, the two sermons being delivered in a manner that can but redound to the good of the people who heard him and the church generally.—Landmark.

The Christian Thought Club convened in its semi-annual session in the pastor's study of Epworth church yesterday at 12 o'clock, with Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith presiding in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary, Rev. G. W. Jones. After some preliminary business, the paper appointed for the day was read by Rev. C. H. McGhee, being a review of the book of Dr. George Adam Smith, professor of Old Testament language and literature in Glasgow College, entitled, "Modern Criticism and the Preaching of the Old Testament."

Mr. McGhee's paper was exhaustive and carefully prepared, and was much enjoyed by the members of the club. A general discussion of the subject, which was interesting and profitable, followed. The club will meet again on Monday next, at which time Rev. E. H. Rawlings, of Monumental church, will read a paper on "Higher Criticism and the Preacher."—Virginian-Pilot.

The reception given to Rev. E. T. Dadmun, pastor of the Centenary Methodist church, and his accomplished wife, by the Epworth League of that charge, last night, was one of the most delightful and enjoyable events that has, in all probability, ever transpired in the history of that church and congregation. The lecture room was thronged with visitors, representing not only the members of that congregation, but those from other Methodist churches in this city. Preceding the formal reception of Mr. and Mrs. Dadmun was a most enjoyable literary and musical treat, when the following well-selected programme was rendered, in which a number of Norfolk's best talent participated:

Prayer—Rev. E. T. Dadmun.

Vocal Solo—Miss Lucile Newell.

Recitation—Rev. C. H. McGhee.

Vocal Solo—Miss Estelle Burkhead, of Baltimore.

Cornet Solo—Mr. Croonebaugh.

Recitation—Miss Colena Newell.

Vocal Solo—Miss Lillie White.

After the programme came the reception, Mr. Dadmun and wife taking their position at a convenient point in the lecture-room and the guests formed in column, two abreast, and passing Mr. and Mrs. Dadmun, were received by them with the usual salutation and best wishes. Then came the final event of the evening's festivities, the serving of refreshments, consisting of tea, coffee and cake, which were freely partaken of by all present.

Among the guests who honored the reception with their presence were the Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith and wife, and the Rev. R. H. Bennett.—Virginian-Pilot.

WASHINGTON RELIGIOUS LETTER.

Chief Moore, of the Weather Bureau, believes it will be impossible to operate several lines of wireless telegraphy in the same vicinity, from which he argues the necessity of governmental control of any system inaugurated in this country.

The managers of the St. Louis World's Fair have determined to offer a prize of $200,000 for the most successful operation of a dirigible air-ship, to be made on the fair grounds. Santos Dumot and many others are expected to compete.

Representative Schirm, of Maryland, has offered a bill in Congress providing for the erection of six tablets commemorating the six greatest naval victories of the United States over foreign foes. We wonder how many people could name them.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New York proposes to erect a building in that city which will cost $675,000. It will be a jeune-siecle clubhouse, fully equipped with private rooms, gymnasium, swimming-pool, and an auditorium which will seat six hundred persons.

During the eight days before the holiday recess there were introduced in Congress 7,623 bills, of which 2,970 were for special pensions. The total number introduced during the life of the Fifty-sixth Congress was 14,339.

Assemblyman Bennett has introduced in the New York Legislature a bill prohibiting the shooting of live pigeons for sport. It is an encouraging sign of the times that the bill is expected to pass.

Representative Frederick J. Kern, of Illinois, has introduced in Congress a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to re-establish the canteens along the lines which governed them before the passage of the anti-canteen law. The Anti-Saloon League will find in the pro-canteen sentiment in Congress a foeman worthy of their steel.

The adage that "a man is never a prophet in his own country" seems to be peculiarly applicable to the United States weather prophets, whose predictions are cabled to Lloyds, London, at the latter's expense, and posted for the benefit of out-going vessels.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., who spent his holidays in Washington, said, before leaving that city, that he regarded it as "a pretty slow town for a boy." His chief complaint was that the opportunities for skating were not up to his anticipation.

The Chicago parks contain artificial lakes which aggregate over two hundred acres. The surface of these lakes is kept, during the winter, in perfect condition for skating by "ice-planes," drawn by two heavy horses, and one-horse sweepers, which remove the shavings, thus preserving a perfectly glassy surface at all times.

Senator Mason, of Illinois, has introduced in the Senate a resolution proffering the thanks of Congress to Miss Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross Society, for her services to the wounded and sick soldiers during the Spanish war.

President Roosevelt has expressed the wish that a delegation of the members of the National Federation of Church and Christian Workers, which meets in Washington on February 4th, will call on him at the White House. Last year Mr. Roosevelt was vice-president of the Federation for New York.

Mr. John G. Wooley, the eminent prohibition worker, has just returned to this country, after a trip around the world, made with the object of investigating the regulation of the liquor traffic in foreign lands. Mr. Wooley states that the prohibition cause has made greater progress in the United States than in any country in the world.

Owing to a senseless tariff on art works, the Raphael Madonna, recently purchased by Mr. J. P. Morgan for $500,000, cannot be brought to the United States except by payment of $100,000 duty. It is estimated that Americans spend $100,000,000 annually visiting the art galleries of Europe. An intelligent and liberal policy would make this country an art centre and an art-producer. But the exclusion of the old masters and modern masterpieces is short-sighted and wrong. It is not favored by American artists, nor by art lovers.

The anniversary of the birthday of the late Hon. Hiram Price, who was the first president of the American Anti-Saloon League, and who died last May, in his eighty-first year, was commemorated by a meeting in the Memorial Lutheran church, under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon League. Senator Teller was one of the speakers.

The opening article of the January number of the American Illustrated Methodist Magazine takes up the work of the late Charlotte M. Yonge. Her "Daisy Chain" and "The Heir of Redclyffe" are stories which have left an impress on the times, and will live. With the proceeds from the sale of the first she helped to found a mission settlement in the Southern Pacific. Pictures are given of Norfolk Island, where the buildings were finally placed.

Henry Woodcock contributes the third and last of an interesting series, "The Religious Side of Charles Dickens and His Sister Fanny." Harry Burnett, Fanny's son, was the original of Paul Dombey, and interesting details are given of his death at Brighton.

"A Monument of International Friendship" tells the story of the Perry Monument, recently erected at Uraga, Japan, by the American Friends' Association, in token of good will to this country, where most of its members have been educated. The illustrations are fresh and excellent.

BOB BURDETTE "TO MY SON."

"So you are not going to church this morning, my son.

"Ah, yes; I see. 'The music is not good.' That's a pity. That's what you go to church for, to hear the music we demand.

"And the pews are not comfortable.' That's too bad; the Sabbath is the day of rest, and we go to church for repose. The less we do through the week the more rest we clamor for on the Sabbath.

"The church is too far away; it is too far to walk, and I detest riding in a street car, and they're always crowded on the Sabbath.' This is, indeed, distressing. Sometimes when I think how much farther away heaven is than the church, and that there are no conveyances on the road of any description, I wonder how some of us are going to get there.

"And the sermon is so long always.' All these things are, indeed, to be regretted. I would regret them more sincerely, my boy, did I not know that you will often squeeze into a stuffed street car, with a hundred men, breathing an incense of whiskey, beer, and tobacco, hang to a strap by your eyelids for two miles, and then pay fifty cents for the privilege of sitting on a rough plank in the hot sun for two hours longer, while in the intervals of the game a scratch band will blow discordant thunder out of a dozen misfit horns right into your ears, and come home to talk the rest of the family into a state of aural paralysis about the 'dandiest game you ever saw played on that ground.'

"Ah, my boy, you see what staying away from church does. It develops a habit of lying. There isn't one man in a hundred who could go on the witness stand and give, under oath, the same reasons for not going to church that he gives to his family every Sunday morning. My son, if you didn't think you ought to go, you wouldn't make any excuses for not going. No man apologizes for doing right.—Texas Christian Advocate.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONVENTION.

the claim that prohibition was a failure in the States of Maine and Kansas, so commonly made by liquor advocates. He referred to the eloquent and unqualified testimony of Congressmen Littlefield and Bowersock, of Maine and Kansas, respectively, as to the efficiency of the prohibition laws of those States.

After a tribute to the ability of Congressman Littlefield and his rapid rise to leadership in Congress, the speaker asserted that the press would have given his speech a column under glaring headlines had his speech been a testimony to the failure of prohibition. Mr. Cannon urged the Anti-Saloon Leaguers to demand fuller reports of temperance movements.

"The way for the League to secure legislation," said Mr. Cannon, "is to go out into the field and work. Before election day comes round the members of the League should support those men who are opposed to the saloon, and should fight those who are not. The League should elect men who are in line with the temperance cause; should get legislation against the saloon, and should have these laws enforced. If necessary, detectives should be employed to ferret out violations of the law.

Mr. Cannon made an earnest plea for more active work for the destruction of the saloon, declaring that it was possible to enforce the mandate of the people. The speaker was warmly applauded when he resumed his seat.

On motion of Dr. Lear, Mr. Cannon was requested to have his address printed in tract form for distribution.

After considerable discussion, the whole question of pressing the passage of the Barbour-Quarles resolution, of meeting the arguments against it, and of presenting other arguments in its favor, was left in the hands of the Executive Committee, with instructions to urge the matter before the convention. The discussion was over the method which the League should adopt in pressing the work for temperance legislation. Some were in favor of a special committee to go before the Constitutional Convention; others wanted a committee to prepare an appeal; and still others proposed other plans. Finally all sides united in referring the matter to the Executive Committee.

The debate was lengthy, and was participated in by Rev. F. M. Edwards, Dr. W. W. Smith, Rev. James Cannon, Jr., Rev. Dr. Battle, Rev. W. S. Campbell, Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, and others.

Rev. Mr. Cannon then, by request of the chairman, Dr. Mitchell, asked the body to raise the balance of the $210 still due by the League. This was done in a few minutes, and so the whole indebtedness was subscribed.

After the collection, President Wilson, of the National Anti-Saloon League, and President Ewin, of the District of Columbia League, were presented to the convention, and the body rose en masse to greet them.

The question box was then opened, and Rev. C. H. Crawford answered the various queries, which related chiefly to methods and plans of organizations.

He called on Dr. Roy Flanagan, of Charlottesville, who spoke of the organization there.

OFFICERS CHOSEN.

Rev. Mr. Winfree, for Rev. R. H. Bennett, who had been called away, presented the report of the Nominating Committee. The following recommendations of the committee were unanimously adopted by the convention, nearly all the nominations being re-elections: President, Professor S. C. Mitchell, of Richmond College; Vice-Presidents, Judge W. H. Mann, Nottoway Courthouse; Rev. M. L. Wood, Staunton; Rev. Edwin S. Hinks, Leesburg; T. S. Southgate, Norfolk; Dr. W. W. Smith, Lynchburg; Secretary, Dr. A. B. Greiner, Richmond; Treasurer, T. H. Ellett, Richmond; Superintendent, Rev. C. H. Crawford, Richmond; Attorney, Walter Sydnor, Esq., Richmond. Executive Committee—Rev. W. W. Lear, D. D. (chairman), Professor S. C. Mitchell, A. B. Greiner, M. D., Rev. John Pollard, D. D., Rev. M. Ashby Jones, Rev. J. E. Cook, Rev. P. A. Cave, T. H. Ellett, Rev. James Cannon, Jr., Rev. W. B. Beauchamp.

The old Board of Directors was re-elected, with the addition of Dr. Roy K. Flanagan, of Charlottesville, and Rev. P. A. Cave, of this city.

The convention then took a recess until 7:30 P. M., when it reconvened in the auditorium of the church.

THE NIGHT SESSION.

An exceptionally good attendance was present when the night session was called to order. After a short devotional service, the Rev. W. C. Campbell, D. D., of Roanoke, spoke on "The Church and Temperance." Dr. Campbell's address was a highly interesting one, and was listened to with close attention. The paper discussed the relation of the church to its inebriated member; how it should deal with the member who is the vendor of intoxicants; the attitude of the church toward the drunkard; and, finally, its attitude toward the effort made to abolish the saloon.

With regard to the position the church should take where the member is a liquor dealer, Dr. Campbell made some interesting statements. He declared that a church cannot afford to tolerate in its communion men who are parties to the saloon, no matter how orderly the places they keep, how good and free from adulteration the brand they sell, and how much they contribute to the support of the church. There is no compensation that a church member engaged in this business can make to his church for the harm he does it.

"Neither," continued Dr. Campbell, "can a church member afford to rent his property for the sale or manufacture of alcoholic drinks. The income from such a source brings no blessing. It identifies the property owner with the business. It makes him a party to its evils. The church may be patient toward such members, but the time is approaching when men must either abandon such sources of revenue or the church will be compelled to say tenderly, but firmly; 'We cannot carry you and your business.'" was discussed by Dr. Campbell in a very able manner. He declared that the reason why some of the churches would not unite in some of these movements—the Prohibitionist, for instance—is because they are of a political nature.

The attitude of the church toward the movements to abolish the saloon

An address by the Rev. Luther B. Wilson, M. D., D. D., president of the American Anti-Saloon League, followed next on the programme. His subject was, "A New Campaign in an Old Warfare." Dr. Wilson discussed the temperance movement in a general way, declaring that the saloon is the objective point against which the campaign should be waged. The force of the present movement lies in the fact that it is within the lines of law. He agreed with the preceding speaker in his utterance on the matter.

He defined the warfare as one for humanity, as, he contended, were all the great campaigns in the world's history—on the field of battle or in the forum, whether in sanguinary or polemic contest. He contended that the right had always triumphed, and would ultimately triumph in this case.

A passing reference was made by Dr. Wilson to the recent reform campaign in New York. He took a crack at Judge Jerome, of the Fusion party, who is trying to elevate the saloon. Dr. Wilson declared that the saloon cannot be made a respectable thing.

Dr. Wilson, whose headquarters are in Washington, evidently believes in Admiral Schley. He illustrated one of his remarks with an allusion to the Santiago fight, referring to the "great victory which Schley and his men won, the glory for which the country will never deny them."

Dr. Wilson's address was excellent in thought, conception, and conservatism. It was an address that would stand the most careful reading, and impressed all who heard it. Dr. Mitchell said that speeches such as had been delivered at this convention would do the cause of practical temperance more good than all the fiery, intemperate utterances of cranks. Sanity is one of the great principles of the convention.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

Dr. W. W. Smith, of Lynchburg, submitted the report of the Committee on Resolutions, which was unanimously adopted.

The resolution presented in the morning by Dr. Winfrey, touching upon certain lines of work to be pursued by the League, was recommended for reference to the Executive Committee for action.

The two sets of resolutions offered by Mr. Cannon at the morning session were, with some slight verbal changes, recommended for adoption, as follows:

"Resolved, 1. That we urge upon the Constitutional Convention of Virginia the adoption of the Quarles-Barbour resolution, now before that body.

"2. That we are entirely willing that this provision shall be submitted as a separate clause to any electorate which may be called to vote upon the ratification of the new Constitution."

"The Anti-Saloon League, in convention assembled, in order that the people of the Commonwealth may the better understand the purposes of the organization, hereby announces:

"1. That it will continue earnestly and persistently the campaign of education agitation already begun, and will strive to arouse and band together against the saloon all the forces desiring the economic and moral welfare of this Commonwealth.

"2. That it will use all proper means to influence legislation upon the liquor traffic by suggesting and urging the passage of such laws as will lessen the number of saloons and decrease their influence until it shall have accomplished the ultimate object of the organization, the abolition of the saloon.

"3. That the League expresses its determination to use all legal means to aid officials in the enforcement of existing laws for the restriction of the liquor traffic, employing counsel, if necessary, in the various cities and counties of the State. We furthermore declare that while the League will not ally itself with any political party—Democratic, Republican, or Prohibition—it is determined to secure the election of legislators who are known to be in favor of the destruction of the saloon and of executive officers who will faithfully enforce the laws enacted for its restriction.

"4. That the watchword of the League shall be, 'The Saloon Must Go.' That our methods shall be education, agitation, legislation, and the enforcement of law."

In presenting the resolutions, Dr. Smith made a brief address. Recurring to Dr. Campbell's statement of conditions existing fifty years ago and those now prevalent, the speaker made an interesting statement from his own knowledge.

The feature of Dr. Smith's address, however, was an appeal for support in the adoption of the new Constitution. He declared that the limitation of the suffrage was of more value and importance to the cause of temperance than the Quarles-Barbour resolution, or any other resolution. Dr. Smith contended that the fifty-five counties of the State wherein there was no license for the sale of liquors were the white counties of the Southwest, the Valley and of Piedmont and Eastern Virginia, while the black counties were the strongholds of intemperance. He most earnestly appealed to all friends of temperance to vote for the ratification of the new Constitution. He called attention to the resolution reported by the committee endorsing the separation of the Quarles-Barbour resolution from the rest of the Constitution, if necessary to insure its adoption.

Resolutions of thanks of the convention to the church, the press, and others were adopted.

The convention adjourned with benediction by Rev. W. W. Lear, D. D., leaving the arrangements for the next meeting place in the hands of the Executive Committee.

He who is rich for himself, laying up treasure for himself, is by so much robbing his real inward life, his life in and toward God, of its resources.—Henry Alford.

There are souls in this world that have the gift of finding joy everywhere.—Faber.

strumentality it was put there. Under God's grace you are the architect of its eternal happiness. Your name is written not on one corner of its nature, but inwrought into its every fiber and energy. Will the storms of winter wash out the story of what you have wrought upon that spiritual structure? No. There are no storms in that land, and there is no winter. Will time wear out the inscription which shows your fidelity? No. Time is past, and it is an everlasting now. Built into the foundation of that imperishable structure, built into its pillars, built into its capstone is your name, either the name you have on earth or the name by which celestials shall call you. I know the Bible says in one place that God is a jealous God, but that refers to the work of those who worship some other god.

Noble Deeds Everlasting.

A true father is not jealous of his child. With what glee you show the picture your child pencilled or a toy ship your child bewed out or recite the noble deed your child accomplished! And God never was jealous of a Joshua, never was jealous of a Paul, never was jealous of a Frances Haver-gal, never was jealous of a man or woman who tried to heal wounds and wipe away tears and lift burdens and save souls, and while all is of grace and your self abnegating utterance will be, "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name, O Lord, give glory!" you shall always feel a heavenly satisfaction in every good thing you did on earth, and if iconoclasm, borne from beneath, should break through the gates of heaven and efface one record of your earthly fidelity methinks Christ would take one of the nails of his own cross and write somewhere on the crystal or the amethyst or the jacinth or the chrysoprasus your name and just under it the inscription of my text, "The righteous shall be held in everlasting remembrance." Oh, this character building! You and I are every moment busy in that tremendous occupation. You are making me better or worse, and I am making you better or worse, and we shall, through all eternity, bear the mark of this benediction or blasting. Let others have the thrones of heaven, those who have more mightily wrought for God and the truth, but it will be heaven enough for you and me if ever and anon we meet some radiant soul on the boulevards of the great city who shall say, "You helped me once. You encouraged me when I was in earthly struggle. I do not know that I would have reached this shining place had it not been for you," and we will laugh with heavenly glee and say: "Ha, ha! Do you really remember that talk? Do you remember that warning? Do you remember that Christian invitation? What a memory you have! Why, that must have been down there in Washington or New Orleans at least ten thousand million years ago." And the answer will be, "Yes, it was as long as that, but I remember it as well as though it were yesterday."

Oh, this character building! The structure lasting independent of passing centuries, independent of crumbling mausoleums, independent of the whole planetary system. Aye, if the material universe, which seems all bound together like one piece of machinery, should some day meet with an accident that should send worlds crashing into each other like telescoped railway trains, and all the wheels of constellations and galaxies should stop, and down into one chasm of immensity all the suns and moons and stars should tumble like the midnight express at Ashtabula that would not touch us and would not hurt God, for God is a spirit, and character and memory are immortal, and over that grave of a wrecked material universe might truthfully be written, "The righteous shall be held in everlasting remembrance." O Time, we defy thee! O Death, we stamp thee in the dust of thine own sepulchers! O Eternity, roll on till the last star has stopped rotating and the last sun is extinguished on the sapphire pathway, and the last moon has illumined the last night, and as many years have passed as all the scribes that ever took pen could describe by as many figures as they could write in all the centuries of all time, but thou shalt have no power to efface from any soul in glory the memory of anything we have done to bring it to God and heaven!

Graven on God's Hands.

There is another and a more complete defeat for oblivion, and that is in the heart of God himself. You have seen a sailor roll up his sleeve and show you his arm tattooed with the figure of a favorite ship, perhaps the first one in which he ever sailed. You have seen a soldier roll up his sleeve and show you his arm tattooed with the figure of a fortress where he was garrisoned or the face of a great general under whom he fought. You have seen many a hand tattooed with the face of a loved one before or after marriage. This custom of tattooing is almost as old as the world. It is some colored liquid punctured into the flesh so indelibly that nothing can wash it out. It may have been there fifty years, but when the man goes into his coffin that picture will go with him on hand or arm. Now, God says that he has tattooed us upon his hands. There can be no other meaning in the forty-ninth chapter of Isaiah, where God says, "Behold, I have graven thee on the palms of my hands." It was as much as to say: "I cannot open my hand to help but I think of you. I cannot spread abroad my hands to bless but I think of you. Wherever I go up and down the heavens I take these two pictures of you with me. They are so inwrought into my being that I cannot lose them. As long as my hands last the memory of you will last. Not on the back of my hands, as though to announce you to others, but on the palms of my hands for myself to look at and study and love. Though I hold the winds in my fist, no cyclone shall uproot the inscription of your name and your face, and though I hold the ocean in the hollow of my hand its billowing shall not wash out the record of my remembrance. 'Behold, I have graven thee on the palms of my hands.'"

Eternal Remembrance.

What joy, what honor, can there be comparable to that of being remembered by the mightiest and most affectionate being in the universe? Think of it—to hold an everlasting place in the heart of God! The heart of God! The most beautiful palace in the universe. Let the archangel build some palace as grand as that if he can. Let him crumble up all the stars of yesternight and tomorrow night and put them together as mosaics for such a palace floor.

YOU CANNOT CHANGE the course of a storm by tearing down the signals that give warning of its approach. Neither can you cure a cold by temporarily stopping a cough with opium-laden "medicines." Allen's Lung Balsam, in which there is no opium, cures sore throats and sore lungs because it allays the inflammation and rids you of the mucus that stops up the air passages.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 100 feet wide verandas, large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; hot water system of heating (fresh air taken from outside); hot air from over hot turnaces to the various parts of the building; Clark-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of cesspools and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no person or pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach: Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Editorial.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, who had charge of the religious statistics of the census of 1890, has completed his figures for 1901. He places the total number of actual Church members in the United States at 28,090,637. The greatest gain in numbers since 1890 has been made by the Roman Catholics, with 2,927,324 increase. The Disciples of Christ are second, with 538,490, the Methodists third, with 531,937. The Protestant Episcopal Church gained 218,925, and the Baptists (North), 205,163.

There are two ways of living—the hap-hazard and the thoughtful. Thousands of persons who think themselves to be thoughtful, systematic and very methodical in their ways, are really living aimless lives. Whatever business or occupation they engage in they follow with care, and pride themselves on the fact that they have no ravelled edges in their work. But the life itself does not centre around any great purpose. Any true, any public life, must have a great purpose, upon which the life itself is centered. All the work and thought of life must find the reason for its being in that purpose. It must give unity to the life. Is your purpose in life clearly defined in your own mind? What is it? Be honest with your own soul. Is it worthy of you? Is it bounded by the grave, or does it reach out into the great eternity?

No plan is worthy of an immortal soul which is limited by the powers or necessities of our fleshly natures. A man may make a plan to get bread and meat and shelter and clothing, which he knows to be temporary, a makeshift for the time. He may change his plans for making a living a thousand times, and the result may be of no importance. But plans for the soul life cannot be temporary, certainly not in their results. Every plan for the soul reaches out into eternity. The soul's interests should never be endangered by thought concerning our fleshly nature. The "outward man" may perish, and the inner man be renewed "day by day." That life is of necessity narrow and contracted which does not make the spiritual nature the ruling power in the life, and which does not make both the powers and necessities of the flesh secondary matters.

There is something worse than death. Death does not end life. Death is but an incident, an event in life. It is an experience through which every man must pass. Life goes on through death, and continues in the midst of other surroundings, and the same identical personality continues to exist. Yes, there is something worse than death. It is better to die than to be a liar, a thief, or an adulterer, or a murderer. It is better to die than to live a covetous, selfish, impure life. No man can ever say that it is necessary for him to live in sin. It is not necessary for him to live at all in this world. If he cannot live in the flesh without denying the higher life of the spirit, then it is better that he pass through the experience we call death and pass into the life of the spirit beyond. To deny, or to put into the second place our higher spiritual nature is worse than death. We must live nobly. If we cannot live nobly in this world, let us die nobly and live nobly in the next. Stephen, Peter, Paul, and all the glorious army of martyrs cry out to us from the immortal side of the river of death and say, "We could have lived on the mortal side of the river some years longer, but it would have been an ignoble life. We preferred to die rather than to live at such a price." Let us never deny our higher nature that we may please the flesh.

MISSIONS.

Rev. J. E. McCulloch, who was appointed Conference Secretary of Missions by Bishop Duncan, is at present within the bounds of the Conference, in company with Dr. and Mr. Howard Taylor, who are making addresses at several points. They were in Danville last week. From Sunday till Wednesday night of this week they are in Richmond. On Thursday Mr. Taylor is to be at the Blackstone Institute, and from Friday till Sunday they will be in Norfolk and Portsmouth. Bro. McCulloch is making a special effort to get missionary information into the hands of our people by the circulation of Go Forward, the Review of Missions, tracts, etc., and is anxious to be of any service he can to the brethren in developing the missionary spirit among our people.

It is hard to speak of the work of Dr. and Mrs. Taylor in a paragraph, and more will be said about them next week.

Be not weary in well-doing.

DEFYING OUTRAGED MORALITY.

We give below an account of an occurrence at the Mississippi Conference, of which our people in this section have not heard. It is unfortunately but another illustration of the unblushing assumption of those who have given the Church so severe a wound. One would think that after such trouble has been brought upon the Church by their conduct those connected with the disgraceful affair would be overwhelmed with shame and confusion, and would be glad to keep as far in the background as possible. If there had been any sign of true penitence—confession and request for forgiveness—one could well say, "Let all discussion cease," and urge that a repentant brother be afflicted no further, but that he be helped to bear the sorrow, which he feels for his notorious and damaging sin. But the most awful and terrifying element in this whole transaction is the blunted, if not deadened, moral sensibility, which has been shown by the parties to this sin. Instead of humility and godly sorrow, they have been brazen in their defiance of the outraged conscience of the Church. They seem to have sunk so far as to be unable to believe that anybody could be really shocked and troubled by their sin. They have endeavored to justify their conduct by trying to prove that others had done things equally as culpable. Those who have denounced their sin have been referred to as "vile, Satanic ecclesiastical Ishmaelites" by the friends and advocates of the agents. And now, the chief offender, Dr. Barbee, has reached the climax of guilty and shameless defiance, and has publicly, on the platform of an Annual Conference, charged that the criticism of the publishing house is based on "malice." He cannot understand how anything but malice can be at the bottom of all this stir. He cannot comprehend how awful a thing it is to the godly men and women of our Church that our purity and honor as a branch of the Church of Christ has been brought in question by his conduct. He cannot understand why some of the purest and best laymen in Virginia have said that they did not see how they could remain in our communion, if the General Conference did not repudiate for the Church this notorious sin. He thinks that nothing but malice can cause men to take action. Honor and truth and love for the purity of the Church cannot account for the criticism of the agents and the "house" so he seems to think, but "malice" can. He is like Ahab of old when he met Elijah. With unblushing audacity he inquires of those who have determined that his sin shall not go unrebuked, "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" In the face of such conduct the Church, in General Conference assembled, should reply to him as did Elijah: We "have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy associates, in that they have forsaken the commandments of the Lord."

It is bad enough to have men in high position whose moral sensibility is at such a low ebb that the shameful transaction was possible, but it is far worse to find out that these men cannot believe that any one else has any higher standard of morality, and that all censure is the result of malice. Even the secular press does not think so meanly of the morals of the Church as does Dr. Barbee and those who think with him. An article on another page, from the New York Sun, shows that its stand taken against this sin, by some Conferences, is appreciated all over the country, and that our General Conference will meet with the gaze of the Church universal fixed upon it. Our readers may sometimes wish that they would never see anything more about the matter, but the audacity and boldness of the perpetrators of this sin should be fully understood by our people. No half-way measure will suffice. We must vindicate our honor fully before the assembled world, and repudiate and rebuke the sin.

The following clippings are taken from the Nashville American. The first piece was written by the reporter for the American, whom we have understood to be the son of Dr. Barbee himself. The reporter is said, in the article, to have obtained his information from one of the officials of our Church, who was present at the North Mississippi Conference, apparently one of the connectional officers living at Nashville. In view of the reply of Bishop Morrison, which follows, and the flat-footed statement of the Bishop, "both of these statements are untrue," it would seem that the officer aforesaid ought to come out like a man, and either prove his statement to be correct, or admit that he has said what is not true, and ask forgiveness. He should do one or the other. On another page there is an article by Lex, taken from the Midland Methodist, on this same subject:

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

It was the first time Edward had had a glimpse of the serious side of Preston. For a moment he choked. The tears came to his eyes, and he could not say anything. When he did speak, he said something which led Willis to ask questions about his home training. In return Edward asked questions of Willis. And that evening before they went to bed the two young men had learned more about each other's family surroundings than they had ever learned before. The confidences they exchanged placed their friendship on an entirely new and more substantial basis. Edward learned that Willis' father had for years been a successful stockbroker in New York. He had separated from his wife, who had moved west with her children, the oldest of whom was Willis. Willis spoke of his father with contempt and lapsed into his reckless manner in a short description of him. But the minute he spoke of his mother he became gentle, and his manner was more nearly like that which had surprised Edward at the beginning.

It was very late when they went to bed, and after the lights were out and it had been very quiet for a minute Willis called from his bedroom:

"I forgot to black my other shoe." And then he added in a serious tone, "I wish I had no sins of omission any blacker than that to lay up against myself."

In the morning there was not a trace of his seriousness apparent, only in the days that immediately followed he evidently had an added respect for his roommate, and the meeting ground for them both was understood by both to be easier and more human. It would not be so difficult as it had been for them to understand each other.

The next few days were a test of Edward Blake's purposes. How severe the test was not even he himself knew until long afterward. He told Freeda what he had done and had a momentary delight in the effect of the news on her. But it was followed by an uneasiness that could not hide the suspicion that Freeda was planning to leave the ladies' hall in order to lessen her expenses and help him. It was true, however, that all this did not begin to equal the freedom he at once enjoyed in the daily knowledge that he was out from under the burden of that conscious daily lie. The real relief that he felt was a thousand times compensation for all the added burdens of the question of his college expenses which now faced him anew.

For a week he used every spare moment of his time trying to find something regular to do. At first it seemed as if there was absolutely nothing either in the neighborhood of the college or in the town. But at last he succeeded in getting the care of a furnace at the house of one of the professors and of a horse and cow at the residence of one of the townspeople. The distance between the two houses obliged him to take much more time for the work than he felt he ought to spare, and all he received for his service at both places together was $3.25 a week. But he finally settled down to his fall and winter work with a good degree of courage and a clear conscience. Rankin had disposed of his route to one of the freshmen, and Edward heard nothing more directly about it, but that was not the end of the matter, as he found out before his college course was over. The results of transgression of moral laws are far-reaching, and the world learns the lesson painfully. Better that it learn it thus than never learn it at all.

It was the beginning of November, and everything in Hope college was now in full swing. The secret societies, the athletics, the glee club, the literary open societies, owing to the unusual enrollment of students, were all flourishing. Edward had been invited to join the leading literary society as a promising freshman, and he had gone in with the purpose of getting all he could out of it. He was no singer, and Willis, who was a prominent tenor in the glee club and would have been glad if Edward could have been an applicant for admission, gave him up after an attempt on his part to test his roommate's vocal powers.

"Didn't you ever sing anything?" he asked Edward one day after he had coaxed him to try the scale.

"The nearest I ever came to it is what you have just heard," replied Edward soberly.

"If you had stood the notes up and fired a gun at them, you couldn't have scared them any worse," said Willis pensively. "How much will you give me to teach you the scale?"

"I haven't money enough without selling the farm," said Edward slowly.

But there was another part of the college life that attracted Edward strongly and for which his sturdy physique fitted him to take a part if he could only spare the time from his work and his studies, and that was the athletic side of it.

He was naturally very vigorous and fond of outdoor life. His farm training had developed his muscles to slow rather than to rapid movements, but all he needed was gymnastic training to make a typical athlete of the better sort. The football team for the year had already been chosen, but Edward began to play with the second eleven, and after two weeks' hard work the captain of the college team one day noticed some specially good play on his part and complimented him on it.

"Say, did you hear what Reynolds said about your play at the club tonight?" asked Willis on the evening of that same day as the boys were going up to their rooms.

"No," said Edward, much pleased.

"Well, he said if you kept up that kind of form you would be a good substitute for the Thanksgiving day game in case Wallace was dropped."

"Yes; it would be a nice thing, wouldn't it to put a green freshman into Wallace's place just before that game?" growled one of the seniors.

"But look at Brooks in 1892," spoke up one of the boys who knew the record of every football player for years back. "He went in to play on the regular team before he had been in college six weeks, and he made one of the best quarter backs Hope ever had."

"Of course," said Willis. "What does the college care about a man, whether he's freshman or professor, whether he's 10 years or 100, whether he knows a quadratic equation from a pitchfork, if he can play football. That's all we want. Play ball!"

Edward said nothing, but when he and Willis had gone up to their room he began to ask questions about the team. He did not really know the men on the eleven because they were, with one exception, upper class men, and he never met them in studies and did not even know the names of all of them.

Willis was usually perfectly indifferent about everything in the college, but football was the one subject he was enthusiastic over. He told Edward all the particulars about the team, gave their records in the different games played, gave quite a graphic description of the finest run ever made across the gridiron and wound up by telling about the defeat of the university team at last Thanksgiving day game.

"We ran in Walker on 'em that game. Walker was a semiprofessional. The college paid him $200 to play on the team, and he registered as a sophomore, taking special course in history or Egyptology or something. I don't believe he ever made a recitation in his life, and he didn't know H<sub>2</sub>O from a barrel of molasses, but he could play ball, and that's all the college wanted."

"You say the college hired him?"

"Well, the association. Of course it's really the same thing. The association is made up of a committee of professors and upper class men."

"Then the professors knew that Walker was not a real bona fide student, but was allowed to register so as to play football?"

"That's it," replied Willis carelessly. "It's done by a good many colleges. Of course the university men found out something and tried to kick on Walker, but he was registered all right as a student taking a special course, and they had to play or forfeit the game. We didn't think it was necessary to inform the university that the special course Walker elected was for the degree of 'F. B.'—Foot Ball." And Willis chuckled as he called up the incidents in that particular game.

Edward was silent for awhile. Then he said, "It looks to me as if a thing like that was lying."

Willis looked over at him, and his lips curled slightly, but it was not exactly scorn. There was another feeling back of it.

"Well, I suppose it is when you boil it down," he replied indifferently. He paused and then added as if confidentially: "The fact is, of course, that Pearsons, the new tackle, is a dummy student. He registered last fall as a junior and is supposed to be taking physics and botany. About all the physics he gets wouldn't turn the hair scales in the laboratory, and all the botany he knows is the color of the grass out on the campus. But he can play football all right, and he's earning his $150 good enough so far."

"Do you mean that the professors know that Pearsons is only a student in name and that he is really in college just to play ball?"

"Of course they know it. They know that Pearsons will drop out at the end of the second half. He has no intention of going through college. He is planing to drop out at the end of the second half. I've heard him say so. He can beat the university again on Thanksgiving day we don't care whether he goes to Nebraska or Cuba."

Edward made no reply, but opened his books and began his evening's study. Willis pulled down a much battered volume, looked it over for about ten minutes, shut it up, threw it down on his table and said, "Thank goodness, I've mastered that subject!" Then he reached up to his case and pulled out a box of cigars, lighted one and began to smoke. After ten minutes he got up and found another book which lay under a tennis hat, a sweater and a boxing glove, glanced through it hastily, made a few figures on a piece of paper, put the paper into the book, threw it on top of the other one and exclaimed, "I've got that all right!" Then he rose and went over to a little blackboard on his side of the room and put down a number of chemical formulæ, copying them from the card that he took out of his vest pocket. This occupied him about five minutes. He came back to his desk, thumped on it once or twice carelessly and then went to a closet and took out his best coat. He changed his collar and necktie, brushed his hair carefully, and when Edward looked up again he was just going out. It was an unwritten rule with them that when either was studying they were not to talk or ask questions, but as Edward looked at him Willis said:

"I've got everything for tomorrow, and I'm going down to the society rooms a little while. If the president calls, tell him I'll be back in the morning in time to take breakfast with him. I like my steak well done."

When Willis was gone, Edward studied on. The difference between him and his roommate was shown in the almost painful slowness with which Edward succeeded in getting his lessons. He studied three different books that evening, but when he laid the last one down it was half past 11.

Before he went to bed he went to the window and looked out on the campus. The football field lay just beyond, and in the light of the electric lamp at the end of the walk by the library the goal posts showed up quite plainly. Edward Blake looked out thoughtfully. Suppose Reynolds and the team asked him to play in the university game or even to go down as a substitute—what business was it of his that the whole team acted a silent lie in the case of Pearsons? The professors winked at the deceit. It couldn't be anything very wrong, and of course it was none of his business, yet he had only just fought out one battle along the same line. Would he have to go through it again?

"But, then, it isn't likely I'll be asked to play," he said at last. "Time enough to settle it when it comes." But before he went to sleep that night he knew well enough how he was going to settle the question. Perhaps that is the reason that he slept so soundly—so well, in fact, that he did not hear his roommate come in somewhere about 2 o'clock.

Oh, the might of a life that is right,
That swerves not at duty's call,
That marches on as in God's own right,
No matter when others fall!

For the right of that life is the might
That shall conquer the world abroad,
And the day shall come after the night
For the sons of the children of God.

CHAPTER III.

Another week went by, and Edward continued his football practice on the second eleven. He was in fine trim now, and every afternoon's play added to the confidence he reposed in his physical powers. He was learning to play with his head, too, and the second eleven all realized to a man that Freshman Blake was in reality the star player of the team.

So it was not very much of a surprise to Edward, after all, when a week before the Thanksgiving day's game with the university Reynolds, the captain of the college eleven, came up to the room to see him. Willis was in the room just getting ready, as usual, to go out somewhere, but as Reynolds plunged at once into the subject he waited to hear the talk and take a part in it.

"Wallace is in bad shape for the game next week. The manager has agreed with me that he ought not to play. We're in a hole if we can't get the right man for quarter back. It's out of the regular order, of course, but we have settled on you to substitute for Wallace's place. In the practice game tomorrow you'll go with us instead of second eleven, and by next week we'll risk you with the university."

Reynolds of course spoke as if the putting of Blake into Wallace's place was an honor to the young freshman, and there was not the glimmer of a suspicion in his mind that Blake might refuse. Edward was passionately fond of the game. He had so far been nearly as much carried away with it as Willis always was, and he felt a thrill of pride in being chosen to what any man in Hope college would consider a place of great honor.

And yet for the second time since entering college his slow but clear mind faced a situation that, as in the case of the paper route, contained a principle vague enough to very many, but so well defined to him, imbued as he was with his home training in matters of absolute truthfulness, that he could not ignore it nor shut it out of his choices.

Reynolds had risen to go, taking for granted that Blake was overwhelmed with the honor and not expecting any remark from him, when Edward stopped him with a question:

"Does Pearsons play in the varsity game?"

"Of course he does," replied Reynolds, staring at Blake. "He's our mainstay for right tackle."

Willis looked queerly at Edward and said a little roughly, "What difference does it make to you whether Pearsons plays or not?"

Edward did not reply to him, but asked another question of Reynolds, who had his hand on the knob of the door and was wondering what Blake was driving at.

"Do all the fellows on the eleven know that Pearsons is only a dummy student?"

Reynolds stared again in astonishment.

"Of course they do," he replied. "It's understood by everybody, professors and all."

"Then when you play another team as a college team you play Pearsons as a college student when in reality he—"

"Oh, this isn't a Sunday school!" broke in Willis impatiently. "It was all right about the paper route business, but you're drawing it too fine here, Blake. There isn't a fellow in all Hope that will understand your objection, and if you stick for it you will never be able to get right with the college again."

Reynolds looked bewildered. "What's it all about?" he asked, looking at Edward and then at Willis. "What are you fellows driving at? I must be going." He opened the door and Willis shouted: "It's all right. It's just a little thing that Blake has some doubts"—

But Edward spoke up:

"I want to say a word about my playing."

Reynolds stepped back into the room, but still kept his hand on the knob. Willis had gone over to Edward's table and was remonstrating with him in a low but very earnest voice.

"Oh, come now. It's the last game of the season. What's the use of kicking on Pearsons? You're not to blame for his being hired. You don't have to lie about anything. Why, you can't live at all if you begin in this way. And there isn't another man in college who thinks as you do. Besides that, there isn't another man who can take Wallace's place. You owe it to the college to stand by for this game. If you don't, it will ruin your football chances for the rest of the course."

Edward hesitated, and Willis misunderstood it.

"He'll play all right, Reynolds," he said, turning to the captain.

"No; I won't," said Edward doggedly. If there was one trait that Edward was distinguished for more than this one of exact truthfulness, it was a dogged obstinacy that mountains of opposition could not overturn.

"What's that?" exclaimed Reynolds, thinking he had misunderstood.

"I say I won't play. As I understand it, every man on the eleven who plays with another college team the same enters into a deception that is practiced in the case of Pearsons. The team as a team indorses the lie. Pearsons is not a bona fide student, but is simply hired by the college because he can play ball. So every time the team plays it acts a lie with the opposing team. And I say I will not be a party to such deception no matter what happens."

Reynolds was so surprised that for half a minute he simply stared at Edward with his mouth open, unable to say a word. At last he managed to gasp, "Well, of all the"—

Then he stopped and laughed at Edward again.

Willis began to laugh.

"Your bucking the line won't do any good. Better try an end run."

Reynolds drew a long breath and regarded Blake again very curiously.

"Do you mean to say that you'll let a little scruple like that lose the game for Hope next week?"

"May be a little scruple for you. It's a big one for me."

"It's Blake's ball now," put in Willis, taking down his overcoat. "Look out for a ten yard gain."

"It's perfect nonsense!" ejaculated Reynolds savagely. He paused again, unable to express himself. He was a senior, had been playing football ever since he left the academy and considered the results of a game with another team as of more importance than all the rest of the objects of a college course put together. He exalted football and its importance above every other consideration. He was as incapable of understanding Blake's position as if he and Blake had been born and brought up on different planets. Even Willis, with all his narrow definitions and absurd enthusiasm for football, had some conception of Edward's motive. But Reynolds had not the remotest understanding of it.

Edward reached up to his shelf, pulled down a book and quietly sitting down at his table he opened the book and began to study. Reynolds was furious. He came up to the table and leaned over it.

"Do you mean to say that you refuse the honor of the position we have offered you just to stick on a matter that—"

"I said I won't play, and that ends it," said Edward slowly.

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH.

We hope the work is prospering in the twin cities; at any rate, we still can sing with truth, "Lord, we thank Thee that we are alive." On Sunday, January 18th, Dr. A. Coke Smith is to preach the annual sermon to the Auxiliary of Monumental church. In Norfolk, on the same day, home mission sermons are promised by Rev. C. L. Bane, the new pastor of Cumberland Street; Rev. E. T. Dadmun, of Centenary; Rev. W. R. Proctor, of McKendree, and Rev. Graham H. Lambeth, of LeKies. On the fourth Sunday Dr. Smith has promised to preach for us at Epworth, and Rev. C. H. McGhee at Lambert's Point. In each case, after briefly discussing the general work of the society, the pastor will speak of Norfolk as a mission field. Abstracts of the sermons will be given later.

The City Mission work in Portsmouth is in excellent condition. The missionary has been at work for four months. She has made 600 visits herself, and had Bible readings and prayers in 87 homes. She has organized and conducts a large and successful sewing school at Owens' Memorial, and has lately organized a Junior League at Park View. She has distributed a goodly number of warm garments and much literature. During the board meeting, at which this report was read, it came out informally that a great deal of work had been done which she had not entered upon the formal report. The report itself was a good showing for the first four months of a new enterprise. The board is looking for a suitable room in which to locate the missionary. They have also given notices to the business men, requesting them to send all beggars to the missionary that their cases may be investigated. There is money enough now in the treasury to support the work for five or six months, and more coming in each month. One member of the board collects from seventy-five monthly subscribers.

The Norfolk Mission Board continues its settlement work. At Christmas we had a simple service for each division under instruction, Dr. Smith telling the Christmas story to the girls before they received their gifts; Rev. R. H. Bennett to the boys, and Rev. C. W. Maxwell, of Colley Memorial Presbyterian church, to the mothers at night. We did not think the mothers could take time to come on Christmas Eve, but they wished to do so. As a result of the service of that evening they asked to have religious services every Friday evening. The Methodist churches of the city have charge of that, beginning with Cumberland Street for this month. The infant class of Centenary Sunday school sent a dozen books and fifty toys, which the missionary distributed to the poorest mothers to put into little stockings that otherwise would have been empty.

The interest in the sewing classes grows. The helpers come regularly, and the little ones are becoming attached to their teachers. Two weeks ago a very little girl who lives on the lower floor, under the same roof with us, went out unsolicited and gathered in eight new girls for the sewing class. There are more than thirty girls in the sewing school now.

Of late, the basket classes have been somewhat disturbed. One of the boys stole the missionary's purse a few weeks ago, and has manifested the degree of his repentance by telling the other boys they must not go to the rooms, or they will be accused of stealing. This week the club and the basket classes have been almost as large as before the trouble. We cannot expect anything better of such a boy; his grandmother is our next-door neighbor, and is a wicked woman, though a strongly marked character. Some time ago, getting "out" with a neighbor, she put that neighbor's pet cat in a lime barrel and blinded it for spite. Just now she is very ill; the missionary visits her and sends or carries her dainties to eat. She shows her appreciation by cursing our enterprise, missionary and all, and frequently sends in word that when she gets well she will come in and "run the whole business out." She and her grandson are samples of the worst heathen we find in our mission field.

There are many very little children who do not go to school, for whom the missionary wishes to provide material for kindergarten sewing and paper-cutting, if the work is continued long enough to make it worth while. The paper-cutting succeeds the drawing and sewing, and should be followed up with lessons in pasteboard modelling, and knife-work for the boys. With our children, the paper-cutting could be made a means of grace as well as of manual training, for while it went on they would be clean and comfortable, and would hear pleasant instruction instead of the demoralizing lessons of the street. Songs, Bible lessons, and wholesome tales are an accompaniment to all the lessons in handiwork given at the settlement house.

Just now we are not sure we can support the work after the end of January, but we hope to do so. We think that the half-dozen sermons promised us for the next two Sundays will interest many people who have not hitherto thought much about the fertility of Norfolk as a mission field.

The religious services lately begun are well attended. It is good for our people to meet with energetic Christians, and hear them talk and pray, and sing the Gospel. Cumberland Street has done well by us; one service was conducted by the Young Men's Society, one by the Epworth League, and one by the Sunday school. Two more Friday evenings remain to her lot; we hope that upon one of them the pastor himself will come to us, for he seems a good home missionary.

M. C. FAVILLE.

THE HIROSHIMA GIRLS' SCHOOL—ITS IMMEDIATE NEED.

On the night of October 1, 1894, I, with my husband and six-weeks-old baby boy, reached Hiroshima, Japan, and for six years, until September 3, 1900, we lived there. Mr. Wilson had charge of the Hiroshima District and Onomichi Circuit. I did what I could to promote the various interests about us, being interested in all departments of effort. No phase of work in all the district so appealed to me as the Hiroshima Girls' School.

We know that when a normal child ceases to take proper nourishment its growth is retarded or stopped, or when it desires to satisfy its appetite, but because of poverty is not able to get food, starvation and death ensue. So with a school. The curriculum is high, the teaching force good, men and women of high ideals, the reputation of the institution well established, and the class rooms full of bright, promising pupils. When a school reaches this stage of its history and then because of lack of funds to enlarge the plant, pupils by the score have to be refused admittance into both the day and boarding departments, that school not only comes to a standstill, but declines, and is liable to die. If this is so in a Christian land, what shall be the fate of an institution established in a great populous heathen city—one of the most influential in the whole empire? This school had its very foundation in the faith of two or three Christian men and women, representatives of the M. E. Church, South. God has set His seal to their faith and ministry in a marvellous manner. Without the necessary sum to erect a building suitable to meet the present demands, two departments will have to be closed in April. Dear Christian friends, such is the condition of our Hiroshima Girls' School. Will not some man, some woman, whom the Lord has intrusted with this world's goods, come up to the help of the Lord now? Let it not be said in heathen lands, in a heathen city, that the Christian people of our own beloved Church were so indifferent to the salvation of immortal souls that they actually allowed two hundred or more children and young women to be shut off from the only possible means of Christian teaching and influence, and this in the year 1901. We, the Christian Church, have been praying for centuries "Thy kingdom come."

Soon after our mission was established in Japan, in 1886, Miss Nannie B. Gaines opened a school, and, as the work grew, it was thought advisable to have a boarding department connected with it. Accordingly a lot was purchased, plans drawn up for the building for the missionary ladies, the dormitories and class rooms for these twenty-five or thirty boarding pupils and a limited number of day pupils. This plant was considered large enough for a great growth, and to-day there are over five hundred girls under Christian instruction. The school is thoroughly organized, having two kindergartens, primary, preparatory, academic, and collegiate departments.

Hiroshima is an ideal location for a mission school, easily reached both by sea and railroad, and the headquarters of the Japanese army. There is an unusually large number of the official class residing in the city, and the people of the town are friendly to foreigners and open to the preaching of the Gospel. The majority of the day pupils come from this official class and the gentry of the place. When we consider that the officials of the army are being constantly moved to different points in the empire, what better way to leaven Japan than to educate and convert the daughters of these officials, they in turn bringing their fathers and mothers to Christ? Many families which do not embrace Christianity are at least made friendly to it.

Just a little over a year ago a new dormitory was erected, and to-day the school is as crowded as it was before this enlargement. I give some extracts from letters received during the last four months, written by those who have toiled, and are toiling day and night, to bring the daughters of Japan to a saving knowledge of Christ. They are hoping that some one in America will honor God and relieve the present need of this mission school! "We must have the new building, and it must be spacious enough to hold our present school. We now need three times our accommodation in order to do good work. We are violating government regulations by crowding too many in, but they will be lenient, for they seem anxious to have us continue. We are not asking for enlargement, but simply for accommodation for present work. The Government officials have asked us to allow them to recognize our kindergarten and training class, so they may be able to draw teachers from us."

A new missionary writes: "The work that has been accomplished by this school seems to me wonderful. The school is crowded and the demands for more room are growing greater each year."

Another friend says: "Tell Mr. Wilson to remind the people that next April two departments of this school must be closed, unless we have a new house. I want to be at home when the Government closes this school, because we have not proper equipment."

Bishop Wilson, who has charge of the Eastern fields, and Drs. Lambuth and Pritchett, our general secretaries, have asked for $10,000 for the school. Who will respond?

A lot has already been purchased, and now funds are needed for the building.

I appeal to you Methodist fathers and mothers, whom the Lord has blessed, to open your hearts and your purses and give as the Lord prompts you. You who value a Church school and Christian influences for your daughters, who have the benefit of other countless elevating influences, do not, by a failure to respond, deprive these Japanese parents of their only source of Christian influence for their children.

You, who are interested in Christian education, limit not your gifts to your own town, your own State, your own continent, but have the generosity to go beyond the sea, and have the faith to believe that God will honor your gift, and that many at the last day will be redeemed because you sent the Gospel to them through the Hiroshima Girls' School.

Yours in His name,

MARY McC. WILSON.

DR. BARBEE REPROVED.

during the past day or so among the officials of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who have their offices here, over an episode that occurred last Thursday at the session of the Mississippi Conference at McComb City, Miss., in which Dr. J. D. Barbee, of this city, and Bishop H. C. Morrison, of Louisville, were the principals. The Doctor was addressing the Conference relative to the work entrusted by the Church to his care, and in the midst of his speech the Bishop rapped him down and administered a reproof.

The correspondent of the New Orleans Times-Democrat, who is a member of the Conference, sent that paper the following account of what happened:

"Dr. J. D. Barbee, agent of the Publishing House, while making his report, proceeded to criticize the action of the last General Conference, and charged malice in their treatment of himself in the matter of the famous claim of the M. E. Church, South, against the United States Government, when he was interrupted by Bishop Morrison, who reproved him for his charge of malice and requested him to confine himself to the report of the interests of the Publishing House. Dr. Barbee briefly ended his remarks."

Last night an American reporter called on Dr. Barbee at his residence, and asked him if the above report was correct, and if he would submit to an interview on the incident. He replied to the first query:

"The report contained in this clipping is incorrect in every statement it makes except in that one about the reproof. I do not care to enter the public prints to discuss this affair. The speech which I was making at the time Bishop Morrison rapped me down was the same that I have delivered at every Annual Conference before which I have spoken this year, and I made it twice before Bishop Morrison, once just the week before at the North Mississippi Conference, which met at Winona, and over which he was presiding."

After Dr. Barbee had denied the correctness of the report the reporter went to see one of the officials of this Church who was present at the time of the incident, and who was familiar with the facts, and from him he got the following account of what actually took place:

"Dr. Barbee was addressing the Conference on those matters that were connected with the Publishing House," said he, "and during his remarks he referred to the annual report of the business of that institution, which Barbee & Smith are required to furnish to the Conferences. He said that certain Conferences had criticised it as being unintelligent and not as explicit as it should be. In reply to this criticism he said that it was the same that had been sent out annually for the past forty years, and that it was strange that these Conferences had not discovered until this late day that it was incomplete. He then made the statement that the spirit of criticism was abroad in the land, and in the newspapers it was especially reckless. This newspaper criticism of public men in Church and State was conceived in malice, and was bearing fruit in anarchy. Just here the Bishop came down with his gavel, and, stopping Mr. Barbee, he said: 'Dr. Barbee, I must arrest you and object to the statements you are making. The Annual Conferences are in my keeping, and I cannot allow you to criticize them and charge them with malice.'

"I did not make such a charge," replied Dr. Barbee. "I was referring solely to the reckless criticisms of the public press."

"The Church elected you to direct the affairs of the Publishing House, and I ask you to please confine your remarks to your report to the Annual Conferences," said the Bishop.

"Very well, sir," replied Dr. Barbee, bowing submissively. "The report, brethren, has been read in your hearing, and you are familiar with its contents. That is all I have to say," and he sat down.

CONFERENCE INDIGNANT.

"The episode created a stir, and the Conference was indignant at the action of the Bishop. It understood the matter as Dr. Barbee had stated it, and did not think that he was criticising any Conference. There was nothing said about the 'General Conference' or the 'famous claim,' and I understood that Dr. Barbee was making the same speech he had made at the other Conferences."

"After the adjournment at noon numerous consultations were held with the result that a resolution was drawn up which stated that the interest which Dr. Barbee represented was one of the most important in the Church, and that it was the sense of the body that he be requested to address them on any subject he saw fit to choose. This resolution was formulated in haste, and the wise counsel of cooler heads prevailing, it was not offered, but a leading member of the Conference was chosen to go to the Bishop and tell him that the Conference was indignant at his action, and give him the alternative of either making a statement to the Conference that would satisfy the body or submit to the humiliation of the adoption of the above resolution. The Bishop chose the former, and the next morning he addressed the Conference, saying that he was sorry that the episode had occurred, and regretted that the Conference felt indignant at it. He disclaimed any unkind feeling toward Dr. Barbee, and said that he had not intended any reflection on him. Whenever Dr. Barbee desired to speak he assured him the fullest and freest liberty of the floor. Here the matter ended."

CONFERENCE EPISODE.

Bishop Morrison Denies That It Occurred as Stated.

To the Editor of The American:

A clipping from your paper, about the 17th instant, referring to an episode in the recent session of the Mississippi Conference says: "The Conference was indignant at the action of the Bishop." And also, "The Bishop makes an apology."

I desire to say that both of these statements are untrue.

That certain persons were indignant is true. That the "Conference was indignant," is not true.

One of the indignant came to me and said, "Certain persons are talking of offering a resolution that 'Dr. Barbee be allowed to speak.' I replied, 'I have never thought of trying to prevent Dr. Barbee from speaking, and will so state to the Conference.'"

At the opening of the next session I said to the Conference: "I wish to state two things: First, I am surprised and regret to learn that there is any personal feeling on this matter with any one. I certainly have none. Second, nothing was further from my thoughts than trying to prevent Dr. Barbee from speaking. Dr. Barbee will tell you that I have not only given him full and ready courtesy at all times, but have recently invited him to open a Conference session and sat in the pulpit with him while he preached."

So far from "making an apology," I did not even refer to the episode which had occurred. Dr. Barbee had spoken of the "spirit of criticism in general," and also of the "action of certain Conferences"; and, proceeding, he used these words: "The whole thing is based on malice." There I called him to order.

QUESTIONS OF LAW AND ORDER.

By Lex, in Midland Methodist.

The sensations produced in the Virginia and Mississippi Conferences recently by two connectional officers, and published—one in the Banner and the other in the American—are suggestive. Without passing judgment on the parties in either case, or the merits of the cases per se, it is legitimate to call attention to some important points suggested by the events.

1. Drs. Hoss and Barbee, as connectional officers, have a right to appear before Conferences and represent the interests committed to them by the Church. This right is given to them by virtue of their offices under the law of the Church.

2. It is right and the duty of the Presiding Bishop, and he owes it to himself and to the Conference, to call all speakers to order, whether members of the Conference or not, when, in his judgment, they transcend proper limits, either in matter or manner. This right and duty is inherent in the office of president. There is no dispute at this point, but it is a mooted question as to whether or not the Presiding Bishop is the final judge as to what shall or shall not be brought before the Conference. The Bishops claim the right in question. It is called in question by an increasing number of preachers and laymen.

3. The Conference certainly has some rights and powers in all matters to be considered in open Conference. If not, why go to the trouble and expense of meeting in Conference? Is it simply to kill time? If Dr. Hoss appeared before the Virginia Conference in the role of a "free lance," and indulged in criticism, either of the body or its individual members, then certainly any member of the body had a right to protest and make the point of order that the distinguished speaker was transcending his rights; and if the chair or a majority of the body sustained the point or order and endorsed the protest, it was in the exercise of a right inherent in the body; and if the Bishop failed to call attention to the fact that the speaker was transcending due bounds, it was both the privilege and duty of the Conference to interpose an objection and have the proceedings stopped, whether the objectionable matter was in substance or form. An Annual Conference certainly has the right, while in session, to say whether or not its time shall be taken up by an outsider in criticising and lecturing either the body or its members for shortcomings, real or imaginary, until such members have been tried and adjudged guilty and the penalty of reprimand fixed by the court. Then, and only then, has a Bishop, and he alone, the right to reprimand. Without seeming to know it, Bishops have sometimes almost, if not quite, transcended their legal powers in this respect, and occasionally some connectional officers have been unwise enough, and bold enough, to dispense criticism with a somewhat liberal hand, either on measures and policies of the Conferences or individual members of the same. It is a wholesome sign to see the Conferences exercising their rights in this direction. If any one of the distinguished brethren whose business it is to appear before these bodies should so far forget himself as to travel outside of his own rights and intrude his opinions in a critical way upon questions not germane to his mission, and do this in a way that is offensive, either in manner or matter, and the Conference should object, it is guilty of no discourtesy; but it is discourteous for any outsider to intrude himself upon a Conference for the purpose of criticism of outside matters or the Conference and its members. If these honored brethren desire to exercise their rights of criticism, there are proper channels, times, and places for them to do so; but the Annual Conference is not to be so used.

4. Another phase of the problem was developed in the case of Dr. Barbee before the Mississippi Conference. If the Doctor turned aside to pay his respects to a critical press, a critical age, and, by inference, critical Conferences and critical preachers, Bishop Morrison had a right, and it was his duty, if in his judgment the distinguished speaker was out of order, either in manner or matter, to so rule. If the point was decided in a manner that partook of the nature of reproof, rebuke, or reprimand, the Bishop transcended his rights. On this point of order the Mississippi Conference had a voice, if it wished to be heard; and if the Conference desired to take issue with the Bishop whether the ruling was right or wrong, it had a right to do so and decide adversely to him. The Conference certainly had a right to invite Dr. Barbee, or any one else, to address it on any question they might select. If the Bishop simply ruled the speaker out of order, let the ruling be right or wrong, no apology, either to the speaker or to the Conference, was necessary; and if the Conference desired to reverse the ruling and hear the points discussed ruled upon by the chair, this was no discourtesy to the Bishop, and no apology was needed.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VI, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 9

Text of the Lesson, Acts iv. 32 to v. 11—Memory Verses, 3-5—Golden Text, Eph. iv. 25—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association.]

32, 33. "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all." In these days we can scarcely imagine several thousands of believers of one heart and one soul to serve the Lord, no one clinging to his own things, but each loving the other as himself and all having all things in common. If it was the power of His resurrection that did this, they must have known something that few know today.

34-37. Possessors of lands and houses sold their property and put the proceeds in the common fund that the need of each might be supplied and that no one might have any lack. There was no selfishness and no self seeking. This seems all the more remarkable when we consider the strife for pre-eminence that was seen more than once among the twelve before Jesus died; yes, even at the passover on the night before His resurrection, but now they were all filled with the Spirit, and hence this great difference. A Spirit filled people will manifest the life of Christ and not the life of self. Josus, surnamed Barnabas, son of consolation, a Levite, and evidently a true one, is mentioned as one of those who having land sold it and laid the money at the apostles' feet. Levi signifies "joined," and he illustrated the truth, "He that is joined to the Lord is one Spirit" (I Cor. vi. 17). Our Lord Jesus not only gave up all His riches and became poor to make us rich, but He actually gave Himself for us, taking the place of the guilty that we might be joined to Him (II Cor. viii. 9; Gal. ii. 20).

v. 1, 2. "But Ananias and Sapphira." The tares and the wheat will grow together until the harvest. Until Jesus comes again many a bird will lodge in the branches, but no bird ever becomes a branch. The commands, "Walk before Me and be thou sincere" and "Thou shalt be sincere with the Lord thy God" (Gen. xvii. 1, margin; Deut. xxi. 13), are always binding, and "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully" (Jer. xlvi. 10), seems to be always a necessary warning. When Abram and Sara agreed to act a lie and Isaac and Rebekah did the same (Gen. xii. 11-13; xx. 2; xvi. 7), which of us can say that the eyes as a flame of fire may not see some deceit in our inmost hearts? We are not our own, but bought with His precious blood.

3, 4. "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost? Thou hast lied unto God." See the oneness of the Father and the Spirit, for in lying to the Spirit they lied unto God. See also the oneness of the Spirit and the believer, for in lying to Peter and the others they lied unto the Spirit. Notice also that it was the work of the devil, the father of lies, in Ananias, the same adversary who in the garden of Eden lied to Eve and has ever since been practicing his ungodly wiles. Contrast Peter filled with the Spirit and Ananias filled with Satan and the high priest and others filled with indignation or envy (chapters iv, 8, 31; v. 3, 17). If filled with the Spirit, evil can find no place in us. The Spirit of Truth and the father of lies each desires us, but neither can fill us unless we welcome them.

5, 6. Dead and buried in a few hours; gone from the earth and from his possessions, but gone where? To the true child of God death is gain and far better than sojourning here. But what of Ananias? His name means, "Jehovah is gracious." But did he know the saving grace of Jehovah? We know that there is such a thing as being saved as by fire, that Satan may destroy the flesh and yet the spirit be saved, that some of the members of the church were sickly and some dying because of sin and that we are told to judge nothing before the time with the Lord come (I Cor. iii. 13; v. 5; xi. 30; iv. 5), yet Rev. xxi. 8, gives us little hope for Ananias.

7, 8. "It was about the space of three hours after when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in." Three hours a widow, but not aware of it. How long they had journeyed together in these mortal bodies we do not know, but his journey has ended, and hers is about to, though she is all unconscious of it. Perhaps she had come seeking him, wondering why he delayed to return home. It is a sad story and should teach us to be sincere with God, who desires truth in the inward parts (Ps. li. 6). If we did not know that Peter was filled with the Spirit, we might feel like questioning his way with her and might wish that he had sought to lead her to repentance, but perhaps her heart was fully set in her to do evil (Eccl. viii. 11).

9, 10. "How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord?" So one with God are His people that when we touch them we touch Him, and as we deal with them we deal with Him (Zech. ii. 8; Acts ix. 4). There is unspeakable comfort and yet a solemn warning in this great truth. How awful is this scene before us! She is for the first time told of her husband's death and at the same time told that she must die, and in a moment she is gone. In the morning they are in health, but united in a lie to God that they may appear before men to be very religious, but before night they are found out (Num. xxxii. 23), and are dead and buried. Two liars in one grave. But their souls—If not saved as by fire, then Luke xvi. 23, first clause, tells their fate. It was the hand of God, and the Judge of all the earth doeth right (Gen. xviii. 25; Rev. xv. 3). See also Acts xii. 23; Jer. xxviii. 16, 17, and yet believe firmly that "God is Love" and "not willing that any should perish" (I John iv. 8; I Pet. iii. 9).

11. "And great fear came upon all the church and upon as many as heard these things." It was a needed lesson for the times, and, although He does not always thus swiftly punish sinners, He always hates sin and tells us that he that telleth lies shall not tarry in His sight (Ps. ci. 7). We cannot but think of the swift judgment upon Aaron's sons at the beginning of God's dealings with Israel (Lev. x. 1, 2). If all liars in the church today and all ministers who use strange fire were thus summarily dealt with, there would be no end of funerals and a truly great fear upon many. Although God seems to keep silence concerning the corruptions and abominations in His professed people, He assures us that He will not always keep silence and that judgment must begin at the house of God (Ps. ii. 3; I Pet. iv. 17).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 9, "The Pathway of Peace"—Text, John xiv. 25-31; Isa. xxvi. 3.

"Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you."

Peace is quietness. It is restfulness and calm. It is the absence of agitation, fear and restlessness. It is based on confidence or assurance of safety. It has an element of contentedness and comfortableness; a consciousness that things are going well, and I am secure from harm.

Christ's legacy is the priceless boon of peace. He is declared to be the Son of God, and Paul pronounced Him to have been the Creator and Preserver of all worlds. Yet in His earthly lifetime He said of Himself, "the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." In departing from among men in the visible world He made no will apportioning kingdoms among His chief followers, as did Alexander. He gave no crowns during lifetime, as did Napoleon. His sole possession at death was an outer robe, which His Roman executioners tore in pieces and divided and an inner garment for which they gambled.

Multitudes have fought and perished for the possession of His tomb, which was not His at all, but only borrowed for a few hours at most. Other multitudes have sought for the wood of His cross as a holy thing, and it was not His at all, but Roman, and may have tortured many before and after. Crosses, sepulchers and kingdoms in plenty shall His followers find, but these are not His legacies. What the world had never before found and never since seen, except as He gave it, that is the heritage left His loved ones—peace!

Isaiah foresaw and foretold, "Thou wilt keep Him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee."

Peace He leaves with us because we now have confidence in God's plans and purposes. Never before could men rest assured that things were working for good. The problem of Job was the problem of every man, but the end of Job was reached by few, and strife instead of peace seemed the lot of most. Hope was hardly to be indulged, but endurance must be cultivated the best possible. All is so changed by the coming of Jesus. He endured to the end, and hope for us rises with His resurrection and does not go when He ascends. We have not seen the end of God's working, but we have seen Jesus and believe in God. We trust and have peace.

His peace! That is more than the conviction that God is ruling and that "all things work together for good." It is more than passive resting in divine protection. It is the active outgoing of passionate heart affection and yearning desire to bless. It is adoration of the all excellent One with absorbing soul fervor. "Having loved His own, He loved them unto the end." He gave Himself for and to them. They find peace in this love.

"Not as the world giveth." Surely not! Not given because, dying, it can no longer be hoarded or selfishly used. The world gives what it can no longer keep. Jesus gives what He will ever increase as ages pass and our capacity enlarges—love—boundless, refreshing, soul satisfying, the peace of quenchless love, attested by death, abiding in endless life—perfect peace!

Two Great Truths.

The Christian religion emphasizes two great truths. First, it declares with emphasis that men do not have eternal life on the ground of their merit. In this it differs from all false, earthborn religions. False religions usually represent men as seeking God in order to secure salvation. The Christian religion represents God as seeking men in order to save them. Our Lord said to His disciples and through them says to every true disciple, "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." He says again, "No man can come unto Me except the Father who sent Me draw him." The Bible reveals no less clearly and emphatically another great truth, and that is men are saved from their sins, not in them.—Presbyterian Messenger.

Our Pledge.

I will earnestly seek for myself and do what I can to help others attain the highest New Testament standard of experience and life. I will abstain from all those forms of worldly amusement forbidden by the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal church, and I will attend so far as possible the religious meetings of the chapter and the church and take some active part.

In Victory or Defeat.

Two graces need to be learned by every Christian—patience and submission under defeat and modesty in victory.—Christian Intelligencer.

Wherefore?

Wherefore dost thou doubt, O soul?
Wherefore dost thou doubt?
Cannot Christ, thy loving Lord,
Work life's problems out?

Has He not delivered thee
Many a trying hour?
Is He not the same today
In almighty power?

Has His blood not purchased thee?
Art thou not His own?
Through the whelming waters deep
Dost thou go alone?

Would'st thou know the reason why
All these things go wrong?
He will show thee by and by;
Change thy sighs to song.

He will surely bring to thee
Whatsoever is best;
Guide thee all thy journey through
To His promised rest.

Doubt Him not, O troubled soul!
Wherefore be afraid?
Arms of love encompass thee!
Be thou not dismayed!

—Churchman.

RESCUED FROM DRINK

HOW DR. BROWN SAVED A VICTIM OF THE LIQUOR HABIT.

Gave Cashier Who Asked For His Aid a Card Appealing to His Friends Not to Invite Him to Drink With Them.

A Cleveland man tells this characteristic story of the late Rev. Dr. John Wesley Brown, the incident occurring while he was rector of Trinity church in this city. The story was told the narrator by the doctor himself, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer:

One evening a stranger called at the rectory on Superior street, adjoining the church. He was a well dressed, well appearing man, but evidently in deep trouble.

"Dr. Brown," he said, "I have come to you for advice and assistance. I am a victim of the drink habit. I have an excellent position—I am cashier of a wealthy corporation—and I know that I cannot retain it unless I reform. I want you to draw up a pledge for me—make it as strong as you can, please—and I will sign it, and you will witness it."

Dr. Brown leaned back and looked at the man.

"How long have you been drinking to excess?" he asked.

The man told him it was for five or six years, ever since he had obtained his present position. He only drank when he was with his friends. He did not drink at any other time. When he was with his friends, he would overstep himself and drink to excess. Often he did not go on a spree for a whole month, but the attacks were growing more and more frequent. He seemed to be losing his will power.

"My friend," said the doctor, "you do not need a pledge. I see in you the victim of good companionship. You are far from being an ordinary drunkard. If you signed a temperance pledge and broke it—as you would undoubtedly do—it would still further degrade you in your own eyes. I do not advise the pledge."

The man looked dumfounded.

"But what am I to do?" he gasped.

The doctor drew a card from his desk and rapidly wrote a few lines.

"There," he said, "read that."

This is what the man read:

To My Friends—I find that I am becoming a victim of the liquor habit. If I do not quit, I am sure to lose my position and ruin myself. For God's sake don't ask me to drink with you.

"There," said Dr. Brown, "sign that, and I will sign it as a witness. All I ask of you is to show the card when temptation is at your elbow. If you fail, come here and tell me about it. There! Good night."

It was a full month before he returned, worried and dejected.

"I expected you long before this," said the doctor. "Tell me about it. Did you show the card?"

"Yes," replied the man. "The first time was the very next night after I called on you. A good friend of mine, a railroad man, came into the office, and after I had checked up his accounts he said, 'Come, Charlie; let us go over to the oyster house and have a drink.' Well, sir, I was reaching for my hat when I remembered the card. I took it out and handed it to him. I thought he would never finish reading it. He looked at me, and he looked at the card, and then he slowly put his arms down on the counter and said, 'Charlie, I would sooner cut that hand off than ask you to drink again.' Well, sir, I showed that card several times after that, and every blessed man that I showed it to took it seriously. Sometimes they said, 'All right, old boy,' sometimes they laid it down without a word. And then—it was last night—I forgot about it, and here I am."

"You are doing well," said the doctor. "Have courage and try and make the interval a little longer next time."

It was three months before the man came back. The next time it was six months.

"And now," said the doctor to the narrator, "it is nearly two years since his last call, and I have reason to believe that he will not find it necessary to come to me again. So you see I was quite right. It was not a pledge that he needed."

Where Crime Begins.

An English prison chaplain has made the statement that in all cases of children convicted of crime the root of the evil is found at home. Long ago Victor Hugo wrote that "nine-tenths of the crime in France is due to neglected childhood." The whole business of the liquor traffic depends upon the men and women who drink, and we know that were drinking stopped crime would be reduced to a minimum. The hope of the world's redemption is with the children, and who shall save the children if not the mothers—the organized motherhood of the temperance reform?—Union Signal.

Drunkennes in London.

London has sixty miles of saloons, and every week 3,000 are convicted of drunkenness. There are in London 60,000 people who have utterly abandoned themselves to drink, and 10,000 of these are under sixteen years of age.

The C. T. A. U. Is Growing.

The membership of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America was given at its recent Hartford convention as 88,441. There are 970 local unions. The increase during the past year was 93 unions and 4,190 members.

BRO. W. F. BAIN.

Brother Bain was one of our old men, and yet it was a surprise to the brethren when they heard that he had gone from the earthly to the heavenly company. He had been a member of the Conference for fifty years, and until the last few years had been effective, serving until the time of his superannuation on large, heavy circuits. He was a man of fine physical appearance, a commanding and yet a fatherly presence, which prepossessed those who came in contact with him. His spirit was liberal and unselfish, and he delighted to bring pleasure to the hearts of others. His gifts were evident to all, and he wrought well for his Master. He was unusually gifted in prayer, and for many years, with the exception of the last session, has made the prayer at the close of the Conference session. He made a touching address at the last Conference session, which was a fitting testimony of his spiritual state, and which was a blessing to his brethren, because they believed in his genuineness. He has always been held in regard by the editor and his household. He was the pastor on the Louisa Circuit at the time of the editor's marriage, and performed the marriage ceremony with a tender solemnity, which deepened the impression upon all of the importance of such occasions. Although comparative strangers before, since that time we have usually sought each other out, and have enjoyed our little meetings together. He was a real Christian gentleman, and we believe he passed from the love and esteem of his brethren on earth to the fellowship of the saints in light. We append the facts of his life, taken from the Conference sketches:

"He was the third son of Rev. Geo. A. and Frances M. Bain, and was born in Williamsburg, Va., July 20, 1831. His father being a member of the Virginia Conference, his son spent his boyhood, up to his fifteenth year, in the home of an itinerant. Then the family was located in the city of Petersburg, Va. He was converted April 8, 1847, under the ministry of Rev. G. W. Langhorne, and joined the Church on the 11th as a probationer, and after six months' trial, was received in full connection; made class leader by Rev. N. Head in 1850; licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of Washington-St. Station, and recommended to the Virginia Conference in October, 1851. Rev. H. B. Cowles, Presiding Elder. He was received at the Conference holding its session in Alexandria. He has travelled the following circuits: 1852, Gloucester as junior, with Rev. L. S. Reed; 1853, Murfreesboro, N. C., with Rev. J. D. Lumsden; ordained deacon in Lynchburg by Bishop Paine; 1854, contrary to his expressed wishes, was sent in charge of Fauquier; 1855, Manassas; ordained elder in Petersburg by Bishop James O. Andrew; 1856, Lunenburg; 1857, Staunton Circuit; 1858, Mathews; 1859, Amelia; 1860-'61, Springfield; 1862-'63-'64-'65, Campbell; 1877-'78-'79-'80, Bedford; four years in charge of Dorchester Circuit, Maryland; two years on Madison Circuit; Louisa Circuit, four years; Gordonsville, four years. At the Conference of 1894 he was granted a superannuated relation," and made his home in Gordonsville until quite recently, when he moved to Charlottesville, and from there was translated to the better world.

QUESTIONS OF LAW AND ORDER.

It may be said that the rights here claimed for the Conferences are dangerous. Be it so. Their infringement or abridgment would be far more dangerous.

We have a wonderful governmental system in its relationships, and, if these be observed, it is easy of operation. If any of the parties go off at a tangent and should be brought back to their rightful place in the system, there is no reason why any should become hysterical, lose their heads, and raise the cry of discourtesy, and charge sinister motives. As long as men blunder they may expect to be called to account for it, be they high or low, and this is both a right and a duty of all who have responsibilities. None are infallible, therefore none are above criticism. Criticism, when abused, is hurtful; but when made in the right spirit, and is intelligently done, it is wholesome. If the day should ever come that the idea should prevail that men intrusted with large interests and powers are to be exempt from criticism, sad indeed will be the day, and fearful the results.

P. S.—Since writing the above Bishop Morrison has denied that he made any apology.

Religious News.

The paper on "The Atonement" was read this morning at the Methodist Preachers' meeting by the Rev. Mr. Chandler. The paper denounces the higher criticism, declaring for the old orthodox doctrine.—Leader.

Rev. J. T. Mastin preached at High Street church yesterday morning, and a collection, amounting to between $150 and $200, was taken up for the Virginia Conference Orphanage, located near Richmond. A similar collection was raised at Wesley last night, to which congregation Rev. J. T. Mastin also preached.

Rev. J. T. Whitley, pastor of Centenary Methodist church, preached last night to a large congregation on the subject, "Shall We Lynch Our Criminals?" His text was Acts 19: 36-38, "Ye ought to be quiet and do nothing rashly—the law is open."

The sermon was a strong and eloquent argument against mob violence, and viewed the question of lynch law from both a Scriptural and legal standpoint.—News.

Rev. Dr. H. E. Johnson, pastor of Laurel-St. Methodist church, preached a special sermon last night to the young men. Despite the inclement weather, an appreciative audience was present.

The Doctor's text was "Be Strong," and he delivered one of the best sermons ever heard in that church. It showed deep study, and was attentively listened to.

Dr. Johnson is meeting with great success at Laurel-St. church. He is preaching able and eloquent sermons, and is attracting people of all denominations. He is also making the Wednesday night service more interesting by taking different subjects at each service, which relates to some branch of the work of the church. His subject for this week will be "The Officiary of the Church, and Her Duties."—Leader.

At High Street Methodist church Rev. George E. Booker is preaching a series of sermons to young men. Last night the pastor preached on the subject: "The uncertain nature of two things which young men seek." Wealth and fame were the "two things" discussed, and the sermon was an able one and splendidly delivered. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, there was a large congregation present, many of whom were young men.

Rev. George E. Booker is one of the greatest young preachers of the Conference. He is very popular not only with his own people, but with all denominations.

Rev. George R. Stuart, of Tennessee, arrived here to-day, and to-morrow he will begin a protracted meeting at Main-Street Methodist church, which will continue for ten days.

Mr. Stuart comes to Danville in response to an invitation extended by Rev. T. McN. Simpson, pastor of the Main-Street Methodist church, in which many of the city pastors heartily united.

Mr. Stuart was for years associated with Rev. Sam Jones in religious work, and this fact gives assurance that the meeting will be one of unusual interest.

Dr. and Mrs. F. Howard Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, have spent the greater portion of this week in Danville lecturing on missions.

Their description of life among the brethren attracted large congregations to every service.

While here Dr. and Mrs. Taylor were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Schoolfield. They left to-day for Richmond.—Dispatch.

The Methodist Sunday School Association has been fortunate in securing Prof. H. T. Hamil for a series of meetings in the interest of the Sunday school work. Professor Hamil will hold three meetings on Thursday and Friday of this week. His coming is to conduct teachers' institutes in the interest of a new work which has just been entered into by the Methodist Church for Sunday school teachers.

Mr. Hamil is well known in Sunday school circles in this city, and is a great favorite with many. He was here last March with the International Sunday School Workers, and spoke to several large union mass-meetings.

The meetings to be held on Thursday and Friday are not intended to be denominational, but it is hoped that workers from all of the churches in Richmond and Manchester will attend.

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT CLUB.

The Christian Thought Club met in regular session in the pastor's study of Epworth church yesterday at 12 o'clock. Dr. A. Coke Smith, the president, in the chair, and Rev. George W. Jones at the secretary's desk.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Newton, of Salisbury, Md., who continues his membership in the club, was invited to read an essay at a time to be fixed, on the subject, "Ritschl and Ritschlian Tendency."

The programme for the day was an essay by Rev. E. H. Rawlings, of Monumental church, to which the club listened with interest. Mr. Rawlings' subject was "Higher Criticism and the Preacher," and his paper was ably prepared and well received. An impromptu discussion followed its reading.

The club will meet next Monday to hear a review of Dr. J. J. Tigert's book, "The Paths that Lead to God," by Rev. George W. Jones.—Virginian-Pilot.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The meeting of the Methodist preachers at Epworth church yesterday morning was largely attended, only one pastor being absent. The Rev. W. R. Proctor, president, presided and prayer was offered by the Rev. J. N. Latham, of Park View church, Portsmouth.

The report of the committee on union revival services to be conducted at a stated period in the three cities—Norfolk, Portsmouth and Berkley—was read by the Rev. R. H. Bennett. The plan of meeting mapped out is as follows:

NORFOLK CHURCHES.

Centenary church—Meetings to begin February 16th and to continue two weeks, ending March 2d. Preachers to conduct these services: Rev. E. T. Dadmun, pastor, assisted by the Revs. R. H. Bennett and J. K. Jolliff.

McKendree, February 16th to March 2d—Rev. W. R. Proctor, pastor, and Revs. J. N. Latham and C. H. McGhee.

PORTSMOUTH.

Monumental, February 16th to March 2d—Rev. E. H. Rawlings, pastor, and Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith and Rev. C. L. Bane.

Port Norfolk, February 16th to March 2d—Rev. T. D. Merritt, pastor, and Revs. Ernest Stevens and W. T. Green.

SECOND ROUND.

From March 2d to March 16th, Cumberland Street, Norfolk—Rev. C. L. Bane, pastor, and Revs. W. Asbury Christian and Ernest Stevens.

Lambert's Point, March 2d to March 16th—Rev. C. H. McGhee, pastor, and Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith and Rev. Graham H. Lambeth.

Central, Portsmouth, March 2d to March 16th—Rev. W. T. Green, pastor, and Revs. H. C. Cheatham and E. T. Dadmun.

Liberty Street, South Norfolk, March 2d to March 16th—Rev. S. S. Lambeth, D. D., pastor, and Revs. J. N. Latham and W. R. Proctor.

THIRD ROUND.

Epworth, Norfolk, March 16th to March 30th—Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., and Rev. R. H. Bennett, pastors, and Revs. W. A. Christian and E. T. Dadmun.

Park View, Portsmouth, March 16th to March 30th—Rev. J. N. Latham, pastor, and Revs. E. H. Rawlings and Daniel T. Merritt.

Memorial, Berkley—Rev. W. A. Christian, pastor, and Revs. C. L. Bane and George W. Jones.

If the interest at any of the churches in which these union services are to be held should justify a continuance of the meetings the committee will provide for preachers to fill any appointments, so that the preachers who are engaged in the services where there is an awakening on the part of the people on the subject of conversion can continue with the pastors in charge. The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

The chair asked for report from the churches for Sunday, and the following responded through their several pastors:

Seamen's Bethel—Rev. J. B. Merritt had a full day Sunday and interesting services.

Rev. George Wesley Jones preached to excellent congregations at Trinity Sunday, and conducted the Sunday school at Park Place in the morning.

Park View—Rev. J. N. Latham had the usual good congregations and profitable services.

Rev. Ernest Stevens reported the congregations at Owens' Memorial larger than usual, and a decided improvement in the Sunday school.

Rev. C. W. Cain said that sickness had prevented him from attending the three previous meetings, but that he was glad to be able to be with his brethren again. He did not attend service Sunday.

Port Norfolk—Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had a very pleasant day. He reported a fine Sunday school, with the addition of five new scholars. Large and attentive congregations attended the morning and evening service. In the afternoon he preached at Cottage Place.

Epworth—Rev. R. H. Bennett reported a fine attendance on the Sunday school, with a perceptible increase on the part of the grown people. He enjoyed listening to a fine sermon by Dr. Smith in the morning. At night Mr. Bennett preached on "The Immortality of the Soul, or Does Death End Existence?" to a large and thoughtful congregation.

Rev. George H. McFadden reported sixteen new scholars received Sunday into the Sunday school at Wright Memorial and twenty-five additions to the school during the month. He preached morning and night to large congregations.

Cumberland Street—Rev. C. H. Bane said that the attendance was surprisingly large Sunday, considering the attitude of the weather. There was a full Sunday school and attentive and thoughtful congregations to hear him morning and night. In the evening he preached on "Noah, the Righteous Man." The annual rally of the Epworth League was held in the afternoon and a fine address was made by Rev. E. T. Dadmun on "A Great Awakening."

Centenary—Rev. E. T. Dadmun had a busy day. He reported a fine Sunday school. At the 11 o'clock service he preached to the largest congregation since he has been pastor of the church. He tried to stir his people up to the importance of pushing the matter of their new church building in Ghent. He said the object in selecting the present site was in order to be in a location that would be of the greatest advantage to his people, whose homes would be in the immediate neighborhood of the new edifice. He attended the sixth anniversary of the Junior Epworth League of his church Sunday afternoon, and conducted the graduating exercises. Thirteen members graduated, each of whom exhibited a remarkable knowledge of the Old Scriptures. At night he had the usual congregation to hear him.

Memorial, Berkley—Rev. W. Asbury Christian received four new members since his last report—three by certificate, and one by profession of faith. He preached morning and night to large congregations.

Huntersville—The pastor, Rev. H. C. Cheatham, preached at 11 A. M. and the Rev. Mr. Wray at night. Mr. Cheatham said the Sunday school is a very good one, and well attended. He said that Huntersville, for its population, had the largest body of unconverted and non-going church people than of any community he had served.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings had the usual services at Monumental Sunday.

Lambert's Point—Rev. C. H. McGhee reported a good Sunday school, with some additions. A good congregation in the morning and a fair-sized one at WASHINGTON. —The charm of an exalted religion is by Dr. Talmage in this discourse illustrated and commended; text, Job xxviii, 17, "The crystal cannot equal it."

Many of the precious stones of the Bible have come to prompt recognition, but for the present I take up the less valuable crystal. Job, in my text, compares saving wisdom with a specimen of topaz. An infidel chemist or mineralogist would pronounce the latter worth more than the former, but Job makes an intelligent comparison, looks at religion and then looks at the crystal and pronounces the former as of far superior value to the latter, exclaiming in the words of my text, "The crystal cannot equal it."

Now, it is not a part of my sermonic design to depreciate the crystal, whether it be found in Cornish mine or Harz mountain or Mammoth cave or tinkling among the pendants of the chandeliers of a palace. The crystal is the star of the mountain; it is the queen of the cave; it is the eardrop of the hills; it finds its heaven in the diamond. Among all the pages of natural history there is no page more interesting to me than the page crystallographic. But I want to show you that Job was right when, taking religion in one hand and the crystal in the other, he declared that the former is of far more value and beauty than the latter, recommending it to all the people and to all the ages, declaring, "The crystal cannot equal it."

In the first place, I remark that religion is superior to the crystal in exactness. That shapeless mass of crystal against which you accidentally dashed your foot is laid out with more exactness than any earthly city. There are six styles of crystallization and all of them divinely ordained. Every crystal has mathematical precision. God's geometry reaches through it, and it is a square or it is a rectangle or it is a rhomboid or in some way it has a mathematical figure. Now, religion beats that in the simple fact that spiritual accuracy is more beautiful than material accuracy. God's attributes are exact, God's law exact, God's decrees exact, God's management of the world exact. Never counting wrong, though he counts the grass blades and the stars and the sands and the cycles. His providences never dealing with us perpendicularly when those providences ought to be oblique, nor laterally when they ought to be vertical. Everything in our life arranged without any possibility of mistake. Each life a six headed prism. Born at the right time, dying at the right time. There are no "happen so's" in our theology. If I thought this was a slipshod universe, I would be in despair. God is not an anarchist. Law, order, symmetry, precision, a perfect square, a perfect rectangle, a perfect rhomboid, a perfect circle. The edge of God's robe of government never frays out. There are no loose screws in the world's machinery. It did not just happen that Napoleon was attacked with indigestion at Borodino so that he became incompetent for the day. It did not just happen that John Thomas, the missonary, on a heathen island, waiting for an outfit and orders for another missionary tour, received that outfit and those orders in a box that floated ashore, while the ship and the crew that carried the box were never heard of. I believe in a particular providence. I believe God's geometry may be seen in all our life more beautifully than in crystallography. Job was right, "The crystal cannot equal it."

Religion Transparent.

Again, I remark that religion is superior to the crystal in transparency. We know not when or by whom glass was first discovered. Beads of it have been found in the tomb of Alexander Severus. Vases of it are brought up from the ruins of Herculaneum. There were female adornments made out of it 3,000 years ago—those adornments found now attached to the mummies of Egypt. A great many commentators believe that my text means glass. What would we do without the crystal—the crystal in the window to keep out the storm and let in the day, the crystal over the watch, defending its delicate machinery, yet allowing us to see the hour; the crystal of the telescope, by which the astronomer brings distant worlds so near he can inspect them? Oh, the triumphs of the crystals in the celebrated windows of Rouen and Salisbury! But there is nothing so transparent in a crystal as in our holy religion. It is a transparent religion. You put it to your eye, and you see man—his sin, his soul, his destiny. You look at God, and you see something of the grandeur of his character. It is a transparent religion. Infidels tell us it is opaque. Do you know why they tell us it is opaque? It is because they are blind. "The natural man receiveth not the things of God because they are spiritually discerned." There is no trouble with the crystal; the trouble is with the eyes which try to look through it. We pray for vision, Lord, that our eyes might be opened! When the eye salve cures our blindness, then we find that religion is transparent.

It is a transparent Bible. All the mountains of the Bible come out—Sinai, the mountain of the law; Pisgah, the mountain of prospect; Olivet, the mountain of instruction; Calvary, the mountain of sacrifice. All the rivers of the Bible come out—Euphrates, or the river of paradisaical beauty; Jordan, or the river of holy ebriism; Cherith, or the river of prophetic supply; Nile, or the river of palaces, and the pure river of life from under the throne, clear as crystal. While reading this Bible, after our eyes have been touched by grace, we find it all transparent, and the earth rocks, now with crucifixion agony and now with judgment terror, and Christ appears in some of his 256 titles, as far as I can count them—the Bread, the Rock, the Captain, the Commander, the Conqueror, the Star, and on and beyond any capacity of mine to rehearse. Transparent religion!

Illuminates and Brightens.

The providence that seemed dark before becomes pellucid. Now you find God is not trying to put you down. Now you understand why you lost that child and why you lost your property. It was to prepare you for eternal treasures. And why sickness came, it being the precursor of immortal juvenescence. And now you understand why they lied about you and tried to drive you hither and thither. It was to put you in the glorious company of such men as Ignatius, who when he went out to be destroyed by the lions said, "I am the wheat, and the teeth of the wild beasts must first grind me before I can become pure bread for Jesus Christ," or the company of such men as "that ancient Christian martyr" who, with standing in the midst of the amphitheater waiting for the lions to come out of their cave and destroy him, and the people in the galleries jeering and shouting, "The lions!" replied, "Let them come on!" and then, stooping down toward the cave where the wild beasts were roaring to get out, again cried, "Let them come on!" Ah, yes, it is persecution to put you in glorious company, and, while there are many things that you will have to postpone to the future world for explanation, I tell you that it is the whole tendency of your religion to unravel and explain and interpret and illumine and irradiate. Job was right. It is a glorious transparency. "The crystal cannot equal it."

I remark again that religion surpasses the crystal in its beauty. The lump of crystal is put under the magnifying glass of the crystallographer, and he sees in it indescribable exquisiteness—snowdrift and splinters of hoarfrost and corals and wreaths and stars and crowns and constellations of conspicuous beauty. The fact is that crystal is so beautiful that I can think of but one thing in all the universe that is as beautiful, and that is the religion of the Bible. No wonder this Bible represents that religion as the daybreak, as the apple blossoms, as the glitter of a king's banquet. It is the joy of the whole earth.

People talk too much about their cross and not enough about their crown. Do you know that the Bible mentions a cross but twenty-seven times, while it mentions a crown eighty times? Ask that old man what he thinks of religion. He has been a close observer. He has been cultivating an aesthetic taste. He has seen the sunrises of half a century. He has been an early riser. He has been an admirer of cameos and corals and all kinds of beautiful things. Ask him what he thinks of religion, and he will tell you: "It is the most beautiful thing I ever saw. The crystal cannot equal it."

Beauty of God's Love.

Beautiful in its symmetry. When it presents God's character, it does not present him as having love like a great protuberance on one side of his nature, but makes that love in harmony with his justice—a love that will accept all those who come to him and a justice that will by no means clear the guilty. Beautiful religion in the sentiment it implants! Beautiful religion in the fact that it proposes to garland and enthrone and emparadise an immortal spirit! Solomon says it is a lily. Paul says it is a crown. The Apocalypse says it is a fountain kissed of the sun. Ezekiel says it is a foliated cedar. Christ says it is a bridegroom come to fetch home a bride. While Job in the text takes up a whole vase of precious stones—the topaz and the sapphire and the chrysoprasus—he takes out of this beautiful vase just one crystal and holds it up until it gleams in the warm light of the eastern sky, and he exclaims, "The crystal cannot equal it!"

Oh, it is not a stale religion, it is not a stupid religion, it is not a toothless hag, as some seem to have represented it; it is not a Meg Merrilies with shriveled arm come to scare the world. It is the fairest daughter of God, heirless of all his wealth, her cheeks the morning sky, her voice the music of the south wind, her step the dance of the sea. Come and woo her. The Spirit and the Bride say come, and whosoever will let him come. Do you agree with Solomon and say it is a lily? Then pluck it and wear it over your heart. Do you agree with Paul and say it is a crown? Then let this hour be your coronation. Do you agree with the Apocalypse and say it is a springing fountain? Then come and slake the thirst of your soul. Do you believe with Ezekiel and say it is a foliated cedar? Then come under its shadow. Do you believe with Christ and say it is a bridegroom come to fetch home a bride? Then strike hands with your Lord and King while I pronounce you everlastingly one. Or if you think with Job that it is a jewel then put it on your hand like a ring, on your neck like a bead, on your forehead like a star, while, looking into the mirror of God's word, you acknowledge "The crystal cannot equal it."

Superior to Crystal.

Again, religion is superior to the crystal in its transformations. The diamond is only a crystallization. Carbonate of lime rises till it becomes calcite or aragonite. Red oxide of copper crystallizes into cubes and octahedrons. Those crystals which adorn our persons and our homes and our museums have only been resurrected from forms that were far from lustrous. Scientists for ages have been examining these wonderful transformations. But I tell you in the gospel of the Son of God there is a more wonderful transformation. Over souls by reason of sin black as coal and hard as iron God, by his comforting grace, stoops and says, "They shall be mine in the day when I make up my jewels."

"What," say you, "will God wear jewelry?" If he wanted it, he could make the stars of heaven his belt and have the evening cloud for the sandals of his feet. But he does not want that adornment. He will not have that jewelry. When God wants jewelry, he comes down and digs it out of the depths and darkness of sin. These souls are all crystallizations of mercy. He puts them on, and he wears them in the presence of the whole universe. He wears them on the hand that was nailed, over the heart that was pierced, on the temples that were stung. "They shall be mine," saith the Lord, "in the day when I make up my jewels." Wonderful transformation! Where sin abounded grace shall much more abound. The carbon becomes the solitaire. "The crystal cannot equal it."

Now, I have no liking for those people who are always enlarging in Christian meetings about their early dissipation. Do not go into the particulars, my brothers. Simply say you were sick, but make no display of your ulcers. The chief stock in trade of some ministers and Christian workers seems to be their early crimes and dissolutions. The number of pockets you picked and the number of chickens you stole make very poor prayer meeting rhetoric. Besides that, it discourages other Christian people who never got drunk or stole anything. But it is pleasant to know that those who were farthest down have been brought highest up. Out of infernal serfdom into eternal liberty. Out of darkness into light. From coal to the solitaire. "The crystal cannot equal it."

Light of the Gospel.

But, my friends, the chief transforming power of the gospel will not be seen in this world and not until heaven breaks upon the soul. When that light falls upon the soul, then you will see the crystals. What a magnificent setting for these jewels of eternity! I sometimes hear people representing heaven in a way that is far from attractive to me. It seems almost a vulgar heaven as they represent it, with great blotches of color and bands of music making a deafening racket. John represents heaven as exquisitely beautiful. Three crystals! In one place he

Braved the Plague.

Armstrong Smith, a young Englishman who showed his bravery in helping to put down the bubonic plague in Honolulu and its neighborhood, has just returned to England. When every one fled in the presence of the pestilence, he, although described as being "pale and thin from overwork and constant knowledge of his peril, the ghost of his former self, warned by all who were close enough to advise, himself a suspect, stuck to his post and his patients." When the danger was passed, he was asked what he wished most to do, and he replied that he always wanted to be a physician. He was urged to adopt this course, and when he replied that he had not enough money for the purpose a committee of the leading citizens gave him a purse of $1,000, asking him to accept it to study medicine or to apply to any other purpose he chose. Mr. Smith has taught in the Princess Kaiulani school for several years.

Shows Erased Writings.

A new use for the X rays has been found in the examination of ancient manuscripts and palimpsests. It was a custom of the ancients to erase, or partially erase, manuscripts on parchment for the sake of the writing material, parchment being high priced. In many cases the recovery of the erased writing is of great interest and importance. While certain chemicals have been used to render the letters of the older writing legible, their effect has generally been to destroy the manuscript sooner or later. An Italian who has made a deep study of the inks used by the ancient scribes has discovered that many of them are opaque to the X rays and that good radiographs may be made showing the now almost totally invisible writing with great distinctness.

The Princeton Corkscrew Market.

Dr. Patton, president of Princeton university, is more noted for the logic of his sermons than the wit of his speeches. But he can be very humorous on occasion. In an after dinner speech, discussing the advisability of advocating local prohibition in Princeton, he said, "Local prohibition would only create a market for corkscrews."

Last summer he decided to shave off his side whiskers, which he had worn for many years. After shaving off the left side he went to his bedroom, where his wife was sitting, and said: "My dear, I shaved one side. If you like it, I'll shave the other."—Saturday Evening Post.

He Likes Washington.

When Senator Depew was asked if he had learned anything during his first year in the senate, he replied: "Yes; I have learned many things, and one of them is that Washington is the most delightful place of residence in the world. It is just enough of a village to escape the smoke and dust and noise of commerce and industry and give us plenty of parks and shady streets. It is just enough of a city to afford the luxuries, conveniences and diversions that are necessary to the happiness of people with money."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

night. This meeting was one of spiritual power. Mr. McGhee preached at Salem Baptist church in the afternoon.

Rev. D. J. Traynham, of Norfolk Circuit, preached three times Sunday, as follows: At Olive Branch in the morning and Jolliffs and Indiana in the afternoon to good congregations.

McKendree—Rev. W. R. Proctor preached morning and night to the usual large congregations and attended a representative mass-meeting in Park Avenue Baptist church in the interest of prohibition in Brambleton in the afternoon.

Liberty Street—Rev. Dr. S. S. Lambeth reported a large Sunday school and fine congregations at the regular services Sunday.

Rev. D. B. Austin reported the Sunday school at Haygood Memorial a success, and the church getting on nicely—everything working harmoniously.

Rev. George Wesley Jones spoke on the necessity of a Methodist church being built in Park Place. It was an inviting field. He said two lots had been selected at a cost of $700, on which $50 had been paid. He desired to see a chapel erected there, but could not raise the entire amount in his own church. It was not a large congregation. He said there were about thirty Methodist families in Park Place who are without a church home. He asked for assistance from his brethren, saying that there ought to be a Methodist church in Park Place. From the tone of the meeting, it looked as if Mr. Jones will get the desired assistance.

Last night the seating capacity of Wright Memorial M. E. church was taxed to its utmost capacity. Besides the members of Peabody Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, who were present about 120 strong to hear a special sermon by the pastor, an unusually large audience was present. Every seat in the main auditorium and in the galleries was occupied. Many late comers stood during the service. The music, under the direction of Choirmaster Charles Sturtevant, was excellently rendered. Dr. McFaden delivered an able discourse, his theme being "Our Country." At times he rose to thrilling heights of eloquence, and throughout held the rapt attention of his vast audience. His text was: "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places—yea, I have a goodly heritage." Ps. 16: 6. He said in part:

God is the great worker, the Almighty, the infinite worker, filling immensity, not only with His presence, but with the works of His hands. "All things were made by Him."

An intelligent believer in divine revelation cannot be a disbeliever in divine providence. The Bible abounds in examples and declarations of divine control in human affairs. For example, we take the Hebrew Commonwealth; the Lord Himself prescribed their laws, led them to battle against their enemies, the vindication of their rights, and the punishment of their many acts of disobedience.

The divine sovereignty was also asserted over other nations of antiquity as well as over the Hebrews. The proud despotism of Pharaoh was brought to account. The same hand which wrote the Decalogue on tables of stone wrote also Belshazzar's doom on his palace wall and gave the sceptre of Babylon to Cyrus, the chosen of the Lord.

To the careful observer the hand of God is little less conspicuous in the affairs of America than in those of Egypt and Israel.

1. In preparing and preserving a great land for a great people, until now it is in peaceable undisputed possession of one people.

2. But the hand of the Almighty, so conspicuous in preparing a great land, has been no less manifest in preparing a great people able and worthy to possess it.

Religious ideas and purposes have been prominent in every stage of the history of this country, and have given character to the people, their laws, and their civilization. Columbus sailed on the voyage of discovery under the impression of a divine commission. The Puritans who settled New England, the Quakers who colonized Pennsylvania, the Swedes who first planted the standard of civilization in Delaware, and the French Huguenots who had laid the foundation of government of South Carolina, coming from different countries, using different forms of worship, were yet actuated by one common impulse. They were all Christians, to secure liberty of conscience and an asylum where they might worship God unmolested, all alike had left their native land.

Virginia, though settled under different circumstances and by a different class of people, was nevertheless decidedly religious. Thus nearly all the original colonies owed their origin to a religious principle, nobly asserted and maintained by noble men. They were worthy to possess a great land and to found a great empire. Of empire and honors, however, they did not dream. Liberty was the object of their search. But God, whom they worshipped, had broader plans than they.

Who can doubt that He Himself had chosen and gathered them from their different lands, having tried and proved and prepared them that they might be worthy to be put in trust with such a land?

Does it not appear that Providence was preparing them to be one great people?

They heard the voice of God—they recognized His hand—they rightly interpreted the omens of His providence, and their great and obedient souls ratified His will in their immortal "Declaration of Independence."

And so we come to be not only a Christian people, but a nation forever pledged to religious liberty. Character and influence are immortal; from them forces go forth that are recognized factors in fixing the destiny of coming generations; they are the links that bind the past to the present, and the present to the future.

We are the heirs of the past—the parents of the future. Shall the future be worthy the past? O, sons and daughters of America, do you understand the call?—Portsmouth Star.

A brave retreat may show greater courage than a foolhardy advance.

LEE'S FAITHFULNESS.

Characteristics of the Confederate Leader Discussed by Dr. Young.

The services held at Court Street Methodist church Sunday evening in honor of the memory of General Robt. E. Lee were attended by a large congregation. The programme for the occasion was of a most interesting character and included several beautiful and appropriate selections by the choir. The pastor, Dr. W. J. Young, delivered an eloquent and deeply interesting address, which was in part as follows:

That which impresses me, most in General Lee, as in all great men, is his faithfulness to duty as he understood it. In all his positions, up to the breaking out of the war, this was the keynote; as student preparing for his life work, filling a commission in the corps of engineers; in the Mexican war, or as superintendent of the academy at West Point. He did his best. Honors came thick and fast; no man ever came out of any war more honored than he from Mexico. But he did not seek honor. He was unconscious of his greatness: "He wist not that the skin of his face shone." When the State of Virginia decided to withdraw from the Union, he stood by his own people, although he doubted the wisdom of secession, and seemed to fear that the South could not win. He gave up ease and the position of high honor offered him in the North, and, faithful still, chose rather to suffer afflictions with his own State. Nor did he know, when he gave his services to the South, what his position would be; and indeed, at the very beginning his true worth was not fully appreciated. He was faithful to the end, through all the horrible experiences of the war, struggling against greatest odds, until it was useless to try longer. His career again was brilliant. It had been said by a writer of prominence: "It may truly be said that from the time he assumed charge of the army of Northern Virginia until he surrendered at Appomattox, he could not fairly be said to have lost a single battle." But this does not impress you half so much as his faithful devotion amid hardship and loss, to his people's needs.

The devotion of his life to his home is not without its lessons. We seem to hear him say, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, may my right hand forget her cunning. May my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." There ought not to be, there must not be, a narrow sectionalism which thinks of one's home as the whole nation. But it is nevertheless true that he serves his country best who does the best he can for his own State, his own city, his own community. There is glamour about those who are far away that makes at times labor for them more attractive than for those who are at our doors. There is a need to-day as great as in the days of R. E. Lee for pure patriotism and love of the South. There are problems demanding an answer, and we must give it without malice, without hate, with patience, and rigid, faithful adherence to the right—our negro problem, the needs of the poor whites, the demand for better educational facilities in the country, the purification of all our political methods.

It was of a piece with all his life before that, when the war ended he went at once to work, and to work esteemed by men more humble than what he had done before. I have heard them tell how he rode into Lexington on his horse Traveler, to take charge of the college, seeking to avoid publicity, but how, in spite of him, the crowd had gathered to do him homage.

He cheerfully accepted the results of the war, and taught the boys that they were to be loyal to the flag of the Union. Lee's readiness to abide by the results gains in meaning and impressiveness when we remember the high dreams the South had of that great nation they would form—the greatest the earth had ever seen—and how he was the idol of the people, and might well have expected that, in this new republic, he would have the place of honor.

So it is with a truly noble man; he is as great in sorrow as in joy, in the ignominy or in the glory. And you know how he has won the esteem of all men, even of those who had no sympathy with the cause he represented. It was a pleasure to us all to note how, in the recent vote for those who were to be honored with a place in the halls of the Temple of Fame, he was accorded a place high in the list.

Above all else, be it remembered that General Lee was a Christian, a devout servant and worshipper of the Lord Jesus Christ. His last conscious act on earth was a prayer. There is no abiding character, no moral life worth the living except that which is built on faith in God and in Jesus Christ, His Son.—News.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At the 1902 January meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of West Brunswick Circuit, the following resolutions were adopted:

1. That in the death of our beloved sister, Mrs. Laura H. Connelly, our society loses a cherished member, whose consistent Christian life, together with her triumphant death, furnish both inspiration and example to us and to all who knew her.

2. That we extend to her sorrowing loved ones the assurance of our sympathy, and that we sorrow with them and pray for their comforting.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, and copies furnished for publication to the Richmond Christian Advocate and the Southern Methodist Recorder.

AS OTHERS SEE IT.

(From Wesleyan Christian Advocate.)

Below will be found an editorial from the New York Sun of December 22d, that will indicate the widespread interest in our proper settlement as a Church of what is known as the "War Claim" under the caption: "A Case of Conscience." The Sun says:

A case of conscience will come up before the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its meeting at Dallas, in Texas, next May; and that it should arise will be highly creditable to the moral sense of the Southern Methodists. It involves a very remarkable and very interesting matter of history of the civil war and of proceedings of Congress.

Before the civil war the Southern Methodists had established at Nashville, in Tennessee, a publishing house for the printing and distribution of religious literature, and had invested in it and its plant the great sum of $700,000. When Nashville was occupied by the Union army in 1862, this establishment was seized, and for about two years used for Government printing. The town having surrendered and the property of the citizens being under the protection of the national authority, a measure was introduced into the Fifty-fourth Congress giving the Southern Book Concern $288,000 as compensation for this use and for damages done, and in the next Congress the bill was passed by the votes of both parties. "It was especially gratifying to me," said Senator Clay, of Georgia, speaking in the Senate in June, 1898, "that Republican Senators had largely contributed to the passage of the act providing for the payment of a just claim going to a Southern institution." These remarks were called out by a resolution offered the day before by Senator Lodge instructing the Committee on Claims to inquire as to the circumstances which had been connected with the passage of the bill, and the payment of the money under it.

These circumstances as discovered and reported by that committee were very extraordinary. They were that the Book Agents of the Church had agreed to pay and had paid a lobbyist thirty-five per cent. of the amount of damages secured from Congress, or $100,800. As to this contract misrepresentation and duplicity were used to deceive Southern Senators. Senator Pasco, of Florida, telegraphed to the agents at Nashville asking if a report of an agreement to pay the lobbyist 40 per cent. was true, and received the answer: "The statement is untrue, and you are hereby authorized to deny it"; and accordingly he made the denial in the Senate. When Senator Bate, of Tennessee, also asked them by telegraph if "40 per cent. or any other fee" had been offered, they reply simply by quoting their dispatch to Senator Pasco.

The truth was that a fee of 35 per cent. had been allowed. Senator Clay, therefore, in a speech on June 10, 1898, expressed his sense of outrage at such dealing, and said that "the conduct of the men who apparently are responsible for this fraud should be ventilated and exposed," for "the Senate was led to believe that this entire sum was to go for the benefit of the Church, when, in fact, more than a third of it was otherwise appropriated." "The Methodist Church of the South, of which for more than a quarter of a century I have been a member," he added, "cannot afford to, and will not, approve, ratify or in any way palliate the conduct of the guilty parties." Moreover, when Senator Hoar, who had favored the bill, said that the Southern Methodist Book Concern "ought properly to return the money to the Treasury of the United States," as having been obtained by false representations, Senator Clay assented. "The idea that it was a business transaction, to be lobbied through Congress," said Senator Bacon, of Georgia, "would have been adhorrent to the mind and thought of almost every Senator and Representative who supported it."

The report of the investigating committee recited the facts, but held the Southern Methodist Church "utterly blameless," its agents alone being responsible. The Bishops of the Church, accordingly, adopted a resolution, in which they gave the assurance "that if the Senate, by affirmative action, declares the passage of the bill due to such misleading statements, we will take the proper steps to have the entire amount returned to the Government." The Senate, however, voted to take no further action in the matter, on the ground that the "injury resulting therefrom affected only the beneficiaries of the fund, and not the United States." That is, the loss fell on the Southern Methodists, and the case of conscience was for them to decide for themselves.

Within a few days the subject has been brought up anew in declarations by the North and the South Georgia Methodist Conferences that, "though the claim was just, the agents had deceived the Senate, and the General Conference should take steps to return the money." This position is the more honorable to them as men of soundness of moral sense, because, in all probability, by such a restitution, the publishing concern would be reduced to bankruptcy, for over one hundred thousand dollars has already been paid to Mr. Stahlman, the agent. "Better that result," say the Georgia Conferences, "than to condone a falsehood."

It is questionable if such moral obliquity will find any more favor at the General Conference in Texas next May than it received from the very honorable Southern Senators and Representatives, who expressed in Congress their indignation at the trick which had been played on them.

It is better that the Southern Book Concern should be bankrupted than that the bankruptcy should be in the moral sense of the Methodist Church.

[In addition to the above editorial it is proper for us to state, that the action of the North and South Georgia Conferences in this matter is based on the Senate's action of February 21, 1899, which, in the judgment of these Conferences, meets the condition of the Bishop's letter to the Senate. And it is also based upon the facts in the case as brought out in the report of the Senate's investigation. For these reasons these Conferences have said that this money should be returned to the government. The Sun is right, "it is right that the Southern Book Concern (if need be) should be bankrupted, than that the bankruptcy should be in the moral sense of the (Southern) Methodist Church.—Editor W. C. A.]

A STORY OF GILBERT STUART.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale tells this new and amusing story about Gilbert Stuart in one of his series of articles called "Memories of a Century," now running in The Outlook:

A great public dinner was given to Isaac Hull by the town of Boston, and he was asked to sit for his picture to Gilbert Stuart, the celebrated artist. The picture, or a copy, is in Faneuil Hall to this day. Everybody is dead now, so that I will make bold to tell one of the anecdotes of the picture. Stuart was himself a great braggart, and he was entertaining Hull with anecdotes of his English success, stories of the Marquis of this and the Baroness of that, which showed how elegant was the society to which he had been accustomed. Unfortunately, in the midst of this grandeur, Mrs. Stuart, who did not know that there was a sitter, came in with her apron on and her head tied up with some handkerchief, from the kitchen, and cried out, "Did you mean to have that leg of mutton boiled or roasted?" To which Stuart replied with presence of mind to be recommended to all husbands, "Ask your mistress."

For the first time there is given to the public in an article by Mr. George Kennan which appears in The Outlook of February 1st, an exact statement of the various plans proposed for enlarging the White House. Mr. Kennan has been aided in the preparation of this article by Colonel Bingham, the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the designs of the architect, Mr. F. D. Owen, have been placed at his disposal. The illustration of the article include not only pictures of the White House as it will appear if the proposed changes are carried out, but also views of the White House and from the White House as it is, from photographs taken expressly for this article.

Under the title, "The Story of Home Gardens," the movement in Cleveland, which has had for its object the beautifying of home surroundings, and especially the advocacy of Home Gardens, is described in The Outlook Magazine number for February in a most interesting way by Star Cadwallader. The illustration and decoration of the article make it particularly effective.

Sir Charles W. Dilke contributes to The Cosmopolitan for February an article on "The Naval Strength of Nations," which gives not only a most interesting and comprehensive account of the navies of the great powers, but also a clear insight into world politics. Few men possess such knowledge as the author's, gained from years of experience in a diplomatic and political career. The article is so broad in scope and straightforward in treatment that it will be read with interest not alone by statesmen, but by every one whose thoughts travel beyond the immediate wants of a single day.

The Cosmopolitan is fortunate in its fiction for February. Stories of love, adventure and humor from the pens of famous authors make the "Midwinter Fiction Number" vitally interesting. "S. Cohn & Son," by Zangwill, deals with the Anglicization of a Jew, and the inevitable tragedy of his love for an English girl, whose race prejudice triumphs over her nobler feelings. In "The Valley of the Dead" Thomas A. Janvier pictures the struggle of a dashing young engineer between love and duty.

THIS CLIMATE IS GOOD enough for anybody with weak lungs. The patient need not travel. He can get well here with the help of Allen's Lung Balsam, taken frequently when coughing and shortness of breath after exercise serve notice upon him that serious pulmonary trouble is not far away. Allen's Lung Balsam is free from any form of opium.

says, "Tier light was like a precious stone, clear as crystal." In another place he says, "I saw a pure river from under the throne, clear as crystal." In another place he says, "Before the throne there was a sea of glass clear as crystal." Three crystals! John says crystal atmosphere. That means health. Balm of eternal June. What weather after the world's east wind! No rack of stormclouds. One breath of that air will cure the worst tubercle. Crystal light on all the leaves; crystal light shimmering on the topaz of the temples; crystal light tossing in the plumes of the equestrians of heaven on white horses. But "the crystal cannot equal it." John says crystal river. That means joy. Deep and ever rolling. Not one drop of the Potomac or the Hudson or the Rhine to soil it; not one tear of human sorrow to imblitter it. Crystal, the rain out of which it was made; crystal, the bed over which it shall roll and ripple; crystal, its infinite surface. But "the crystal cannot equal it." John says crystal sea. That means multitudinously vast, vast in rapture, rapture vast as the sea, deep as the sea, strong as the sea, ever changing as the sea; billows of light, billows of beauty, blue with skies that were never clouded and green, with depths that were never fathomed; Arc-tics and Antartics and Mediterraneans and Atlantics and Pacifics in crystalline magnificence. Three crystals—crystal light falling on a crystal river, crystal river rolling into a crystal sea. But "the crystal cannot equal it."

Happy Transformation.

"Oh," says some one, putting his hand over his eyes, "can it be that I who have been in so much sin and trouble will ever come to those crystals?" Yes, it may be—it will be. Heaven we must have, whatever we have or have not, and we come here to get it. "How much must I pay for it?" you say. You will pay for it just as much as the coal pays to become the diamond. In other words, nothing. The same Almighty power that makes the crystal in the mountain will change your heart, which is harder than stone, for the promise is, "I will take away your stony heart, and I will give you a heart of flesh."

"Oh," says some one, "it is just the doctrine I want. God is to do everything, and I am to do nothing." My brother, it is not the doctrine you want. The coal makes no resistance. It hears the resurrection voice in the mountain, and it comes to crystallization; but your heart resists. The trouble with you, my brother, is the coal wants to stay coal.

I do not ask you to throw open the door and let Christ in. I only ask that you stop bolting it and barring it. My friends, we will have to get rid of our sins. I will have to get rid of my sins, and you will have to get rid of your sins. What will we do with our sins among the three crystals? The crystal atmosphere would display our pollution. The crystal river would be befouled with our touch. Transformation must take place now or no transformation at all. Give sin full chance in your heart, and the transformation will be downward instead of upward. Instead of a crystal it will be a cinder.

In the days of Carthage a Christian girl was condemned to die for her faith, and a boat was bedaubed with tar and pitch and filled with combustibles and set on fire, and the Christian girl was placed in the boat, and the wind was offshore, and the boat floated away with its precious treasure. No one can doubt that boat landed at the shore of heaven. Sin wants to put you in a fiery boat and shove you off in an opposite direction—off from peace, on from God, off from heaven, everlastingly off, and the port toward which you would sail would be a port of darkness, and the guns that would greet you would be the guns of despair, and the flags that would wave at your arrival would be the black flags of death. Oh, my brother, you must either kill sin or sin will kill you. It is no exaggeration when I say that any man or woman that wants to be saved may be saved. Tremendous choice! A thousand people are choosing this moment between salvation and destruction, between light and darkness, between charred ruin and glorious crystallization.

A GAY DECEIVER.*Some of the Odd Little Ways That Alcohol Lies.

Dr. D. H. Mann in The International Good Templar says:

Some people drink to make themselves hilarious and happy. Here they deceive themselves. The temporary activity that the alcohol imparts to the brain is simply a production from the dilatation of the cerebral blood vessels which produces temporary exhilaration. But it is only temporary, always being followed by a little depression more or less, according to the extent to which the stimulation or irritation is carried.

As we have already learned, the effects of alcohol are more marked upon the brain than upon any other organ of the body. The depression is caused by the paralyzing effect of the drink, often leading to an utter loss of self control. Here again alcohol proves itself a gay deceiver by making the boisterous drinker do things for the amusement of others which he would not do when in his right mind, and those which are disgusting to his associates unless they be in the same maudlin condition.

That sort of increased buoyancy is damaging to the constitution, debilitating instead of strengthening, irritating instead of soothing, and every repeated periodical of the practice is one step more toward an untimely end.

In many other ways it is a gay deceiver. It makes a man boast of riches when he has not a dollar to his name (the saloon keeper has it); it makes him feel independent of his fellows when he is entirely dependent; it makes him think he is smart when he is playing the fool. It makes him imagine himself warm when he is cold below the normal. All these and vastly more from the damaged, disturbed condition of the blood vessels of the brain.

Again, many imagine themselves impregnable to the power of infectious diseases if they be well filled up with tanglefoot whisky, brandy or some other strong member of the alcohol family.

But that, too, is a grave error, for the condition of the system under the influence of alcohol renders it far more susceptible to pestiferous influences because of the temporarily weakened condition of the nerves, blood vessels and viscera of the body.

To be true, to have every form of falsehood, to live a brave, true, real life—that is to love God. God is infinite; and to love the boundless, reaching from grace to grace, adding charity to faith and rising upward ever to see the ideal still above us, and to die with it unattained, aiming insatiably to be perfect even as the Father is perfect—that is to love God.—F. W. Robertson.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for the purpose from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 200x40 feet, with wing verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, dormitories, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); a system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, and sent in by means of hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); a system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of water closets); all parts of building so connected that no weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

✻ ✻ THREE COURSES. ✻ ✻

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by the President of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year from your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than we could reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Editorial.

We are glad to hear once more from our good friend, Rev. J. W. Moore. He has been so busy with his new church building that we can forgive him for his long silence, but now that he has completed that, we shall expect to get some more interesting and helpful letters.

Richmond has been having a series of unusual and helpful meetings in religious circles. Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor, and Dr. H. M. Hamill held meetings there last week. Dr. Talmage and Captain Hobson were there on Sunday, and Dr. Louis Albert Banks, one of the greatest Methodist preachers and writers in the world, will preach there on Sunday, February 9th.

WHAT REASON THIS YEAR?

"We are gratified over the announcement that seven of our Annual Conferences have paid out. Others have gone far ahead of last year. The Montana, New Mexico, Holston, Los Angeles, Northwest Texas, South Georgia, and East Texas Conferences are out in full on foreign missions."—Nashville Advocate.

The above clipping from the Nashville Advocate of recent date brings up the same question of last year. Why is it that Virginia is not entered on the list of those Conferences which have paid in full the apportionment made by the General Board of Missions? The apportionment made to our Conference is $22,800. The amount raised for foreign missions, according to the annual, is $22,882.26. This is $82.26 more than our apportionment. Why, then, are we not entered upon the list of those which have paid out in full? Because of the amount raised by us $3,920.85, was raised under the auspices of the Rosebud Society, and we, as a Conference, have received no credit for the same. The editor discussed this question last year, and he understood the officials to state that an arrangement would be made by which Virginia Conference would receive credit for its contributions. What is the trouble this year? Is our Conference to be classed year after year below the Conferences given above. It is not just to our people, and it is damaging to the great cause of missions. What reason is given this year for this result?

SWEEPING STATEMENTS.

Miss C. S. Parrish, for some years professor at the Randolph-Macon Woman's College, but now a member of the faculty of the Georgia State Normal School, delivered an address in Richmond on Saturday evening, February 1st, on the "Educational Outlook in Virginia."

In the report of the address in the Dispatch there are some sweeping statements, which cause surprise to many readers, and should hardly be passed by without some criticism.

(1) Her illustration as to the recent election of a principal appears to refer to Farmville. It is said that there were four Methodists, four Presbyterians, and four Baptists on the board, and that it was a denominational fight, and finally a combination against the Baptists. Of the methods employed in the election, I know nothing, but the classification of trustees, if the reference is to the Farmville election, is certainly incorrect, as there were four or five Episcopalians present, and hence not any such proportions as mentioned. Even were the denominational affiliations of the trustees as indicated, surely it is a most sweeping charge to say that every man on the Board was so bigoted and narrow that in the management of a State institution he allowed nothing but denominational prejudice to influence his vote. The trustees, as individuals, may attend to this matter, so far as it relates to them personally, but as this was used to illustrate the idea of the hurtfulness of the sectarian spirit in our educational work, it is open to general criticism as illustrating the wisdom of being sure of your particular facts before you draw your conclusions. If denominational prejudice did not control in the election of the president given above, then the illustration does not prove the hurtfulness of denominational jealousies in our educational work. It may be there, but this illustration does not prove it.

(2) Later on in the report this sentence occurs: "The indebtedness of education to religion I fully appreciate, but I am not blind to the sectarianism of the Church schools, which leads every denomination to start a school of its own to help drag the others down."

This is a sweeping charge, and cannot be sustained. The result of the establishment of a school by the Methodists, where there is already a Baptist school, may divide the patronage of a county or of a State, and may reduce the number of students in the older institution, but it does not follow at all that the aim and purpose was "to help to drag the other down." The purpose of a denomination in establishing institutions is constructive, not destructive. The denomination has a duty to perform to its children. They must be given instruction under Christian influences. No denomination has the right to throw on other denominations this duty, if it is able to perform it. To try to build up a strong Methodist institution is not an effort to drag down a Baptist institution, or vice versa. To impute such motives to the religious bodies which originate and foster such movements is to do them great injustice. Having been associated as a student, trustee, teacher, etc., for twenty years with denominational school work, and having been secretary for the past four years of the Virginia Conference Board of Education, and knowing, I believe, the views of Methodist educators, I do not hesitate to assert that such considerations as those attributed by Miss Parrish to the workers in the field of denominational education have not only never been mentioned, but I do not believe they have ever been held by any of the workers with whom I have come in contact these years. Our discussion has been how to improve our own work, and how to develop the love of education in our own Methodist people. We have never given one moment's consideration to the question of how we can "help drag the other down." As a matter of fact, the result of denominational work in Virginia has not been to drag down any institution. It has resulted in the upbuilding of the cause of education in the State, and the educational workers in one denomination hold up the work of the other denomination as an incentive to do better things. There has been quite enough of this talk about the narrow sectarianism of denominational schools. Such schools should be run in accordance with the views of the enlightened workers of the denomination, and where it is possible teachers and officers of the denomination should be in charge of the institution, and the children of the denomination should attend the schools. Should the denomination as such hold certain definite views on the great questions of life, it is natural and proper for the institutions, established and maintained by that denomination, to have officers and teachers who hold those views, and every criticism of such policy or such schools may be used against any feature of denominational life, or against denominations themselves. If denominational schools are narrow, then denominations and all work done on denominational lines are narrow, and the point of attack should be upon the wisdom of the union of men holding the same views on religious subjects, and the formation of societies or churches to propagate their views. Such reasoning would result in the destruction of all associations and societies, whether religious or otherwise, and the question becomes an exceedingly broad one. But whatever may be the result of such a broad investigation, it may and should be said at this time that the charge of narrow sectarianism cannot be maintained against the methods or workers of the denominational schools of Virginia, and the charge is made, strange to say, by a person who had for nine years been a professor in an institution controlled by a board composed entirely of Methodist preachers and laymen, and yet is herself a Baptist!

(3) Some sweeping statements are made as to the secondary schools. It is said of them that they have no laboratories, nor college-trained teachers; that they need broadening, enlargement, better trained teachers, more science teaching, etc. The report states later on that there is great need of college-bred Virginia women in the educational work of the State, and that there are two Virginia women of college education teaching in Virginia at this time.

Now, there is no disposition to deny that there is much to be done for all grades of school work in Virginia. We should spend more thought and more money upon our educational work. And the secondary schools do need greatly many things, but if I rightly understand terms, the statements given above are too sweeping and produce a false impression upon the general and uninformed reader. I understand that by secondary schools are meant institutions like the Randolph-Macon Institute at Danville, the Southern Female College at Petersburg, and the Blackstone Female Institute at Blackstone. I refer to these specially because they are all called Methodists, and I know more of them. (There is a reference in the report to the "superficiality, dishonesty, and fraud of secondary female education in Virginia." I shall not discuss that point at all, as there are, no doubt, such things to be found in every department of life, and much of it is education everywhere and not simply in Virginia.) But as to the points made especially against our secondary schools: The three I have mentioned above are the repre-

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELTON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

COPYRIGHT, 1890, IN U. S. A., BY ADVANCE PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO.

"Score six to nothing in favor of Blake," said Willis as he walked to the door. "Come on, Reynolds. It's no use if he's made up his mind. Might as well try to kick goal with a soap bubble."

Reynolds paused a moment, and then with an oath he followed Willis out of the room. When they were gone, Freshman Blake put his head down on his book and kept it there several minutes. Not a man in all the college at that time could probably understand all he experienced. It is doubtful if, when he raised his head and started in with his evening's study, Edward Blake himself understood the full meaning of what he himself had chosen to do. It is certain that he could not foresee all its consequences.

Before noon the next day everybody in college knew that Edward Blake of the freshman class had refused to subscribe for Wallace on the football game. Everybody knew the reason at last. For refusing to subscribe, Edward suddenly became a person of criticism in college. "Come on," said Willis in his direction when he went to chapel next morning, and even the row of professors up on the platform seemed to share in the general excitement.

The next few days in the life of Edward Blake, college student, are not easy to describe. Pressure was brought to bear on him from his class as a body. The entire college was stirred over the event. There did not happen to be any one who could take Wallace's place as well as Edward. He had been but to all appeals and arguments Edward returned few words. He grew more stolid and unyielding with every effort to move him. Dignified seniors filed up to his room, men of influence in athletic circles, and they all filed down again, furious and bitter that a freshman off a farm should refuse to uphold the college in its pet contest with the university. Willis put in a daily remonstrance, and a serious breach seemed widening between the roommates in spite of their good understanding of a little while before.

When the eventful day came, the college sent down the best man they could get as substitute for Wallace. The game was played with a "ring of blood around the moon," to quote Willis, but the university won by six points, and the college almost to a man blamed Edward Blake for the defeat.

It seemed a little strange to Edward in the next few days that followed that his purpose and motive were not more clearly understood. But Hope college at that time was at a very low point of life in a Christian way. It would be unfair to say that Edward received no encouragement whatever from the better element of the college. But it is a painful truth that at that particular time in the history of the college it lacked the distinct manly type of Christian scholarship and leadership that it shortly afterward began to enjoy.

It was during this particular experience, through which he passed with considerable bitterness, that Edward came to know a far different life in another direction, the final results of which led to changes in his personal character that were far-reaching in their seriousness and meaning.

Willis had kept up a running fire of sarcastic comment on the football episode until Edward had begun seriously to think of making a change in his room. He had felt disappointed in Willis. The revelation of his deeper life at the time of the paper route affair had pleased Edward greatly. It seemed to him, however, that since the defeat of the team by the university Willis had grown unnecessarily critical, and his tendency to fast habits had never been more marked or more distasteful.

One evening early in December, just before the holiday vacation, Edward was somewhat gloomily attempting to study and brooding over his experiences. He did not expect to go home for the holidays on account of the expense, although he had saved up a little out of his work, to which he had added by extra jobs about the buildings in one way and another.

Willis had been very quiet for a longer time than usual. At last he broke the silence by rising and going over to Edward's table.

"Say, old man!" He spoke in a kindly tone that Edward could not help noticing. "We've had this gloom turned on about long enough, don't you think? Pshaw! You're no mind reader. I think a good deal more of you for not playing. What difference does it make what I say? Come. What you need is a little fun once in awhile. You study the very insides out of the old books, and what good does it do? If you come out at last as valetudinarian or something like that, what good does it do? All the men that graduate at the head of their classes either die soon after they get out of college or they are never heard of anywhere afterward. All the famous men are always dull and uninteresting in college. I tell you I don't want to go into obscurity the way most of the brilliant scholars go. I'm taking all the precautions I can to avoid their fate. Tell you what, Blake, you shut up the old books tonight and go down and take in 'The Pace That Kills.' It's a jolly farce, and you need a good laugh. Come on!"

"What kind of a show is it?" asked Edward reluctantly. He had never been to the theater, and Willis, who went constantly, had never before asked him to go, because he had reason to believe that Edward would not go anyway. Besides, with more thoughtfulness than Edward had given him credit for, he knew that Edward would not go to entertainments at another person's expense and could not afford to go often at his own.

"Oh, it's a farce. There's no sense in it, but it makes no difference. There's a lot of pretty girls and some pretty fair tumbling and trapeze work, but the fun is in the old tramps and characters that get caught robbing henroosts and all that sort of thing. I've got a couple of seats in the parquet, and Barnes was going with me, but he's sick and can't go. Come on. Have some fun just once."

Willis reached over the table good naturedly and shut Edward's book up. Edward hesitated a minute, but he was really curious to see the entertainment, and he had not been out anywhere except to a literary society since he entered college. Besides, he was so relieved to have the good will of his roommate again that he felt ashamed to refuse his invitation in spite of a little uneasiness about the character of a show with such a name.

So he got up, put on his overcoat and went down into the city with Willis, who was in high spirits and sang and whistled constantly up to the very door of the opera house. That was always one of the surprising things to Edward, that Willis had such a perpetual fund of animal life in spite of his dissipated habits that turned night into day and broke all the rules of diet and digestion that are known to medical science.

"The Pace That Kills" was advertised on the flaring billboards as a "roaring farce in four acts, interspersed with the wonderful trapeze performance of the De Lacy brothers," etc.

There were things in it that made Edward blush and tremble. They were not perhaps absolutely indecent, but they were things that he knew well enough he would not care to have Freeda see or hear. There were several really funny scenes at which he found himself laughing, and it was an unusual habit with him. Willis roared boisterously and seemed to know the slang names for all the actors and gave Edward brief bits of personal gossip about some of them. Between the acts Willis went out twice and got a glass of beer each time at the theater restaurant. Edward of course knew that his roommate drank, and they had one sharp debate over the fact, but the subject was not referred to after that. Edward had never known of Willis becoming intoxicated, although he had heard the other Greek letter society men speak of Willis as if he was drinking more than was good for him.

When the play was over and they were climbing college hill, Willis suddenly asked: "Well, what did you think of it? Wasn't it funny?"

"Yes," replied Edward. "That is, parts of it were."

"You couldn't expect the whole of a 'roaring farce' to be funny," replied Willis with sarcasm. "That would be too much. But I tell you, old man, it did you good. You ought to go once in awhile to brighten you up. I saw you actually laugh out loud tonight. Why, if you don't do it once in awhile you'll scare yourself to death one of these days when you laugh by accident and wonder what it is."

Edward was silent, and while Willis was as usual blacking his shoes he was going over the evening in a way that would have astonished his careless roommate if he could have read his thought.

For Edward Blake, college student, had reached, very largely unconsciously to himself, a crisis in his life. As he lay wide awake for an hour after Willis was fast asleep, he was going over all the scenes in the play and especially those scenes that at the time had made him uncomfortable. There was a positive fascination for him in the impure suggestion that for the first time burned into his imagination, with pictures of fire set about the stage realism with a vividness that glowed like a new sensation in his hitherto remarkably pure and unsmirched soul.

When the college term closed for the holidays, Willis went home and Edward was left alone. There were but few men left in Rankin hall. Freeda had remained in the ladies' hall, which also was largely deserted. On the Saturday after college closed Edward had been over to see her. He reflected as he went back that evening that he had said nothing to his sister about the play or his going to it. They had talked about the folks at home, and Freeda had again raised the question of leaving the hall to secure a place somewhere near the college where she could work for room and board. Edward had opposed the plan, but he had a vague feeling when he came away that Freeda, who was a very independent and determined girl, might at any time do the very thing she had suggested.

"I'm perfectly able to do the work, Ned. It will save at least $200 a year, and you know mother is really slaving at the dairy work to keep me here in the hall."

Edward remonstrated again, but he knew very well that what Freeda said was true. As he went away he vowed that in some way he would work day and night to make his own expenses and Freeda's, too, and so relieve the loving, faithful mother of her constant burden.

And then the boy's great temptation faced him, and he was swept under by his yielding to it. In the next two weeks he lost one of the best, brightest jewels of a young man's life—he lost his sense of personal purity. The theaters had never offered to the public such a large number of cheap, questionable shows as they offered that winter during the holiday season. Night after night Edward climbed the gallery and sat through plays that robbed him of his clean, healthy mind and put in its place imagination that made him ashamed to see his own face. He slunk up the stairs and took obscure seats where none of the other students who might chance to be present could see him. He found that his taste for the plays, where seldom any one but men were present, was growing and deepening, and, while he knew well enough how deep down he was sinking and despised himself for it, he continued to go, and for the first playing with such energy and intelligence that he distanced every other man on the second eleven and distanced them so far that there was no comparison.

time in his life he knew what the drunkard begins to know before he has become altogether lost to love of wife and children. He was appalled at the end of the vacation to realize that he had spent over $10 for theater tickets. Ten dollars meant as much to him as a hundred or more to most students. Yet even that fact did not influence him to give up going. On Christmas eve he attended another roaring farce, where the principal attraction was advertised as a "ballet unexcelled on two continents," and the very billboards that announced the play insulted the Christian sentiment of every disciple of our Lord as Christendom reverently called to mind his angelic birth and the world in its mighty need, sunk in its vice and degradation, paused a little while to see him in all his glory, if only men greedy for gain and pleasure would only let the Prince of Peace come into the hearts of men. But, oh, how shall he come when for love of that which to love is to produce all kinds of evil men obscure the lovely vision by scenes of shame and crucify the Lord on the very evening of his birth!

Edward sitting up in a corner of the gallery that night several times put his face in his hands, but the enticement of the play was on him in all its alluring attractiveness, and the glare and glitter and brilliancy of it all led his soul on in ways that he knew well enough were ways of evil and only evil. It was not so much anything distinctively and positively indecent or vile that fascinated him in the play. If it had been too broad and too coarse, it would have repelled him. It was the suggestive nature of it that roused his evil physical passions. It was the outward display of vice in all its apparent intoxication of the senses that was so delicately successful in hiding from him the real horror underneath. It was this that drew him on and dragged him down irresistibly. Outwardly the chains that bound him were festooned with smiling flowers. But the grim strength of them was the strength of dull, hard, cruel fetters, the same that in every age have held captive even far stronger souls than his.

When he went to his room that night, he found that an invitation to take dinner next day with one of the professors had been dropped into the letter box on the door.

The professor was one of the new men who had just begun a few weeks before the holidays. Edward did not know him well, although he had been doing laboratory work under him since his arrival.

As he went over to the house next day at the time announced he had a feeling of self reproach come over him suddenly that he had neglected Freeda of late. He was going out to a Christmas dinner, and Freeda—he had not been to see her for several days. His shame was keen as he thought of the reason why he had avoided her. For several nights he had really been seeing and hearing things that he very well knew he would not want her to know. With a conscience that really tormented him he was ushered into the house, where the professor greeted him kindly and took his somber, awkward silence for nothing more than the ordinary embarrassment of a young man unaccustomed to society.

There were a half dozen students who had been left stranded in the building through the holidays, on whom the professor and his wife had taken compassion and for whom they had evidently exerted themselves to entertain in as bright and cheerful a fashion as possible. Before dinner was announced Edward had forgotten Freeda, for awhile at least, and when he went out with the rest he had recovered something of his natural manner.

The professor's wife had said something to him as he was seated by her, and he had answered just as the company had taken their seats. She paused a minute, smiling at some part of Edward's reply, and then rang the bell.

Edward sat facing the door leading into the kitchen, and as it opened he was startled by the appearance of Freeda. Their eyes met, and Freeda reddened, but instantly recovered, and in a quiet, self composed manner she began the serving of the table.

"You will have some of the soup, Mr.—" The professor's wife smiled as she turned toward Edward, who sat there in great confusion, a great tumult going on in him from several causes. The professor's wife was a happy, careless young woman, who laughingly said she never could remember names and never tried to.

"Mr. Blake," said Edward.

"Blake," repeated the professor's wife, smiling. Then she caught the look on Edward's face, and her quick glance went over to Freeda, who was standing opposite. "Blake! Why, that's the name of"—

"Yes, ma'am," replied Edward bluntly. "She's my sister."

"I didn't know—I—you see—we have been here only a little while—and—your sister—only applied a few days ago for the place. She—it's quite a common thing for the college girls to work out this way, isn't it?"

Edward's hostess was trying to make the best of an embarrassing situation as she noted the evident embarrassment of the young man. But she mistook the cause of his feeling. His mind was tossed with conflicting emotions. He had too much sense, thanks to his home training, to feel ashamed at the sight of Freeda in the capacity of a servant. He had always been proud of labor and saw no disgrace in any honest form of it. But what was troubling him now was the thought that for two weeks he had been squandering his earnings to indulge his new born passion for the cheap shows of a theater while Freeda was voluntarily taking up the burden of this new service in order to relieve the people on the little farm at home.

As the dinner went on the torture of his situation grew upon him until he would have been glad if by any means he could escape. The food choked him. He answered with difficulty the kind inquiries of his hostess and tried to reply to her often repeated attempts to explain how stupid she must have been not to have known that it was his sister that was working for her. The other students knew Freeda, but after the first sight of her they made nothing of the fact, as it was not uncommon in Hope college for the girls to do as Freeda was doing.

LOUISVILLE LETTER.

Dear Recorder,—Your kind request to write you a few lines must not be forgotten. Letter writing is not my forte. Attachment to friends is a passion of my life, but this attachment is in no sense weakened by silence. Lord Macaulay had the suggestion made to him that he might improve his conversation by some brilliant flashes of silence.

You mention in a note my new church. It is a beauty. Prof. Perry, of Pratt Institute, said it was the finest piece of American Gothic architecture he had seen. The interior is finished up in mahogany, and presents an imposing appearance. The committee and church are delighted with it. There is a debt of only $9,000. We are grateful to a kind providence, who has guided us. On the day of dedication we raised $25,000. When we first launched the enterprise we raised $43,000. We have property now worth $120,000.

During our dedication week we had some able addresses and sermons. At my request, Dr. Tillett "praised the Lord" in his inimitable way. What a magnificent sermon! Dr. Steel lectured on the "Rest of Methodism," a lecture destined to rival the pioneers. Dr. Mullins, of the Baptist Seminary, and Dr. Hemphill, of the Presbyterian Seminary, made able addresses. Bishop Galloway preached as only Bishop Galloway can, and we all rejoiced when at last the words were pronounced setting aside the church from profane and common uses. Some good man will have a fine church and a noble people after next Conference.

What a four years the past four have been. Success with a crown of sorrow upon it! What anxieties and what heartaches. It seems an age since I rode across old Amherst's hills, not knowing how happy I was. Mounted on my little sorrel after a day of toil and an evening of prayer and praise and preaching I would ride homeward. Mounting a hill in the distance, I could see a light in the window that burned for me, and a fire kindled to a greater brightness because it was about time for me to come glowed on the hearth, whilst a pot of coffee cheerfully steamed, and all was warmth and brightness. But that has been so long ago.

Louisville has two Theological Seminaries, one Presbyterian and the other Baptist. The prospects are bright for both. The Baptist is the largest attended Seminary in the world. Our own Theological department at Vanderbilt has fallen off in attendance. This is not because of poor work or inefficient teachers, but because our ministry does not appreciate education as they should. The cry of the churches is for an educated ministry, but too many preach the peculiar advantages of Brush College.

Dr. Alexander is hard at work making up his programme for the Conference Institute next summer. His programme is such as only a scholar could formulate, but is beyond the ability of the average under-graduate. Last summer, thermometer 100, I listened to an hour and a half paper, only half finished then, by a good brother who, unfortunately, had had limited opportunities, whilst he divided up the proclamations of a great prophet after the teachings of a great commentator, the drift of whose teachings he did not see. Our people and preachers should read the Book devotionally, and be taught to find in it an aid to a truly pious and devoted life.

The Publishing House question will not down. It is to be hoped that the brethren beloved will spend about a week fasting before the matter is brought up. Firmness and temperateness should be the motto. Take palm leaf fans along. This question of the money figured largely at our Conference in the election of delegates, and our Conference stands all right upon the issue. Lipscomb would make a splendid agent for the Publishing House.

I must close, lest I weary beyond endurance. I often think of old Virginia and my kind friends. May God's blessings rest upon them all.

"PROHIBITION A FAILURE."

By J. W. Heckman.

I frequently see in the secular papers editorials and articles under the above caption, and it is argued because prohibition does not prohibit, it is better to license the liquor traffic and get some money out of it.

I. When men say there is more liquor sold and drank in prohibition districts than where saloons are licensed, I always say "that statement bears a lie on its face." If it were true, I know the saloon men would spend their money to carry the country dry, because the more whiskey that is sold the more money there is for the saloon-keeper. No man would engage in such a hellish and vile business but for the love of money, therefore I contend that a man who claims that more whiskey is sold and used in prohibition States than in licensed States is either a wilful falsifier or an ignoramus. Any posted man knows that it is not true.

II. Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, and many others contend that prohibition is a failure, and as the Senator contended in a recent issue of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, that it should be done away with, and the dispensary and license system be operated. One of my brothers lived in Kansas two years, and said: "I never saw anybody intoxicated in that time, except two young men, who drank some hard cider." I asked, "Can one get liquor there as a beverage?" He replied, "No." I asked, can a fellow get it for medicine? He said: "Yes, provided he is sick, but not if he is well." I asked: "What does it cost?" He answered: "About the same as it does in Virginia." It is not a failure.

III. It is true some whiskey is sold and drank in prohibition territory, but it seems like nonsense to do away with the law because of that fact, and say "it is a failure."

We hang men for arson, murder and assault upon our women, but men will commit all these crimes, therefore we might as well say: "The law is a failure, therefore let us license negroes and whites to commit these crimes." When we license men to sell whiskey we license them to commit wholesale murder. We have laws against stealing, but the law is a failure, therefore let us "license men to steal." Away with such nonsense! On with the fight for prohibition until the victory is won in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PETERSBURG LETTER.

"Dear Editor,—For a number of days I have been wrestling with la grippe. As all its victims know, it is decidedly trying to body and soul to be in its grasp. Coughing, sneezing, headache, backache, sick stomach, and so forth, are some of its concomitants. Under the good Lord's blessing, I may come off victor in the battle, but if I can do so, hereafter I shall give Capt. Grippe a wide berth. Confined to the house, I can read, write and look out the window of my bright room, and the frequent passing of funeral processions impress one with the uncertainty of life. Beautiful Blandford Cemetery, a credit to Petersburg, is not far distant, and to its grounds these processions go to lay away the mortal remains of those lately fallen on sleep. The beautiful and true lines from Gray's immortal eulogy come to mind as one looks on such scenes:

"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,

And all that wealth, all that beauty e'er gave,

Await alike the inevitable hour;

The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Our own Longfellow seems to bring the same solemn idea of death a little closer to us in his oft-quoted lines:

"Still our hearts like muffled drums
Are beating funeral marches to the grave."

It is well that impressions like these should sometimes be allowed to teach us their lessons. Business cares, worldly thoughts, and trifles and vanities make up the mental menu of far too many. But it is not la grippe funeral processions or gruesome things that I care to linger on in this letter.

In Petersburg Methodism is not dead, nor likely to die. Our pastors are moving in the van of the battle. The Sunday schools, Epworth League, and the missionary societies of the city are alive and full of life. Pastors are interested about the campaign for saving precious souls, and as a burden God is putting souls on the hearts of these dear brethren. When they get on fire the Church will catch it, and sinners will be coming home to God. That the pulpits here are well-manned this Conference year seems to be the general verdict. I made arrangement as I thought for you to get the daily that prints the proceedings of the preachers' meeting, but I have seen nothing of the reports in your columns.

I greatly enjoyed to-day reading the February number of the Review of Missions. Among so many good articles in it, it is not easy to make a selection of particular ones to write about, but those by Dr. C. F. Reed and Rev. H. C. Tucker I greatly enjoyed, as I did the one entitled "Mansfield House University Settlement, London." I wish all our Church members had this number to read. With such reading in the hands, it is not easy for one to be a pessimist in missions.

Right glad and thankful, as well as hopeful, have the reports of the recent Anti-Saloon League meeting in Richmond made me feel, for they show what other things also show, that the temperance sentiment is growing in our State and elsewhere too. But enough for this time your scribe thinks, so let finis be reached. E. P. P.

FROM NORFOLK.

On the third Sunday in January three Norfolk pastors preached upon home mission work, and especially upon the needs of Norfolk city.

At Cumberland-Street Rev. C. L. Bane preached a morning sermon. On the day following the regular monthly meeting of the H. M. Society was held, and the big parlor of the new church was running over full of old and new members. At the December meeting Mr. Bane had suggested the appointment of a membership committee of five, and had intimated that each one should try to bring in five new members. The committee produced its report in concrete form, appearing with thirty new members. The attendance at the meeting of that day was more than fifty.

At McKendree Mr. Proctor also preached a Sunday morning sermon, discussing the needs of the city, and the city mission work as well. After the service sixteen ladies came to him and offered themselves for membership. With six new members previously added, this is a gain of twenty-two for the McKendree society during January.

At Centenary Mr. Dadmun, on the same day, preached a strong home mission sermon, and aroused the interest of his people in the city work. Mr. Dadmun is chairman of the committee of ministers appointed by request of the Conference Board to investigate the needs of Norfolk.

Three other sermons were promised; the time appointed for two of them has not yet come; when they are preached they will be duly noted. To discuss from the pulpit home mission work in general, and the needs of the locality in particular, is a great help in the work. While some of the women of the church have taken the work upon themselves, and ought to expect to carry the most of it, they cannot present it to the congregation as the pastor can. No one else can so emphasize the duty of the membership to the churchless people near by as he can. Not all the women of the churches who would help in home mission work understand the plans or purposes of the society, and will not listen so thoughtfully to any one else as they would to the pastor.

The quarterly meeting of the Auxiliaries of Norfolk District will be held in Cumberland-Street church the last Thursday in February.

The city mission settlement is doing a great deal of good among the neighbors. The sewing classes are improving fast. The children and the teachers are faithful in attendance. This means something on both sides; to be tidy, on the part of the children, and to go regularly in all weathers to an out-of-the-way place, on the part of the teachers. The basket work is the favorite craft. The missionary has found among the neighbors a woman who knows how to make a variety of baskets, and is willing to help teach.

In token of their appreciation of her work among their people, one of the Jewish congregations of Norfolk, through the rabbi, lately presented the missionary a handsome gold watch. Accompanying it was a letter of hearty commendation from the rabbi, sealed with the temple seal.

QUESTION OF LYNCHING.

Sermon by Rev. J. T. Whitley at Centenary Sunday Night.

Rev. J. T. Whitley, pastor of Centenary Methodist church, preached on Sunday evening on the subject "Shall We Lynch Our Criminals?" His text was from the 36th and 38th verses of Acts 19: "Ye ought to be quiet and do nothing rashly—the law is open." The discourse was an able exposition of the text and was deeply interesting and instructive. In substance Mr. Whitley spoke as follows:

This was the sensible advice given by a wise officer of the law to a great crowd of excited people, who had the lynching fever in their veins. A demagogue named Demetrius had made an inflammatory speech to the craftsmen of Ephesus against Paul, the missionary; and forthwith a mob had caught two of Paul's companions, and were about to do them violence. At this critical juncture the town clerk came forward and advised the people to be quiet and to do nothing rash, reminding them that the courts were open, and that the accused could be tried by law, and if found guilty could be punished, without inflicting upon the community the great evils connected with mob violence. I am glad to say that his advice was taken, and the lynching did not occur. The principles here involved are of wide appreciation. "Shall we lynch our criminals?" is a question of living interest, which I purpose trying to answer from the standpoint of Scripture and of sound reason.

What is lynching? According to the standard dictionary, it is "the summary infliction of punishment either with no trial at all or after trial by an informal and self-appointed body of men, who act as an extemporized court." A briefer and sufficiently accurate definition is this: Lynching is the taking of human life, as a punishment of crime, without the sanctions and safeguards of law. A brutal crime is committed. The community is aflame with excitement and revenge. The real or supposed criminal is caught and imprisoned. The law, if not interfered with, will deal with him sooner or later. But the people cannot wait. A mob gathers, batters down the prison doors, drags out the accused and hangs him to a tree, or burns him at the stake. That is lynching.

Lynching has been practiced to a greater or less extent in all lands and ages. Human nature, in all times and places, has had in it the impatient, passionate, lawless element, that civilization has not entirely overcome, and that even Christianity has not been able as yet to fully cast out. A noteworthy case is recorded in the seventh chapter of Acts, where the Supreme Court itself, the Jewish Sanhedrin, turns itself into a howling mob and lynches Stephen, an innocent man. In our own age this practice has increased to an alarming extent in America, and especially in the South. A record of the number of legal executions and of lynchings in the United States in 1901 shows that 118 persons were put to death by law, and 135 were lynched. The executions were one fewer than in 1900, and the lynchings were twenty more. Nor were all these in the South. Fourteen of them were in the Northern States, an increase of six over the preceding year.

First, let us glance at some of the causes of lynching. Of course, crime is the inciting cause; especially crimes of the most revolting nature. Particularly is any crime committed against the purity or life of woman a provocation to mob violence. And when the offense is committed by one of an inferior race against an innocent white woman, the provocation is intensified.

Another cause lies in the real or supposed faults of the law and the courts. Where there is no law at all, of course lynching will take the place of law. Wherever legal processes are unnecessarily slow, or the penalties inflicted are glaringly inadequate, lynching is the next thing thought of. And in some cases lynching is resorted to in order to save an outraged woman from having to testify before a crowd in open court.

But the deepest, strongest cause of all lies in the revengeful passions of human nature. It is natural to the human heart, unrestrained by divine grace, to resent an injury, and under great provocation to kill the offender without intervention of judge or jury. And it is well known that these lawless passions are greatly inflamed when a great crowd of people come together to resent a crime. Then it is that the mob rules, and law and reason are cast to the winds.

Now consider some objections to lynching. In many cases injustice is done to the victim. Let it be freely granted that some of those who are lynched deserve the very worst punishment; it must be remembered that lynching is not really as heavily a penalty as is legal execution, and that some fearful mistakes have been made in the lynching of the innocent. A mob wild with passion has no time nor ability to decide nice questions of evidence. And sometimes the crime committed does not deserve death. Of the 135 lynchings in the United States in 1901, 39 were for murder, 19 for rape, and 77 for minor offences! The moral effect upon the lynchers themselves is very hurtful. They give way to ferocious passions, become law-breakers, participate in murder, and defile their consciences. Under such influences their moral and spiritual fiber is bound to deteriorate. The lyncher can be neither holy nor happy until he truly repents. The welfare of the community is imperiled. Law is the bulwark of weakness and innocence against might and oppression. Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are safeguarded by the laws and the courts, and by the public sentiment that underlies them.

Every lynching is a menace to the safety of the people, and a blow at civilization. The will of God is violated. "Thou shalt do no murder." "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." God sanctions the death penalty when inflicted by law for adequate crimes. But in His eyes lynching is murder.

Finally, consider some preventives of lynching. Let men beware of committing those revolting crimes against female purity and against human life which are the usual provocations. The shortest way to stop lynching is for everybody, especially the colored race, to keep themselves free from gross crimes. And it almost looks as if this were the only certain preventive. Let our law-makers and courts enact wise laws and properly execute them. Beyond question, the legislative power ought to make a law that would relieve a woman who has been outraged from having to testify personally in court. And the courts ought to try criminals and punish them with all possible promptness and with adequate penalties. All honor to those courts that have done so. Let us all respect and obey the laws that we, the people, have made through our representatives. These laws are ours, enacted by all the people, and are not to be set aside with impunity by a part of the people, especially the worst part. It is the duty as well as the safety of every citizen to uphold the laws. Do not participate in mob violence, and do all you can by word and action to restrain others. And let us cultivate those sentiments of justice and gentleness that the Gospel inculcates. If it is necessary, as it sometimes is, for the protection of the community, to put criminals to death, let it be done not with gloating savagery, but with firm and dignified sorrow. And even the worst of criminals, were he Judas Iscariot himself, should be allowed a reasonable time for repentance before he is ushered into eternity.

We belong to a civilized nation. Virginia represents the highest type of the world's highest civilization, and our own city stands in the front rank of the communities of the Old Dominion. Let us acquit ourselves accordingly. Our recent record in the matter of devotion to law is worthy of the highest commendation. Let not the record be lowered. We belong to a Christian nation and a Christian Commonwealth. Let us follow the teachings of our Saviour and Lord, and the example that He has set us, and thus remain a law-loving and a law-abiding people.—News.

THE IMMORTAL SOUL.

Rev. R. H. Bennett Preached an Eloquent Sermon at Evening Service of Epworth Church Sunday.

Despite the inclement weather Sunday night a large congregation assembled in Epworth Methodist church to hear Rev. R. H. Bennett on "The Immortality of the Soul, or Does Death End Existence?" A notable feature was the large number of young men present, who paid the most earnest and thoughtful attention to the learned divine. Mr. Bennett based his discourse on Gen. 2: 7, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." He said in part:

Man in all ages has cherished a belief in his own immortality. Though his idea in the earlier ages was crude, and has gradually arrived at its complete development among us upon whom the end of the world has come, yet it is a common possession of the race that death does not end existence. Many instances, covering all ages and countries, were then cited in support of this statement. Even a materialist like Professor Herbert Spencer has admitted that this universal consensus of opinion must have a basis in some ultimate fact, and to think that all these multi-form conceptions should be groundless, profoundly discredits human intelligence.

We argue immortality from the vast powers of the soul itself. Death is dissolution of a compound existence into its elements. The soul is an uncompounded existence. It has no parts into which it may be resolved. It knows no dissolution. It cannot die.

Force is eternal. It may change its form, but only to reappear under new conditions, in new combinations. It cannot perish. The greatest forces are thought, emotion, will. For will to die is to make an exception to this law and predicate death of the greatest force, while all other forces live on.

Consider the daring conceptions of the soul of man. No height is too dizzy for his imagination to scale, no task too mighty to deter his attempts, no obstacle too gigantic to forbid his attack, no problem too abstruse to discourage his solution, no journey so long as to fatigue his endurance.

Consider the development of the soul. No creature is born so far away from his maturity as man. The insect needs a day, the birds a few weeks, the sheep three years, the horse six, the elephant ten, to come to fulness of growth, while nearly one-third of man's life on earth is spent in acquiring his full equipment of body and mind. And when, after three-score years and ten of application and experience, he feels he is just coming to the maturity of the powers of mind and spirit and qualified to do his best work, he looks upon himself and lo, his body is worn out and ready to perish, and an inexorable destiny is fast crumbling it to the tomb. If, then, the man who makes the most of life here and learns its secret does but climb the foothills before death claims the worn-out casket, think what transcendent mountain peaks already in view he might attain unto had he but eternity into which to climb. Shall

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 16.

Text of the Lesson. Acts v. 25-42.
Memory Verses. 10-12—Golden Text.
Matt. v. 10—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1931, by American Press Association.]

25. "Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple and teaching the people." This was the message which was brought to the high priest, council and senate of the children of Israel as they waited to receive the prisoners whom they had arrested the evening before. Multitudes of men and women were believing, and multitudes of sick and demon possessed people not only in Jerusalem, but also from the cities roundabout, were healed. The work was going so grandly that the high priest and Sadducees simply could not stand it and so put the apostles in prison. God, whose they were and whom they served, sent an angel by night and released them from prison and sent them to the temple to continue their ministry, and there they are found teaching, instead of in the prison under the power of the authorities. They belonged to God.

26-28. "Hold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine and intend to bring this man's blood upon us." The high priest reminds them that they had been forbidden to teach in the name of Jesus and then adds this word, unintentionally giving good testimony to their zeal, but evidently forgetting that the people had cried, "His blood be on us and on our children" (Matt. xxvii, 25).

29-32. "We ought to obey God rather than men." Thus replied Peter and again accused them to their faces of being the murderers of Jesus, whom God raised from the dead and exalted with His right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance and forgiveness of sins even to such as they were. That it is not possible to please God and to please the world lying in the wicked one is seen in Gal. i, 10; Luke xvi, 13; Jas. iv, 4. These apostles were in conscious partnership with the Holy Spirit, who was in them, and He, the Spirit, was the speaker through their lips, even as Jesus had said, "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you" (Matt. x, 20).

33. "When they heard that, they were cut to the heart and took counsel to slay them." Not only was the blood of Jesus upon them, but they were ready to bring upon themselves the blood of the apostles also. Before they killed Jesus they desired to kill Lazarus, whom Jesus raised from the dead (John xii, 10). The truth of God when not meekly received makes manifest that "the carnal mind is enmity against God" (Rom. viii, 7).

34, 35. "Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men." The apostles, being sent out of the council for a little while, Gamaliel, a learned and honorable member, at whose feet Saul of Tarsus had been educated (chapter xxii, 3), thus begins to address his brethren. He seems to have had something of the spirit of Joseph and Nicodemus, who also were at one time members of the council (Mark xv, 43; John vii, 50). We do not know that he ever received Jesus as the Christ, but from the wisdom and spirit of this address and on the supposition that Saul would seek the welfare of his teacher we may hope that he did.

36, 37. "Before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody." He quotes two cases of deceivers who for a time had quite a following, but in each case the leaders perished, and their followers were dispersed. The mark of a deceiver is that "he boasts himself to be somebody," while a true follower of the Lord seeks to glorify God only. The antichrist shall do according to his own will and shall exalt himself and magnify himself (Dan. xi, 36), but the Lord Jesus Christ sought neither His own will nor His own glory (John vi, 38; viii, 50), and Paul, the great apostle, determined to know nothing but "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," his mottoes being "Not I, but Christ," "Not I, but the grace of God" (1 Cor. ii, 2; xv, 10; Gal. ii, 20).

38. "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught." He may have remembered these words, "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to naught; He maketh the devices of the people of none effect" (Ps. xxxiii, 10; see also Isa. xlii, 9, 10, for very strong words in this connection). It is a great comfort to the true believer to know that they that war against him shall be as nothing and as a thing of naught and that no weapon formed against him can prosper (Isa. xli, 12; liv, 17).

39. "If it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." It is written that "every purpose of the Lord shall be performed," and "The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed, so shall it stand," and, again, "The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of His heart to all generations" (Jer. li, 29; Isa. xiv, 24; Ps. xxxiii, 11).

40. "They commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus." With the repetition of this ungodly and rebellious command they are beaten and let go. How the devil hates that name at which every knee shall yet bow and concerning which every tongue shall yet confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father! (Phil ii, 10, 11.) Jesus had told His disciples that they would be delivered up to councils and be scourged and brought before governors and kings for His sake (Matt. x, 17, 18).

41. "Rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name." What a glorious reality is the Lord Jesus to those who can take such treatment, not only without resentment, but even joyfully! Backs scourged and bleeding, full of pain physically, but full of joy inwardly—how great is the grace of God! They were already tasting that which Paul was afterward told concerning the great things he must suffer for Christ's sake (chapter ix, 16).

42. "And daily in the temple and in every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." Thus they obeyed God rather than man and were ready for the next beating or imprisonment for so doing whenever God might see fit to let it come. As Peter and John said, they could not help doing it; like Jeremiah, when tempted to speak no more in His name, they had such a burning fire within them that they were weary if they did not speak; or, like Elihu, they felt that they would burst if they did not speak (Acts iv, 20; Jer. xx, 9; Job xxxii, 18-20).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 16, "Why Should the Church Evangelize the World?"—Text, Matt. xxviii, 19, 20; Rom. i, 14-16; x, 12-15.

"Go, disciple all nations, baptizing, teaching."

There is the reason. Jesus commands it to His followers. He came to seek and save the lost. He gave His life a ransom for many to be spoken of to them in the proper time. When one hears of the Christ, turns from sin and trusts Him for salvation, he finds himself living a changed life, with new laws and new impulses. Whatever the old life may have been in self indulgence and without special regard for the good of others, he feels an earnest desire to have others share the new light and happiness. His impulses now are more to give than to get. The direction given by Jesus seems most natural and no more burdensome than any merely moral law. He has no intention to steal and feels no inclination to swear, has no temptation to kill. So far as he is concerned the law is not expressed in negatives, "thou shalt not," but finds in his soul a positive "thou shalt," and his response to it is

"I will." The law says, "Love your neighbor." He feels, "I do." Then, when the word comes for him to go and tell that neighbor how great things Christ has done for him and will do for the neighbor also, he needs no driving, no coaxing. He is ready and eager to go and do. He wants to help and not injure. No need of the "thou shalt not" with him. He will not do the evil.

"Why evangelize the world?" Because the world needs to be evangelized. That is the purpose of Christ's coming. That is the present meaning of the ongoing of the earth and the upward push of civilization. God's kingdom is coming. The great thing, the important thing, is not the question whether Boer or Briton prevail in South Africa, whether Spain or the United States rule Philippines and Cuba, whether Russia or Japan be adviser of China, but the great issue is whether God's rulership be recognized and actualized in the affairs of men. History, politics, manufactures, commerce, all the endless and complicated affairs of men have no significance and no permanent worth apart from this one all embracing fact that the kingdom of God is assuming the power in this world. It is coming not in the sense of some future, faroff event, but it is now present and conquering. It is ever in the process of becoming.

For our own sakes we must evangelize the world. We can never maintain and much less can we develop spiritual life if we neglect this plainly commanded service. To withhold the gospel or fail to carry it to the unevangelized dooms us to failure in spiritual life. We can break every command of the Decalogue and at the same time claim to be holy with as much reason as we can disobey this one and call ourselves Christian.

Less important, but strikingly suggestive, is the relation of missions to our commercial and industrial progress. Trade may or may not follow the flag, but trade does and must follow the Bible. Christianize a naked savage, and he immediately asks clothes, tools, houses and every appliance of highest civilization. That means business for Christian factories and wages for workmen. Human industry has no other so efficient helper as Christian missions.

Give According to Ability.

Whence comes my ability? What is the measure of it? What need is there for my gifts? In answer be it said:

First, God supplies the conditions of honest possessions. If you will not consult God's word, your case is hopeless.

What is the measure of my ability? God gave me His son. The gift was measured by His love. He looked also on the measure of my need and filled that. Jesus "loved the church and gave Himself up to it." His gift was measured by love. If rate per cent be asked for, the arguments for 100 per cent are strongest. Jesus gave it in becoming poor. He commended the woman who cast in all. He advised a young man to make one fling of his whole fortune into the treasury of benevolence and gave Himself to God besides. Peter and others "left all and followed" Him. Paul suffered the loss of all things. But talk not of rate per cent. It remains forever true that he who loves little will give little, and he who loves much will give much.—Christian Standard.

Two Kinds of Sorrow.

There are two kinds of sorrow, a sorrow that yields to despair and a sorrow that looks toward hope. The former is like a vessel without compass—it knows not whence it came nor whither it should go. The latter is like a vessel driven and tossed, yet moving steadily and surely toward the harbor. The former is at the mercy of the waves; the latter plunges through them toward the goal. Oh, that all sighing, weeping, burdened souls could say, "Though He slay me, yet I trust in Him!" Such faith, though it look through tears, sees a vision of brightness which sorrow may often dim, but can never destroy.—Lutheran.

No Cause For Discouragement.

If God is really preparing us all to become that which is the very highest and best thing possible, there ought never to be a discouraged or uncheerful being in the world.—Horace Bushnell.

To Make Life Worth Living.

Do good constantly, patiently and wisely, and you will never have cause to say that life was not worth living.—George W. Childs.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Seeds Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Our religion is not made up of negatives.—Rev. S. B. Moore, Christian Church, Atlanta.

Footprints of the Eternal.

The events of life are the footprints of the eternal.—Rev. W. H. Carwardine, Methodist, Chicago.

Show Your Love.

To repress love is to draw it. To express love is to double it.—Rev. Dr. John E. Pounds, Cleveland.

Little Things.

God is interested in the little things of life as he is in the great affairs of men.—Rev. E. E. Knapp, Baptist, Brooklyn.

Reach Up.

Reach up as far as you can, and God will reach down all the rest of the way.—Bishop John H. Vincent, Methodist.

Three Steps.

There are three steps from Golgotha to paradise—first, repentance; second, faith; third, confession.—Rev. Dr. Charles W. Alford, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Christ's Lesson.

We shall not have learned the lesson of Christian love until we shall have learned to count not our lives dear unto ourselves.—Rev. Leander Turney, Baptist, Chicago.

Make Room.

We must make room in our minds, in our tastes, in our sympathies, in our religion and in our lives for all that we can learn both of nature and humanity.—Rev. Dr. Charles G. Ames, Unitarian, Boston.

The Only Sin.

It is no sin to have been born with a tendency to do wrong, no sin to be tempted; only the yielding is sin, and that is our own doing, and the sin is ours.—Rev. Carroll L. Wright, Chaplain United States Navy.

The Modern Hero.

It is the glory of our age that the modern hero stands forth armed not with swords and spears, but weaponed with love and kindness, with service and sympathy.—Rev. Dr. N. D. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Aid Yourself First.

Don't, however, expect God to do for you what you can do for yourself, but show your faith by your works, and when you have reached the extreme limit of self God will undertake for you.—Rev. Frank Lonsdale, Congregationalist, St. Louis.

The One Important Fact.

Jesus made no distinction between rich and poor, between weak and strong. That a soul stood before him longing for its highest possibility was to him the one important fact.—Rev. Dr. James M. Taylor, Baptist, President Vassar College.

Have Faith In God.

Each of us may be sure that if God sends us on stony paths he will provide us with strong shoes and will not send us out on any journey for which he does not equip us well.—Rev. Dr. Alexander McLaren, Union Chapel, Manchester, England.

Unanswerable Argument.

The Christian conception of duty to fellow men was an unanswerable argument for Christianity. It is so today. The philanthropy which Christ teaches and Christians imperfectly practice is the stumbling block of scoffers.—Rev. John T. Paris, Presbyterian, Mount Carmel, Ill.

Luxury of Giving.

The man or woman who learns to give in the right spirit forgets all about the duty in the privilege, and the absence of life's necessities would bring no such distress as to be cut off from this luxury.—Rev. Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, Editor Missionary Review of the World, Brooklyn.

An Educated Woman.

The woman who can judge, compare, assess each fact and truth at a proper value is educated. The woman of such a power is superior, and helps to make the members of her own sex and of the whole community superior.—Charles F. Thwing, D. D., President Western Reserve University.

Where to Find Hope.

Whenever we are a prey to affliction, whenever we suffer either from sickness or poverty or the malice of men, let us raise our eyes and look up to the cross on which our Saviour died for us, and this sight will certainly console and comfort us.—Rev. L. H. Gache, Romain Catholic, Philadelphia.

Devotion and Science.

Devotion is not a sort of finish given to the sciences, nor is science a sort of feather in the cap, if you will allow me the expression, an ornament and setoff to devotion. The church wants the intellectual layman to be religious and the devout ecclesiastic to be intellectual.—Rev. F. M. Kielty, Roman Catholic, St. Louis.

Pillar or Pillow?

Four-fifths of the church members have their names on our church book as an insurance against fire in the next life. Instead of being pillars in the church, they try to make a pillow of the church, and the world sees profession without reality, form without power, creed without character, faith without works, reputation without righteousness.—Rev. C. J. Hall, People's Tabernacle, Denver.

Going Home.

A blessed world lies all about us; a more blessed world looms up on the horizon line. In the light of the latter we walk and are happy. Heaven is close at hand, and through the open windows of the soul we can catch glimpses of it. Its dear ones are our dear ones, and their unseen hands are down stretched to lift us over the rough places. Give us an eye to see and nothing will be too much to endure, for he who is going home can bear the dangers of the journey with a light heart.—Rev. Dr. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

We can help make people bright by our keenness, but we can never accomplish anything toward making people good except by our tenderness.

sentative schools in the Virginia Methodist Conference. Have these schools no laboratories and no college-trained teachers? The laboratories are not large, and they might be improved, but I know that they all have laboratories, and both in physics and chemistry laboratory work is done. And who manages these laboratories? Who, indeed, but college-trained teachers? unless, indeed, the meaning of college has been changed, and if so, we should have been told in the address what was meant by the term. Is Randolph-Macon a College? Is the Randolph-Macon Woman's College a college? Is the Woman's College of Baltimore a college? Is Trinity College a college? Is Princeton a college? Most of us have been so taught. If so, then the three institutions I have mentioned above are all directed by college-trained men, and all the literary and scientific departments are in charge of college-trained men and women; and more than that, there are to my certain knowledge in two of the institutions seven Virginia college-trained women.
It is a standing rule in one of the institutions to find a suitable college-trained Virginia woman for every department suitable, if possible, and the instances have been rare where that could not be done.

In discussing this matter, there is no intention to reflect upon the ability of Miss Parrish, or to deny that there are many improvements needed in our educational work, but the statements are entirely too sweeping; the facts do not justify such broad generalizations, and the encouraging features and improvements in our educational work are not given the place that one would naturally expect in an address upon the "Educational Outlook in Virginia."

THE HIGHWAY OF TRADE AND TRAVEL.

The Southern Railway begs to call attention to its unequalled facilities for reaching all points in Florida, the South and Southwest. It is justly termed the representative railway of the South, the highway of trade and travel. Its important through connections, through car arrangements, complete dining-car service, quick and convenient schedules, commends it to the travelling public.

In addition to many local trains operated by this progressive company, the following through limited trains are run daily: "The Washington and Southwestern Limited," "The New York and Florida Express," "The United States Fast Mail," "The New York and Atlanta Express," "The Washington, Richmond and Florida
Limited," "The Washington and Chattanooga Limited."

The Southern's Palm Limited, formerly known as the New York and Florida Limited, will be inaugurated early in January, 1902, and will run solid between New York and St.
Augustine, Fla. All of these trains carry dining cars, thus providing a great convenience and time-saver to the traveller.

THE IMMORTAL SOUL.

he not have it?

We argue immortality from the difference between man and beast. The lower animals have few wants above the physical. But man is conscious of a thousand desires and aspirations above the material. And these desires increase with their gratification and are never so strong as at death. Who has not felt this unearthly craving and homesickness of the soul for immortality?

For ages God worked upon this earth to fit it as a residence for man. He gathered from out of the womb of the night by the secret of His power the chaos of the fire mist and the vapors, and condensed them in the hollow of his hand. The rocks appeared. The earth and sky and sea appeared. Deep in earth's bosom He hid the coal, the minerals, the jewels. Upon the soil He grew the forests and the verdure. He stocked the waters and the air with fish and fowl and creeping thing. He called forth the animals to be the servants of man. And then He built the human form, that most marvellous piece of mechanism, and placed in it the crowning achievement of His creative power—the soul of man. Was all this preparation the stand for a feeble taper soon to flicker and expire?

The goodness of God needs a future life to vindicate it.

The conscience of humanity is an evidence of future existence.

A consciousness of its deathless existence is a fundamental part of the human soul as it came from the hands of God. And man, through all changes of systems, has never lost confidence in his eternal career nor sight of his kinship with his Maker.

The speaker then stated that while reason and the soul itself give a weighty testimony, it can only amount to a strong presumption. The proof of the doctrine is found in Scripture from lid to lid, and the crowning evidence is based upon the three instances when Christ brought spirits from the world of immortality. And, said he, here we rest and are content.—Virginian-Pilot.

True peace is in the possession of the favor of God. This is found only in submission, faith and obedience to His laws; it is the result of a pure and holy love for Him. Resign every for-bidden joy; restrain every wish that is not referred to His will; banish all eager desires, all anxiety. Desire only the will of God; seek Him alone and you will find peace; you shall enjoy it in spite of the world. What is it that troubles you? Poverty, neglect, want of success, external or internal troubles?
Look upon everything as in the hands of God, and as real blessings that He bestows upon His children, of which you receive your portion. Then the world may turn its face from you, but nothing will deprive you of peace.—
Fenelon.

There is nothing, sir, too little for so little a creature as man. It is by studying little things that we attain the greater art of having as little misery and as much happiness as possible.—Samuel Johnson.

Religious News.

The Christian Thought Club of the Methodist ministers yesterday was well attended. Dr. Coke Smith presided, and Rev. George W. Jones occupied the secretary's desk. The order of the day was the reading of a review of Dr. J. J. Tigert's "Theism, or the Paths that Lead to God," by Rev. George W. Jones. Mr. Jones' paper was interesting and carefully prepared and showed thoughtful work. It was well received.

The club meets again in two weeks, at which time Dr. Coke Smith will read a paper on "What Modifications, if any, Does Methodist Polity Demand, if Highest Usefulness is to be Realized."—Virginian-Pilot.

When the president, the Rev. W. R. Proctor, called the Methodist preachers' meeting to order yesterday morning, he announced the illness of the Rev. J. K. Jolliff, pastor of Queen-Street Methodist church, and stated that Mr. Jolliff was now at St. Vincent's Hospital for the purpose of having his ear operated upon.

The opening prayer was made by the Rev. C. L. Bane, who offered a special petition for the early restoration of Mr. Jolliff to his usual health.

The Rev. J. E. McCullough, missionary secretary to the Virginia Conference, was introduced to the body. He spoke in the interest of the new missionary paper, "Go Forward." He said that it was important that there should be a full co-operation on the part of the Church in extending the circulation of this paper. The paper had now about 8,000 subscribers, when 25,000 subscribers would not be sufficient for acquainting the Methodists of Virginia with the missionary work of the Church. He said the whole Church should be united in a great forward movement in circulating this paper; we cannot carry on the work of fully informing our people as to what the Church is doing for missions unless the great rank of the Church will enlist in the work of placing "Go Forward" in every Methodist home within the bounds of the Virginia Conference. He suggested the appointment of a committee of children in each of the churches, to be known as a missionary committee, to aid in circulating the paper among the children, and then the Epworth League ought to be engaged in the work of spreading the paper. They could do a work that would be especially helpful, said Mr. McCullough. The women can do much in this direction. He asked the pastors of the several churches for their assistance in extending the circulation of the paper.

The Rev. E. T. Dadmun suggested that some plan be formulated by the committee on union revival services for uniting the Epworth Leagues of the churches where these services are to be held, so that they may at least one night in each week take part in meeting, say to conduct a song service thirty minutes before preaching. He said that the Epworth League should not be separate and apart from the church in the great work of saving souls, but vitally a part of it.

Rev. W. S. Christian suggested that the matter be referred to the pastors where these services are to be held.

On motion of Dr. Coke Smith, it was recommended that the pastors utilize the Leagues in the meetings as far as they can.

CALL OF CHURCHES.

The president called for reports from the churches, and the following responded:

The Rev. J. B. Merritt, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel, reported interesting services during the week, and a full day Sunday.

Queen-Street—The Rev. R. H. Bennett preached Sunday morning for the pastor, Rev. J. K. Jolliff, who is sick, and the Rev. T. J. Taylor preached at night.

Centenary—The Rev. E. T. Dadmun had a most delightful day Sunday and received several new members by certificate.

Rev. Dr. Smith reported a very good attendance on the Sunday school at Epworth and very good congregations for the weather. Dr. Smith preached at the 11 o'clock service and the Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at night.

Huntersville—Rev. H. C. Cheatham preached morning and night and conducted a most spiritual communion service. He reported a good Sunday school and a most interesting Epworth League.

Rev. C. L. Bane attended the Sunday school, and preached to large congregations at Cumberland-Street Sunday. He received two members by certificate and one on profession of faith.

Owens Memorial—Rev. Ernest Stevens reported 50 per cent. of the Sunday school present. He preached to the usual congregations morning and night.

Rev. W. P. Jordan assisted in the Methodist Sunday school at Park Place and attended services at the Presbyterian church.

Lambert's Point—Rev. C. H. McGhee had a good Sunday school, with the addition of several new scholars. He had a good congregation in the morning, but held no services at night.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth reported about 60 per cent. of the Sunday school present. He has organized a Teachers' Bible Study Circle, with twenty-nine members, and much interest is manifested in this special feature of Sunday school work. Mr. Lambeth preached morning and night and began the first of a series of services in the evening.

Rev. W. R. Proctor, of McKendree church, preached to good congregations and received three new members by certificate. He has organized a very promising Teachers' Bible Study Circle in connection with the school.

Park View—Rev. J. N. Latham had a most pleasant day and received one member on profession of faith.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt gave a most interesting account of the work at Port Norfolk Sunday. There was a very full attendance at the Senior and Junior Epworth League meetings and the services of an unusually interesting character. The congregations at the regular services were very good for the weather.

Wright Memorial—Rev. George H. McFaden had a full and one of the heaviest days during his pastorate here. He attended the Sunday school, organized a Junior Epworth League with forty-one members, preached to the sailors on the U. S. S. San Francisco at the navy yard in the afternoon and preached morning and evening for his own people, and received three new members into the church.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings reported a fine day at Monumental church, with a splendid address from Mrs. Taylor on missions. Dr. Taylor spoke on missions at the Baptist church in the morning and the Presbyterian church in the afternoon of Sunday. The missionary meetings of last week were all of a most interesting character.—Virginian-Pilot.

RELIGION IN AMERICA IN 1901.

The year 1901 has been an important one in the history of the kingdom, not so much for startling events as for general advance. In our own denomination the most important subject presented for consideration is the revision of our creed, and the one object of united prayer is a revival of religion. The net increase of our Church during the year ending April 1, 1901, was 18,000; that of the Presbyterian Church, South, a trifle over 2,000. The two branches of the Presbyterian Church were able to rejoice in a common freedom from debt on the part of their great evangelizing agencies. The Congregational and Episcopal Boards were unfortunately burdened with obligations which they found acting as a drag upon all forward movements. The American Board, by the generous efforts of a few individuals, paid off their debt before the close of their annual meeting in October. The captivity of Miss Stone, still unexplained and unrelieved, fell as a cloud upon the brightness of their rejoicing. The Methodists held no national Conference during 1901, but observed an Ecumenical Conference in London, which was attended by delegates from all parts of the world, representing a constituency estimated at 30,000,000. The American Protestant Episcopal Church held its triennial Convocation in San Francisco in October, the sessions being marked by fraternal fellowship, although the propositions to forbid all remarriage of divorced persons, to establish provincial assemblies, and to change the legal name of the denomination, were all defeated; as was the suggestion to receive under episcopal care congregations not at first willing to use the Prayer-book. The annual Conventions of the Societies of Christian Endeavor and of the Epworth Leagues called out the usual thousands of delegates; and the meeting of the Baptist Young People's Unions in the Coliseum at Chicago was attended by the largest numbers they had ever known. During the summer there were upwards of twenty Bible Schools in operation at Northfield, Mass., Geneva Lake, Wis., Asheville, N. C., and other places; and upwards of 500,000 persons, it is estimated, attended religious, charitable or educational Conventions during the months usually given to vacations. The most important, at least the most notable, event in the religious circles of America during the year, was the issue of the American Standard Revision of the Holy Scriptures, a work which, it is universally conceded, possesses the desirable characteristics for lack of which the revision of 1885 failed to come into general use.

RELIGION ABROAD IN 1901.

In England the chief incident in religious circles was in the conduct of a simultaneous mission by which every city, town and hamlet in Great Britain was reached at practically the same time with the invitation of the Gospel. In this unparalleled effort tens of thousands of laborers engaged as evangelists, and all churches united as one body for the spiritual uplift of the religious life of the people. Meetings were held in churches, chapels, halls and cottages, or even upon the streets, as the need seemed to require or opportunity suggest. While the results in actual conversions were not all that had been hoped, the people of God were drawn closely together, their differences were minimized and their faith strengthened. The union of all the non-established churches in England in a national federation about a twelve-month since, greatly facilitated this work. In France the bill for the regulation of religious associations has caused more comment than any other one measure; and it resulted in the self-expulsion of about 11,000 religious establishments with their adherents. The movement was the indirect result of the Dreyfus scandal, since the ultramontane orders were hostile to the action of the government in this, and took occasion violently to oppose the ministry in consequence. The republic, on its part, passed a bill that all religious orders must first be licensed by the State; and to receive such license they must establish their headquarters in France, submit their constitution and rules to the government for inspection and approval, and take an oath of allegiance to the powers in authority. In Austria the "Los von Rome" movement still receives accessions; and it is estimated about 20,000 persons have left the Catholic Church within a year as a protest against the tyranny of the Bishops. In Spain a strong national tendency toward ecclesiastical freedom manifested itself first in the Catholic Conference at Burgos, and afterward in the publications of an ex-priest at Barcelona. It is shown in his review that 21,000 public school teachers are left unpaid for months, while 70,000 monks and nuns have support from State funds and endowments which profit the people not a whit. In Italy the six Protestant organizations laboring side by side have formed an Evangelical Council, and submit to it the oversight of their various fields. In Russia the excommunication of Tolstoj attracted considerable attention for a time, but no attempt was made to force him out of the Czar's dominions. The suppression of all religious freedom in Finland is, however, of a character so outrageous that it becomes an international scandal. In Turkey the persistence and courage of American diplomacy have at last secured the payment of damages done to American missionary property by Turkish troops years ago.

Talmage's Sermon.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In this discourse Dr. Talmage describes some of the scenes to be witnessed late at night in the great cities and warns the unwary of many perils; text, Isaiah xxi, 11, "Watchman, what of the night?"

When night came down on Babylon, Nineveh and Jerusalem, they needed careful watching, otherwise the incendiary's torch might have been thrust into the very heart of the metropolitan splendor, or enemies, marching from the hills, might have forced the gates. All night long, on top of the wall and in front of the gates, might be heard the measured step of the watchman on his solitary beat; silence hung in air, save as some passerby raised the question, "Watchman, what of the night?"

It is to me a deeply suggestive and solemn thing to see a man standing guard by night. It thrilled through me as at the gate of an arsenal in Charleston the question once smote me, "Who comes there?" followed by the sharp command, "Advance and give the countersign." Every moral teacher stands on picket or patrols the wall as watchman. His work is to sound the alarm, and whether it be in the first watch, in the second watch, in the third watch or in the fourth watch to be vigilant until the daybreak flings its "morning glories" of blooming cloud across the trellis of the sky.

The ancients divided their night into four parts—the first watch from 6 to 9, the second from 9 to 12, the third from 12 to 3 and the fourth from 3 to 6. I speak now of the city in the third watch, or from 12 to 3 o'clock.

I never weary of looking upon the life of the city in the first watch. That is the hour when the stores are closing. The laboring men, having quitted the scaffolding and the shop, are on their way home. It rejoices me to give them my seat in the city car. They have stood and hammered away all day. Their feet are weary. They are exhausted with the tug of work. They are mostly cheerful. With appetites sharpened on the swift turner's wheel and the carpenter's whetstone they seek the evening meal. The clerks, too, have broken away from the counter and with brain weary of the long line of figures and the whims of those who go a-shopping seek the face of mother or wife and child. The streets are thronged with young men setting out from the great centers of bargain making. Let idlers clear the street and give right of way to the besweated artisans and merchants! They have earned their bread and are now on their way home to get it. The lights in full jet hang over 10,000 evening repasts—the parents at either end of the table, the children between. Thank God, "who setteth the solitary in families!"

Evening in the City.

A few hours later and all the places of amusement, good and bad, are in full tide. Lovers of art, catalogue in hand, stroll through the galleries and discuss the pictures. The ballroom is resplendent with the rich apparel of those who on either side of the white, glistening boards await the signal from the orchestra. Concert halls are lifted into enchantment with the warble of one songstress or swept out on a sea of tumultuous feeling by the blast of brazen instruments. Drawing rooms are filled with all gracefulness of apparel, with all sweetness of sound, with all splendor of manner. Mirrors are catching up and multiplying the scene until it seems as if in infinite corridors there were garlanded troops advancing and retreating. The outdoor air rings with laughter and with the moving to and fro of thousands on the great promenades. The dashing span, adrip with the foam of the long country ride, rushes past as you halt at the curbstone. Mirth, revelry, beauty, fashion, magnificence, mingle in the great metropolitan picture until the thinking man goes home to think more seriously and the praying man to pray more earnestly. A beautiful and overwhelming thing is the city in the first and second watches of the night.

But the clock strikes 12, and the third watch has begun. The thunder of the city has rolled out of the air. The slightest sounds cut the night with such distinctness as to attract your attention. The tinkling of the bell of the street car in the distance and the baying of the dog. The stamp of a horse in the next street. The slamming of a saloon door. The hiccough of the drunkard. The shrieks of the steam whistle five miles away. Oh, how suggestive, my friends, the third watch of the night!

There are honest men passing up and down the street. Here is a city missionary, who has been carrying a scuttle of coal to that poor family in that dark place. Here is an undertaker going up the steps of a building from which there comes a bitter cry, which indicates that the destroying angel has smitten the firstborn. Here is a minister of religion who has been giving the sacrament to a dying Christian. Here is a physician passing along in great haste. Nearly all the lights have gone out in the dwellings, for it is the third watch of the night.

Third Watch of the Night.

Oh, the third watch of the night! What a stupendous thought—a whole city at rest! Weary arm preparing for tomorrow's toil. Hot brain being cooled off. Rigid muscles relaxed. Excited nerves soothed. The white hair of an octogenarian in thin drifts across the pillow, fresh fall of flakes on snow already fallen. Childhood, with its dimpled hands thrown out on the pillow and with every breath taking in a new store of fun and frolic. Third watch of the night! God's slumberless eye will look. Let one great wave of refreshing slumber roll over the heart of the great town, submerging care and anxiety and worryment and pain. Let the city sleep.

But, my friends, be not deceived. There will be tonight thousands who will not sleep at all. Go up that dark alley, and be cautious where you tread lest you fall over the prostrate form of a drunkard lying on his own doorstep. Look about you, lest you feel the garroter's hug. Look through the broken window pane and see what you can see. You say, "Nothing." Then listen. What is it? "God help us!" No foot-lights, but tragedy ghastlier and mightier than Ristori or Edwin Booth ever enacted. No light, no fire, no bread, no hope. Shivering in the cold, they have had no food for twenty-four hours. You say, "Why don't they beg?" They do, but they get nothing. You say, "Why don't they deliver themselves over to the almshouse?" Ah, you would not ask that if you ever heard the bitter cry of a man or a child when told to must go to the almshouse. "Oh," you say, "they are vicious poor, and therefore they do not deserve our sympathy!" Are they vicious? So much more need they your pity. The Christian poor, God helps them. Through their night there twinkles the round, merry star of hope, and through the broken window they see the crystals of heaven, but the vicious poor they are more to be pitied. Their last light has gone out. You excuse yourself from helping them by saying they are so bad they brought this trouble on themselves. I reply, Where I give ten prayers for the innocent who are suffering I will give twenty for the guilty who are suffering.

Pass on through the alley. Open the door. "Oh," you say, "it is locked!" No, it is not locked. It has never been locked. No burglar would be tempted to go in there to steal anything. The door is never locked. Only a broken chair stands against the door. Shove it back. Go in. Strike a match. Now, look. Beastliness and rags. See those glaring eyeballs. Be careful now what you say. Do not utter any insult, do not utter any suspicion, if you value your life. What is that red mark on the wall? It is the mark of a murderer's hand! Look at those two eyes rising up out of the darkness and out from the straw in the corner, coming toward you, and as they come near you your light goes out. Strike another match. Ah, this is a babe, not like those beautiful children presented in baptism. This little one never smiled. It never will smile. A flower flung on an awfully barren beach. O Heavenly Shepherd, fold that little one in thy arms! Wrap around you your shawl or your coat tighter, for the cold wind sweeps through.

A Hopeless Brow.

Strike another match. Ah, is it possible that the scarred and bruised face of that young woman ever was looked into by maternal tenderness? Utter no scorn. Utter no harsh word. No ray of hope has dawned on that brow for many a year. No ray of hope ever will dawn on that brow. But the light has gone out. Do not strike another light. It would be a mockery to kindle another light in such a place as that. Pass out and pass down the street.

Do you know it is in this third watch of the night that criminals do their worst work? It is the criminals' watch. At half past 8 o'clock you will find them in the drinking saloon, but toward 12 o'clock they go to their garrets, they get out their tools, then they start on the street. Watching on either side for the police, they go to their work of darkness. This is a burglar, and the false key will soon touch the store lock; this is an incendiary, and before morning there will be a light on the sky and a cry of "Fire! Fire!" This is an assassin, and tomorrow morning there will be a dead body in one of the vacant lots. During the daytime these villains in our cities lounge about, some asleep and some awake, but when the third watch of the night arrives, their eye keen, their brain cool, their arm strong, their foot fleet to fly or pursue, they are ready. Many of these poor creatures were brought up in that way. They were born in a thieves' garret. Their childish toy was a burglar's dark lantern. The first thing they remember was their mother bandaging the brow of their father, struck by the police club. They began by robbing boys' pockets, and now they have come to dig the underground passage to the cellar of the bank and are preparing to blast the gold vault. Just so long as there are neglected children of the street, just so long we will have these desperadoes. Some one, wishing to make a good Christian point and to quote a passage of Scripture, expecting to get a Scriptural passage in answer, said to one of these poor lads, cast out and wretched, "When your father and your mother forsake you, who, then will take you up?" And the boy said "The perlice!"

The Way of Destruction.

In the third watch of the night gambling does its worst work. What though the hours be slipping away and though the wife be waiting in the cheerless home? Stir up the fire; bring on more drinks; put up more stakes! That commercial house that only a little while ago put out a sign of copartnership will this winter be wrecked on a gambler's table. There will be many a money-bill that will spring a leak. In the third watch of the night pass down the streets of these cities, and you hear the click of the dice and the sharp, keen stroke of the balls on the billiard table. At these places merchant princes dismount, and legislators, tired of making laws, take a respite in breaking them. All classes of people are robbed by this crime—the importer of foreign silks and the dealer in Chatham street pocket handkerchiefs. The clerks of the store take a hand after the shutters are put up, and the officers of the court while away their time while the jury is out.

In Baden-Baden, when that city was the greatest of all gambling places on earth, it was no unusual thing the next morning, in the woods around about the city, to find the suspended bodies of suicides. Whatever be the splendor of surroundings, there is no excuse for this crime. The thunders of eternal destruction roll in the deep rumble of that gambling tenpin alley, and as men come out to join the long procession of sin all the drums of death beat the dead march of a thousand souls.

In one year in New York city there was $7,000,000 sacrificed at the gambling table. Perhaps some of your friends have been smitten of this sin; perhaps some of you have been smitten by it; perhaps there may be a stranger here from some of the hotels. Look out for those agents of iniquity who tarry around about the hotels and ask you, "Would you like to see the city?" "Yes." "Have you ever seen that splendid building up town?" "No." Then the villain will undertake to show you what he calls the "lions" and the "elephants," and after a young man, through morbid curiosity or through badness of soul, has seen the "lions" and the "elephants" he will be on enchanted ground. Look out for these men who move around the hotels with sleek hats—always sleek hats—and patronizing air and unaccountable interest about your welfare and entertainment. You are a fool if you cannot see through it. They want your money.

Gambling and Drunkenness.

In Chestnut street, Philadelphia, while I was living in that city, an incident occurred which was familiar to us there. In Chestnut street a young man went into a gambling saloon, lost all his property, then blew his brains out, and before the blood was washed from the floor by the maid the comrades were shuffling cards again. You see, there is more mercy in the highwayman for the belated traveler on whose body he heaps the stones, there is more mercy in the frost for the flower that it kills, there is more mercy in the hurricane that shivers the steamer on the Atlantic coast, than there is mercy in the heart of a gambler for his victim.

In the third watch of the night also drunkenness does its worst. The drink-

Not Gifts, but Graces.

God respects not the arithmetic of our prayers, how many they are; nor the rhetoric of our prayers, how long they are; nor the music of our prayers, how melodious they are; nor the logic of our prayers, how methodical they are; but the divinity of our prayers, how heart sprung they are. Not gifts, but graces, prevail in prayer.—Presbyterian.

A Continual Struggle.

Life is a wrestle. The contestants are inherited tendencies and our ideals. We must not weaken, but so overcome that the inherited tendencies shall prove a blessing and not a curse. We must direct our past into the mold of the present.—American Hebrew.

Four Things.

Four things a man must learn to
If he would make his record true—
To think without confusion clearly,
To love his fellow men sincerely,
To act from honest motives purely,
To trust in God and heaven securely.
—New York Independent.

Franklin and the Bible.

When Benjamin Franklin was ridiculed in Paris for his defense of the Bible, he determined to find out how many of the scoffers had read it. He informed one of the learned societies that he had come across a story of pastoral life in ancient times that seemed to him very beautiful, but of which he would like the opinion of the society.

On the evening appointed Franklin read to the assembly of scholars the book of Ruth. They were in ecstasies over it and one after another begged that the manuscript might be printed. "It is printed," replied Franklin, "and is a part of the Bible."

On another occasion he copied and read to a company of free thinking wits a remarkable "ancient poem." It was received with extravagant admiration. Who was the author? Where did Franklin discover it? He informed them that it was the third chapter of Habakkuk.

Wholly apart from its religious and ethical value, the Bible is the one book of which no intelligent person can afford to be ignorant. As Charles Dudley Warner says, "It is not a question of theology or dogma; it is a question of general intelligence."—Youth's Companion.

Pet Name For Mr. Morgan.

In the bosom of his family J. Pierpont Morgan is a very lovable fellow, and in the sacredness of the home circle his wife addresses him by a term of endearment that she learned in their sparkling days. Mr. Morgan is giantesque. When he walks, the earth seems to tremble under the pressure of his heel. He is big in every way, mentally and morally as well as physically. To think of him responsive to a diminutive is enough to make a horse laugh. Nothing could appear more incongruous, but Mrs. Morgan affectionately calls him "Ponty."—New York Press.

Missions In Odd Corners.

Among the most important of Christian Endeavor specialties is the work now found among the life savers and among the lighthouse keepers along our coast, and particularly interesting development is the Floating Society of Christian Endeavor which is found on our merchant marine and upon the men-of-war flying the stars and stripes and the union jack. The United States contains within its borders men of so many different nationalities that nearly every Endeavor can find foreign missionary work at his own door.—Home Magazine.

The Home Circle.

THE WIGGLERS BECOME MOSQUITOES.

It was a bright moonlight night when the oldest Wigglers in the rain barrel made up their minds to leave the water. They had always been restless and discontented children, but it was not altogether their fault. How could one expect any insect with such a name to float quietly? When the Mosquito mothers laid their long and slender eggs in the rain barrel, they had fastened them together in boat-shaped masses, and there they had floated until the Wigglers were strong enough to break through the lower ends of the eggs into the water. It had been only a few days before they were ready to do this.

Then there had been a few more days and nights when the tiny Wigglers hung head downward in the water, and all one could see by looking across the barrel was the tips of their breathing tubes. Sometimes, if they were frightened, a young Wiggler would forget and get head uppermost for a minute, but he was always ashamed to have this happen, and made all sorts of excuses for himself when it did. Well-bred little Wigglers tried to always have their heads down, and Mosquitoes who stopped to visit with them and give good advice told them such things as these: "The Wiggler who keeps his head up may never have wings," and, "Up with your tails and down with your eyes if you would be mannerly, healthy and wise."

When they were very young they kept their heads way down and breathed through a tube that ran out near the tail-end of their bodies. This tube had a cluster of tiny wing-like things on the very tip, which kept it floating on the top of the water. They had no work to do, so they just ate food which they found in the water, and wiggled, and played tag, and whenever they were at all frightened they dived to the bottom and stayed there until they were out of breath. That was never very long.

There were many things to frighten them. Sometimes a stray Horse stopped by the barrel to drink, sometimes a Robin perched on the edge for a few mouthfuls of water, and once in a while a Dragon-Fly came over to visit from the neighboring pond. It was not always the biggest visitor who scared them the worst. The Horse tried not to touch the Wigglers, while a Robin was only too glad if he happened to get one into his bill with the water. The Dragon-Flies were the worst, for they were the hungriest, and they were so much smaller that sometimes the Wigglers didn't see them coming. Sometimes, too, when they thought that a Dragon-Fly was going the other way, some of them stayed near the top of the water, only to find when it was too late that a Dragon-Fly can go backward or sideways without turning around.

When they were a few days old the Wigglers began to change their skins. This they did by wiggling out of their old ones and wearing their new ones which had been growing underneath. This made them feel exceedingly important, and some of them became disgracefully vain. One Wiggler would not dive until he was sure a certain Robin had seen his new suit. It was because of that vanity he never lived to be a Mosquito.

After they had changed their skins a few times, they had two breathing tubes apiece instead of one, and these two grew out near their heads. And their heads were much larger. At the tail-end of his body each Wiggler now had two leaf-like things with which he swam through the water. Because they used different breathing tubes, those Wigglers who had moulted or cast their skins several times, now floated in the water with their heads just below the surface and their tails down. When a Wiggler is old enough for this, he is called a pupa, or half-grown-one.

There are often young Mosquito children of all ages in the same barrel—eggs, wigglers, and pupae all together. There is plenty of room and plenty of food, but because they have no work to do there is much time for quarrelling and talking about each other.

This year the Oldest Pupa had put on so many airs that nobody liked it at all, and several of the Wigglers had been heard to say that they couldn't bear the sight of him. He had such a way of saying, "When I was a young Wiggler and had to keep my head down—" or repeating, "Up with your tails and down with your eyes if you would be mannerly, healthy and wise."

One little Wiggler crossed his feelers at him, and they say it is just as bad to do that as to make faces. Besides, it is so much easier—if you have the feelers to cross. Now the Oldest Pupa and those of his brothers and sisters who had hatched from the same egg-mass were talking of leaving the rain barrel forever. It was a bright moonlight night, and they longed to get their wings uncovered and dried, for then they would be full grown Mosquitoes, resting most of the day and having glorious times at night.

The Oldest Pupa was jerking himself through the water as fast as he could, giving his jointed body sudden bends, first this way and then that, and when he met anyone nearly his own age he said, "Come with me and cast your skin. It is a fine evening for moulting."

Sometimes they answered, "All right," and jerked or wiggled or swam along with him, and sometimes a pupa would answer, "I'm afraid I'm not old enough to slip out of my skin easily."

Then the Oldest Pupa would answer, "Don't stop for that. You'll be older by the time we begin." That was true, of course, and all members of Mosquito families grow old very fast. So it happened that when the moon peeped over the farmhouse showing her bright face between the two chimneys, twenty-three pupae were floating close to each other and making ready to change their skins for the last time.

It was very exciting. All the young Wigglers hung around to see what was going on, and pushed each other aside to get the best places. The Oldest Pupa was much afraid that somebody else would begin to moult before he was ready, and all the brothers were telling their sisters to be careful to split their skins in the right place down the back, and the sisters were telling them that they knew just as much about moulting as their brothers did. Every little while the Oldest Pupa would say "Now wait! Don't one of you fellows split his old skin until I say so!"

Then two or three of his brothers would become impatient because their outer skins were growing tighter every minute and would say "Why not?" and would grumble because they had to wait. The truth was that the Oldest Pupa could not get his skin to crack, although he jerked and wiggled and took very deep breaths. And he didn't want anyone else to get ahead of him. At last it did begin to open, and he had just told the others to commence moulting when a Mosquito Mother stopped to lay a few eggs in the barrel.

"Dear me!" said she. "You are not going to moult to-night, are you?"

"Yes, we are," answered the Oldest Pupa, giving a wiggle that split his skin a little farther. "We'll be biting people before morning."

"You?" said the Mosquito Mother, with a queer little smile. "I wouldn't count on doing that. But you young people may get into trouble if you moult now, for it looks like rain."

She waved her feelers upward as she spoke, and they noticed that heavy, black clouds were piling up in the sky. Even as they looked the moon was hidden and the wind began to stir the branches of the trees. "It will rain," she said, "and then the water will run off the roof into this barrel, and if you have just moulted and cannot fly, you will be drowned."

"Pooh!" answered the Oldest Pupa. "Guess we can take care of ourselves. I'm not afraid of a little water." Then he tried to crawl out of his old skin.

The Mosquito Mother stayed until she had laid all the eggs she wanted to and then flew away. Not one of the Pupae had been willing to listen to her, although some of the sisters might have done so if their brothers had not made fun of them.

At last twenty-three soft and tired young Mosquitoes stood on their cast-off pupa-skins waiting for their wings to harden. It is never easy work to crawl out of one's skin, and the last moulting is the hardest of all. It was then when they could do nothing but wait, that these young Mosquitoes began to feel afraid. The night was now dark and windy and sometimes a sudden gust blew their floating pupa-skins toward one side of the barrel. They had to cling tightly to them, for they suddenly remembered that if they fell into the water they might drown. The oldest one found himself wishing to be a Wiggler again. "Wigglers are never drowned," thought he.

"Who are you going to bite first?" asked one of his brothers.

He answered very crossly, "I don't know, and I don't care. I'm not hungry. Can't you think of anything but eating?"

"Why, what else is there to think about?" cried all the floating Mosquitoes.

"Well, there is flying," said he.

"Humph! I don't see what use flying would be except to carry us to our food," said one Mosquito sister. She afterward found out that it was good for other reasons.

After that they didn't try to talk with their oldest brother.

They talked with each other and tried their legs and wished it were light enough for them to see their wings. Mosquitoes have such interesting wings, you know, thin and gauzy and with delicate fringes around the edges and along the line of each vein. The sisters, too, were proud of the pockets under their wings, and were in a hurry to have their wings harden so that they could flutter them and hear the beautiful singing sound made by the air striking these pockets. They knew that their brothers could never sing and they were glad to think that they were ahead of them for once.

It was not really their fault that they felt so, for the brothers had often put on airs and laughed at them.

Then came a wonderful flash of lightning and a long roll of thunder, and the trees tossed their beautiful branches to and fro, while big rain-drops pattered down on to the roof overhead and spattered and bounded and rolled toward the edge under which the rain barrel stood.

"Fly!" cried the Oldest Brother, raising his wings as well as he could.

"We can't! Where to?" cried the rest.

"Fly anyway, anywhere!" screamed the Oldest Brother, and in some wonderful way the whole twenty-three managed to flutter and crawl and sprawl up the side of the building, where the rain-drops fell past but did not touch them. There they found older Mosquitoes waiting for the shower to stop. Even the Oldest Brother was so scared that he shook, and when he saw that same Mosquito Mother who had told him to put off changing his skin, he got behind two other young Mosquitoes and kept very still. Perhaps she saw him, for it was lighter than it had been. She did not seem to see him, but he heard her talking to her friends. "I told him," she said, "that he might better put off moulting, but he answered that he could take care of himself, and that he would be out biting people before morning."

"Did he say that?" cried the other old Mosquitoes.

"He did," she replied.

Then they all laughed and laughed and laughed again, and the young Mosquito found out why. It was because Mosquito brothers have to eat honey, and only the sisters may bite people and suck their blood. He had thought so often how he would sing around somebody until he found the nicest, juiciest spot, and then settle lightly down and bite and suck until his slender little body was fat and round and red with its stomach full of blood. And that could never be. He could never sing, and he would have to sit around with his stomach full of honey and see his eleven sisters gorged with blood and hear them singing sweetly as they flew. If Mosquito Fathers had ever come to the barrel, he might have found this out, but they never did. He sneaked off by himself until he met an early bird and then—well, you know birds must eat something, and the Mosquito was right there. Of course, after that his brothers and sisters bit thirteen people the very next night and had the loveliest sort of a Mosquito time.—The Interior.

VITAL STATISTICS.

"I was reading the other day," observed Mr. Figgers to Mrs. Figgers, as the two sat by the evening lamp, "that the life of an average person of seventy years is divided about as follows: 24¼ years, in bed; 16¾ years, laboring; 6½ years, eating; 1½ years, sick; 3 years, dressing; 2 years, wasted; 15½ years, recreation. Now, I've been calculating a little, using this as a basis, and I've formulated a set of additional statistics, drawing largely on my own observations, of course. For instance, here's the general plan of a baby, supposing a baby stayed a baby for seventy years: 41 years, crying; 7½ years, eating; 3 years, sleeping; 8 years, sucking thumb; 6½ years, being kissed; 4 years, being bathed."

"Well?" remarked Mrs. Figgers, inquiringly.

"Oh, nothing, my dear," explained her husband. "I only thought these might be interesting to you, that's all. Here's woman—I mean no aspersions against the sex, my love: 6 years, dressing; 4½ years, with dressmaker; 9 years, quieting baby; 4 years, talking about other people; 6 years, talking about baby; 18 years, sewing, housework, etc.; 6 years, getting children ready for school; 2½ years, clubs, receptions, etc.; 14 years, sleeping, reading, resting, etc."

"I don't see as that proves anything, exactly," said Mrs. Figgers, suspiciously.

"Certainly not, certainly not," her husband hastened to assure her. "I'm only doing this for our amusement. See—here's what I've drawn up concerning our cat—still adhering to the seventy-year scheme, you understand: 3 years, scratching himself; 36 years, sleeping; 3 years, eating; 19 years, prowling and yowling; 4 years, under our feet; 5 years, blinking."

"Nonsense!" asserted Mrs. Figgers, firmly.

"And here's our dog—I hope I'm not boring you, dear," continued Mr. Figgers, smoothly. "Listen: 5 years, scratching; 33 years, sleeping; 5 years, eating; 13 years, barking, running, etc.; 4 years, fighting; 10 years, wagging tail. You see, his schedule is slightly different from that of the cat. He spends more time scratching and eating, and less sleeping, for instance. Now—"

"Well, I guess we'll stop right here, Henry," interrupted Mrs. Figgers, briskly. "I'll just give you your doings, for fear you'll be too modest to divide them off yourself. From my own observation, I should say in seventy years you'd spend thirty sleeping, and forty talking foolishness, and ten—"

"Hold on, hold on, my dear!" cut in Mr. Figgers. "You've got over seventy already."

"I haven't either," retorted Mrs. Figgers, witheringly. "You know you talk in your sleep, Henry."—Edwin L. Sabin, in Criterion Magazine.

RELIGION ABROAD IN 1901.

In Australia and upon other remote colonial and missionary fields a federation of denominations has taken place during the year 1901, which promises to have important bearings upon the future of religion in all, but especially in Anglo-Saxon countries.—The Interior.

MARRIAGE.

By Rev. J. M. Owens and E. H. Powell, January 21, 1902, at Mayo, Va., at the home of the bride, a beautiful marriage was solemnized, the contracting parties being Miss Mary L., daughter of Mr. John S. Toot, and Mr. G. Thomas Crowder, a well-known planter of Halifax county, Va., Mrs. C. M. Jordan performing at the piano. The waiters were as follows: Miss Mary A. Ballou and Mr. C. D. Crowder, Miss Sallie Harris and Mr. D. L. Traynham, Miss Kate Craddock and Mr. Bob. Edmondson, Miss Janie Easley and Dr. W. H. Mosley, Miss Rosa Ballou and Mr. Will Owen, Miss Sue Owen and Mr. Charles Brooks, Miss Fannie C. Owen and Mr. Henry Harris, Miss Hattie Owen and Mr. J. D. Norwood, Miss Lizzie Crowder and Mr. C. J. Robertson. The bride wore tan poudesoir trimmed with cream applique and torquoise panne velvet, and carried maiden's hair ferns and bride's roses. The maid of honor carried carnations.

After the ceremony a very elaborate dinner was served to the great enjoyment of all, the dining-room decorations being white and crimson. The presents were numerous and handsome. The bride and groom left on afternoon train en route for Jacksonville, Charleston and other points South, followed by the best wishes of all.

The will of God respecting us is that we shall live by each other's happiness and life; not by each other's misery or death. A child may have to die for its parents; but the purpose of heaven is that it should rather live for them—that, not by its sacrifice, but by its strength, its joy, its force of being, it shall be to them renewal of strength and as the arrow in the hand of a giant. So it is in all other right relations. Men help each other by their joy, not by their sorrow. They are not intended to slay themselves for each other, but to strengthen themselves for each other.—Ruskin.

Christian faith is a grand cathedral, with divinely pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory, nor can possibly imagine any. Standing within, every ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakable splendors.—Hawthorne.

"IF I COULD GET RID of this abominable cold," exclaimed the sufferer, when the end of a spasm of coughing gave him a chance to talk. The way out of the trouble is plain. Take Allen's Lung Balsam before the merciless grip of the cold has fastened upon throat and lungs. After a few doses the cough is easier and less frequent, and a complete cure is but the question of a little time.

A FABLE.

(By Carolyn Wells.)

A man there was, endowed with wealth,
Friends, fortune, fame, good looks and health,

Obedient children, loving wife—
Uncounted blessings crowned his life.

But, though he viewed his lot with pride,

Think you this man was satisfied?
No; not content with fame and pelf,
He borrowed trouble for himself.

As copy-books have often taught,
The borrower's way's with sorrow fraught;

And one who asks a loan, some day
The obligation must repay.

Now, he who borrowed trouble found
That when the pay-day came around,
He had to own, with grief and shame,
He hadn't a trouble to his name!

So he was fettered hard and fast,
And in a debtor's prison cast,
And there he weeps with bitter moan
Because he can't repay his loan.

MORAL.

Don't borrow trouble, for, alack,
You may have none to pay it back.

To seek excellence rather than praise is not only to lift one's work above the vicissitudes of external fortune, but it is also to diminish that baleful self-consciousness which stands in the way of the growth of so many aspiring people.

Has Christ visited you and freely taken all your sin away? It shows, you think, that you had need of the Lord; yea, but it shows also another thing—that the Lord has need of you.
—William Arnot.

God is just as much God when the sun does not shine as when it does.
What is darkness below the clouds is sunshine above them.

The richest experiences of life never come to those who try to win them selfishly.—Anna R. Brown.

Conscience will never reconcile man to God; it simply shows Him what he is.—The Seattle Churchman.

There is no disappointments to those whose wills are buried in the will of God.—Faber.

If you are tempted to lose patience with your fellow-men, stop and think how patient God has been with you.

If there is one person to whom you feel dislike, that is the person of whom you ought never to speak.

As the angels administered unto the Lord, so do they continue their loving ministry even unto His followers.

All the most conspicuous saints of Bible history, from Abel to Paul, have been men of prayer. All the greatest results of history have been wrought in answer to prayer, and the decay of the praying spirit means general decline and disaster.

Let the most faithful and loving efforts go forth to those who have wandered, that we may, if possible, bring them back, but let us be persuaded of this, that the best work we can do is upon the young, in the comparative innocence of childhood and youth. Hold the youth to the Church, from childhood up. Let them not drift, with the hope that in due time all will be well.
If they run a course of evil and sow their wild oats, no repentance or reformation can ever bring them to what they once were. Whatever he may come to in heaven, under the wonderful grace of a loving Saviour, it is certain that no reformed man, can ever do on earth, for Christ and the Church, what he might have done if he had never needed reformation.

When Queen Victoria was at Balmoral, some time ago, she visited an aged cottager, and, on leaving her, said: "You will now no longer be afraid of me, and I shall expect you to pay me a visit." "Ah, ma'am," she replied, "it's not yourself I'm frightened at; it's them grand servants."—The Argonaut.

If loving hearts were never lonely,
If all things wished might always be,
Accepting what they looked for only,
They might be glad, but not in Thee.

We need as much the cross we bear
As air we breathe, as light we see;
It draws us to Thy side in prayer,
It bends us to our strength in Thee.
—Anna L. Waring.

ciety as a child, and never allow it to

ing will be respectable at 8 o'clock in the evening, a little flushed at 9, talkative and garrulous at 10, at 11 blasphemous, at 12 the hat falls off, at 1 the man falls to the floor, asking for more drink. Strawn through the drinking saloons of the city, fathers, husbands, sons as good as you are by nature, perhaps better. In the high circles of society it is hushed up. A merchant prince, if he gets noisily and uncontrollable, is taken by his fellow revelers, who try to get him to bed or take him home, where he falls flat in the entry. Do not wake up the children. They have had disgrace enough. Do not let them know it. Hush it up. But sometimes it cannot be hushed up when the rum touches the brain and the man becomes thoroughly frenzied. Such a one came home, having been absent for some time, and during his absence his wife died, and she lay in the next room prepared for the obsequies, and he went in and dragged her by the locks and shook her out of her shroud and pitched her out of the window. Oh, when rum touches the brain you cannot hush it up!

My friends, you see all around about you the need that something radical be done. You do not see the worst. In the midnight meetings in London a great multitude have been saved. We want a few hundred Christian men and women to come down from the highest circles of society to toil amid these wandering and destitute ones and kindle up a light in the dark alley, even the gladness of heaven. Do not go wrapped in your fine furs and from your well filled tables with the idea that pious talk is going to stop the gnawing of an empty stomach or to warm stockingless feet. Take bread, take raiment, take medicine, as well as take prayer. There is a great deal of common sense in what the poor woman said to the city missionary when he was telling her how she ought to love God and serve him. "Oh," she said, "if you were as poor and cold as I am and as hungry you could think of nothing else!"

Power of a Helpful Word.

A great deal of what is called Christian work goes for nothing, for the simple reason it is not practical. As after the battle of Antietam a man got out of an ambulance with a bag of tracts, and he went distributing the tracts, and George Stuart, one of the best Christian men in this country, said to him: "What are you distributing tracts for now? There are 3,000 men bleeding to death. Bind up their wounds, and then distribute the tracts." We want more common sense in Christian work, taking the bread of this life in one hand and the bread of the next life in the other hand. No such inapt work as that done by the Christian man who, during our civil war, went into a hospital with tracts and, coming to the bed of a man whose legs had been amputated, gave him a tract on the sin of dancing! I rejoice before God that never are sympathetic words uttered, never a prayer offered, never a Christian almsgiving indulged in but it is blessed. There is a place in Switzerland, I have been told, where the utterance of one word will bring back a score of echoes, and I have to tell you that a sympathetic word, a kind word, a generous word, a helpful word, uttered in the dark places of the town will bring back 10,000 echoes from heaven. Are there in this assemblage those who know by experience the tragedies in the third watch of the night? I am not here to thrust you back with one hard word. Take the bandage from your bruised soul and put on it the soothing salve of Christ's gospel and of God's compassion.

I could give you the history in a minute of one of the best friends I ever had. Outside of my own family I never had a better friend. He welcomed me to my home at the west. He was of splendid personal appearance, but he had an ardor of soul and a warmth of affection that made me love him like a brother. I saw men coming out of the saloons and gambling halls, and they surrounded my friend, and they took him at the weak point—his social nature—and I saw him going down, and I had a fair talk with him, for I never yet saw a man you could not talk with on the subject of his habits if you talked with him in the right way. I said to him, "Why don't you give up your bad habits and become a Christian?" I remember now just how he looked, leaning over his counter, as he replied: "I wish I could. Oh, sir, I should like to be a Christian, but I have gone so far astray I can't get back!" So the time went on. After awhile the day of sickness came. I was summoned to his sickbed. I hastened. It took me but a very few moments to get there. I was surprised as I went in. I saw him in his ordinary dress, fully dressed, lying on top of the bed. I gave him my hand, and he seized it convulsively and said: "Oh, how glad I am to see you! Sit down there." I sat down, and he said: "Mr. Talnage, just where you sit now my mother sat last night. She has been dead twenty years. Now, I don't want you to think I am out of my mind or that I am superstitious, but, sir, she sat there last night, and she said, 'Roswell, I wish you would do better, I wish you would do better.' I said: 'Mother, I wish I could do better. I try to do better, but I can't. Mother, you used to help me; why can't you help me now?' And, sir, I got out of bed, for it was a reality, and I went to her and threw my arms around her neck, and I said: 'Mother, I will do better, but you must help. I can't do this alone.' I knelt and prayed. That night his soul went to the Lord who made it."

A Tragedy In Five Acts.

Arrangements were made for the obsequies. The question was raised whether they should bring him to the church. Somebody said, "You cannot bring such a dissolute man as that into the church." I said: "You will bring him in church. He stood by me when he was alive, and I will stand by him when he is dead. Bring him." As I stood in the pulpit and saw them carrying the body up the aisle I felt as if I could weep tears of blood. On one side of the pulpit sat his little child of eight years, a sweet, beautiful little girl, that I had seen him hug convulsively in his better moments. He put on her all jewels and gave her all pictures and toys, and then he would go away, as if hounded by an evil spirit, to his cups and the house of iniquity, a fool to the correction of the stocks. She looked up wonderingly; she knew not what it all meant; she was not old enough to understand the sorrow of an orphan. On the other side sat the men who ruined him. They were the men who had poured the wormwood into the orphan's cup; they were the men who had bound him hand and foot. I knew them. How did they seem to feel? Did they weep? No. Did they say, "What a pity that so generous a man should be destroyed?" No. Did they sigh repentingly over what they had done? No; they sat there, looking as vultures look at the carcass of a lamb whose heart they have ripped out.

In this life there is but one sure happiness—to live for others.—Leo Tolstoi.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet—large and airy study hall, class-rooms, lecture hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, and over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); and system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of exposure of pupil to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 175. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are enabled to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

MORE BISHOPS.

This subject is a live one, in view of the approaching General Conference. We give in full an article by Dr. W. F. Henn, of North Georgia, taken from the Wesleyan Advocate, which has in it some very plain, sensible talk. There are considerations to be presented by others on the other side. The Texas Advocate says: "If five new Bishops are elected at the ensuing General Conference it will suit this writer. Vast work for them. It is most unfortunate for the appointments when the Bishop reaches Conference exhausted from previous labors." Another page we give a strong and interesting letter by Dr. Palmer on this subject. Some mention will be made on this subject in another issue. Brother Glenn's article is headed, "More and More Bishops," as follows:

"The trend of the Church in these times is evidently toward a continued, perpetual increase of offices and officers in the field. We must not only have all the work of the Church farmed out until there is nothing left for the Church to do, but we must multiply officers for all departments until there is nothing, except it be the drudgery, for the rank and file of the ministry to do.

"The proposition of Bishop McCabe, of the M. E. Church, to add forty new Bishops to their bench may have been facetious, though it seems to have been taken as serious by many who have commented on it. But whether it was intended one way or the other, there is about as much cool, logical reason in it as there is in the proposition of many writers to increase the number of our Bishops by the addition of two, three, or four. I have looked with all the penetration and range of vision that I possess for the necessity for more Bishops, but so far I have failed to see it. I have used the eyes of others who claim to see further than I see, but without avail. I do not see what they see.

"Let us look at it calmly. We have eleven Bishops, and we have forty-eight Conferences—hardly four and a half to the Bishop. But, you say, they are not all able to do full work. That may be true, and must be considered; but surely we can estimate that they can do the work of six men. Counting even that many, there would only be eight Conferences to the man. Allowing a full week for each Conference and a full week for coming and going and incidental work, we have sixteen weeks in which they are engaged in official duties. That leaves thirty-six weeks for voluntary work.

"I can almost see the sneer that is on many faces, and the element of pity depicted on many countenances as they read this, and think of my ignorance and narrow range of view. They hardly think my statements worthy of notice far enough to inform me that holding Conferences is only a small part of a Bishop's duties. But I am aware of all that, at least I am aware that it is so claimed. I admit, too, that there are incidental official duties of Bishops that are frequently coming up through the year, but not more than can be met in thirty-six weeks, or less time.

"I know that there are heavy extra demands on our Bishops; but there are heavy demands on our other connective officers, editors, presiding elders, and preachers.

"The Bishops, you say, have more than they can do, but more of what? I insist on the question, more of what? Is it more of official work? Is it more of work no one but Bishops can do? Is it work that they could no do as well without being Bishops? What sort of work is it that makes such an imperative demand for more Bishops? They can write books and review articles as well without being ordained Bishops as they can with it. They can preach commencement and dedicatory sermons, visit great ecclesiastical bodies as well; and as for marrying people, baptizing children, and burying the distinguished dead, that should all be done by the pastors, and no Bishops or others should ever allow the pastors to be discounted by being set aside in these pastoral offices, unless the pastor is away or disabled.

"If we need a Bishop to marry one couple, or dedicate one church, or perform one of the many other offices to which they are often called, then we need them for all; and in that case we should have a thousand or more Bishops—a Bishop for every duty and office. The fact is, we do need more loyal, consecrated, holy pastors of the flock of Christ; but we do not need more Bishops, presiding elders, or other officers of the Church. We are sufficiently represented in the high places of our part of God's kingdom; what is needed now is active, earnest workers among the common people. We need Bishops to do the work of Bishops—more than that is both out of place and a hurt.

The Church of God is the last institution in the world that should go into the business of conferring more honorary titles or offices."

NATURAL MORALITY.

The following letter from ex-President Cleveland is thoroughly characteristic of that strong Christian statesman. It puts the whole matter of our relation to Cuba in brief compass, and there is no escape from his conclusions. We must fulfill our obligations to Cuba, even if millionaire sugar and tobacco trusts fight greedily for their own enrichment at the cost of the nation's honor. We are not a nation of hogs, and Congress should not allow the whole country to be disgraced in order to please a few men, who have squeezed millions out of the people, and now want to sell our honor also:

Westland, Princeton, N. J.,
January 21, 1902.

My Dear Mr. Farquhar,—I have only sufficiently recovered from my illness to be about a little and ride out in a limited way. To-morrow I hope to start on a trip to the South, in the expectation that my health will be largely reinstated by the outing.

I received your letter yesterday, and was much impressed by the manner in which you discuss our relations and our duty to Cuba.

The arguments used in opposition to the tariff concessions she implores, based upon our material interests, are fallacious, mistaken, and misleading, while their source and the agencies of their propagation and spread cannot fail to be recognized by every honest, patriotic citizen with shame and humiliation.

It seems to me, however, that this subject involves considerations of morality and conscience higher and more commanding than all others.

The obligations arising from these considerations cannot be better or more forcibly defined than was done by President Roosevelt in his message to Congress, nor better emphasized than has been done by Secretary Root, and yet Congress waits, while we occasionally hear of concessions which rich sugar interests might approve in behalf of trembling Cuba.

I do not believe that nations, any more than individuals, can safely violate the rules of honesty and fair dealing.

Until there is no escape, therefore, I will not believe that, with all our fine words and lofty professions, our embrace of Cuba means the contagion of deadly disease. Yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

DR. WILMOT B. LANE.

Knowing that our readers are interested in Dr. Lane, the new professor at the Woman's College, we give the facts concerning his life and career heretofore:

Dr. Lane was brought up in the Canadian Methodist Church, and is now a member of our Church.

Dr. Lane was born in Perth, Canada, in 1872; he received the B. A. degree of Toronto University in 1893, the M. A. in 1894, his special work being in philosophy, in which he won the prizes offered in 1891, 1892 and 1893. In 1894 he studied pedagogy in the Ontario College of Pedagogy, and won its honor diploma. He pursued courses in theology in Victoria University in 1894-'95, winning three competitive prizes. He took post-graduate work in philosophy in the University of Toronto in 1895-'97 and in 1897 was elected Official Examiner in Philosophy of the University of Toronto. He was also called on to give a lecture course in that institution in 1897-'99. He was in the University of Wisconsin, and assistant in psychological laboratory. In June, 1899, he received the degree of Ph. D.

DR. WILMOT B. LANE.

The following year he was an honorary fellow and assistant in the psychological laboratory at Cornell University. In September, 1900, he was elected Professor of Philosophy and Psychology in Mount Union College, Ohio, whence he comes to us.

Dr. Lane married (in 1895) Miss Minnie D. Slater, of Toronto.

Those who have been associated with Dr. Lane have been very unqualified in their commendation of him to our Board.

The University of Toronto says in 1896: "Mr. Lane is one of our distin-

But as long as he lives in this world Edward Blake will remember the event of that Christmas dinner. The professor's wife never knew what was the cause of the evident trouble in the awkward boy seated by her. She finally gave up the attempt to amuse or entertain him and directed her efforts to "pick up, and for awhile, the other side of her. They have the different first part of my program, and self have to come to the other side fairly limping now where we ought very fact and run because we are truth add-maintain two churches in a the com-one could occupy. The Methodist take the premium for blundering on their work in cities. I was about years ahead of the procession.

Fourth Avenue church stands in the heart of one of the finest residence sections of the city, and is an honor to the denomination. It is not as costly, nor as richly furnished, as Epworth, but I believe it is even more imposing. In one particular they copied Epworth (St. Norfolk, I mean) to my sincere re-sorrow and that is in the arrangement of morning. It is a very serious thing that "promised" before night to develop into a gale.

Edward was so thoroughly disturbed by his convictions that he begged to be excused and stammered some awkward apology for going so soon. As he went out into the hall and then opened the outer door into the storm door Freeda came in from another entrance opening on the dining room.

She spoke quietly, but with a good deal of feeling.

"Ned, I don't want you to go away without speaking to me. Are you angry?"

"Not at you," replied Edward. But as he spoke he could not look her in the face as he used to do.

"You are not well, Ned." Freeda spoke quietly. "You are having some trouble"—

"I'll tell you some time, not now," he replied, and after a moment's hesitation he abruptly opened the door and went out.

He started toward his room, but when he reached the steps of Rankin hall he continued on past the building, and went out upon the campus. He crossed it and took a familiar path that led down past the clubhouse and then out upon the main street that led to the city.

Once out there by the big gates of the college grounds he paused again and then went down into the city. He walked deliberately and as if he were going to keep some previous engagement.

Soon he was in the heart of the street traffic down the center of the town. On account of the Christmas day the streets were mostly closed but the crowds on the sidewalks seemed larger than usual. He walked on steadily until he came to the front of which had grown to be familiar to him in a very brief time—the arched entrance leading up to the box office of the principal theater of Raynor.

A great crowd was streaming slowly up toward the floor entrance. But Edward stopped outside and stared with peculiar earnestness at the two billboards, one on each side of the doorway facing the sidewalk.

The pictures were such as might be seen in almost any city where cheap theatrical representations are common. They were neither worse nor better than scores of others similar to them which had appeared there regularly for years. The wonder was, of course, that pictures of that character could appear in any Christian city of this country and be allowed by Christian people to remain a constant temptation and menace to the purity of young life.

It was characteristic of Edward's stubborn nature that, once having determined on his course, he was resolved to test his purposes by once more entering into the very midst of his temptations as if he would make final defiance of the worst they could do. He mechanically but deliberately went up to the side entrance

He was startled by the appearance of and bought the cheapest gallery ticket to the matinee that was sold. With this ticket in his hand he went around to the gallery door where he had gone so often and stood there a minute. Then he quietly walked out upon the sidewalk and turned his face toward the college, tearing the ticket into pieces as he climbed the hill.

He was glad it was storming harder. The wind had changed, and it came tearing down the hill, flinging billows of fine snow upward. Edward reached the top of the hill and entered the college gate with a feeling of exultation that was partly the result of what he had just experienced and partly the result of his physical contest with the storm.

He went at once to his room and kindled his fire, which had gone out. He then went to his table and wrote a long letter to his mother, telling her the whole story of his temptation and his final resolve to break with the whole evil. More than once he laid his pen down and rose to pace the floor. He was entirely alone in the building. The storm had risen now to a majestic height and roared over the hill, a perfect anthem of power. He went to the window and back again to the table and finally finished the letter and thoughtfully folded it, put it in the envelope, addressed, sealed and stamped it, ready for delivery.

Then feeling still high in him the emotion that demanded more action he put on his overcoat and went out again. Should he go to Freeda? He wanted to unburden himself to her, and he would have gone if she had still been in the ladies' hall. But it was growing late now, and he shrank back from going to see her in her new surroundings. And there was also even yet a timidity in his thought, even of her, that made him willing to wait a little while.

So he went on down into the city again, carrying his letter with him, which he put into one of the down town boxes, where it would be taken out by the carrier that night some time, and after looking into the shop windows on one of the streets where even yet a few confectionery stores and restaurants were open he started back again for his room.

By this time it was past sundown, and the storm was at its height. As he came up to the steps of Rankin hall he noticed a light in the room. He suddenly remembered that Willis had said that he might return on Christmas day in order to take part in some private theatricals given by the society men in one of the houses of a member who lived in Raynor.

He meant to tell him all about it, "suppose," Edward muttered to himself down at the foot of the steps. And the thought almost upset him again. He was ready to make a clean breast of it to his mother. He had already done so, and it had lifted a load from his heart. He was going to tell Freeda, and he knew that she would understand him and love him none the less. But his roommate was another person. The two incidents of the paper route and the football team had undoubtedly given Willis a feeling of great respect for his roommate. There was no longer any doubt in Edward's mind that Willis had a deep and honest esteem for him founded on the thought he had of his moral character. If now he should frankly disclose to him the facts connected with his recent experience, what would become of that respect which Edward felt he prized at this moment more than anything else? Would he ever again have any influence over Willis? Would it do any good to say anything about it?

But then Edward knew that in spite of his efforts to conceal his visits to one of the lowest of the entertainments two of Willis' society friends had recognized him there and might speak of it any time. Should he wait for a knowledge of it to come to Willis through others and so give his roommate the suspicion that all along he had tried to give an impression for moral uprightness which he did not possess? After all it was not a trifling matter, Edward said to himself as he stood irresolutely on the steps. He knew very well that he had escaped a deadly peril, one of the blackest bells that ever engulfed a young man, and even yet he trembled at the thought of what he had lost, of the wrong he had wrought upon his imagination and his memory.

He went on up the stairs slowly, shaking off some of the snow from his coat and entered his room.

The minute he entered Willis, who was trying on a costume of some sort that he had evidently just pulled out of his dressing case, turned around and said heartily: "Merry Christmas, old man! Old Santa Claus," he added as he noted Edward's snow covered form. "See here what my mother sent you for a little Christmas present." He reached down into his dressing case and pulled out a box done up in tissue paper. "Oh, open it, man, and it won't hurt you. Mother was bound to send it."

Edward fumbled at the package and finally opened it to discover a watch and chain. He silently laid them on his table and looked at them.

"It's all right," exclaimed Willis, laughing. "I told mother about your old turnip, that can't keep time any more than a pumpkin pie, and she insisted on my bringing you this. It won't be polite at all for you to refuse. Not good form in the society we move in, and mother will never forgive you if you don't take it. Oh, I cracked you up all the time I was home. Told mother all about the paper route business and the football affair, and I tell you she couldn't be more grateful if I had rooms with a clergyman and a Sunday school superintendent and a policeman all together to keep me going straight, and the fact is, chum," continued Willis, with a kind look that made Edward groan as he thought of his past record, "it does me good to get back. I'm not your sort much, but it's a tonic for me to have you around, and one of these days when you get me convinced 'I do you credit. What sort of a fellow you had since I've must have been a relief to the Methodist and of me awhile, I'm awfully ginger, I'm awful do me good!"

Edward had not said a word, in fact, he wasn't able to, Willis rattled on at such a rate. But when Willis paused his wide awake, good natured face smiling carelessly toward his roommate, Edward said in a voice that trembled some, "I've got something to tell you that may change your opinion of me."

"Eh!" said Willis in surprise. He turned and looked more closely at his chum. The storm outside roared steadily over the hall as the two young men, both grave now, stood facing each other.

CHAPTER IV.

As Edward began to tell Willis the story of those two weeks and the effect of his experience on his character Willis grew more and more embarrassed, and finally he assumed a posture of attempted indifference, as he stood by the table, that did not deceive Edward in the least; for, even in the suppressed excitement of his confession, he could not help noticing that Willis was deeply moved. Just how he would take the matter was entirely unknown to Edward, but he doggedly kept on with his story, not attempting to conceal or slur any part of it, making it a disclosure of a real fall in moral conduct, such as it actually had been. To his great relief as he neared the end of his confession he felt consciously freer and happier. No matter how Willis might take it, he was not sorry that he had told him. It was a burden off his soul, and the future, whatever that might be, lay clear before him.

When he paused, Willis, who had not attempted to interrupt or ask any questions, turned abruptly around and walked into his bedroom. He was gone

KENTUCKY LETTER.

Mr. Editor, The chief event that has occurred recently in Methodist circles in this part of the field was the dedication of the splendid new Fourth Avenue church, in Louisville. Thirteen years ago I was pastor of Walnut Street church in that city, and preached two sermons that made quite a sensation among my own people. In them I advocated the immediate movement to build this Fourth Avenue church. As such an enterprise would take a large portion of the wealth out of Walnut Street some thought I was sawing off the limb on which I was perched. I also advised that both Walnut Street and Walnut Street be sold, the congregation united, and a strong down-town church established. This stirred them. I heard "razors" carried out the same, and will be. We are not to leap to trying to territory.ists can ng on ten gret, an. of the choir. s in a gallery right over the pulpit, and completely isolates the choir from the pastor. This is up-to-date ritualistic architecture, but it is un-Methodistic, and subversive of the spirit of Methodist worship. But except this fault, and I have only words of praise for this beautiful temple. Dr. Moore, the pastor, has displayed great executive ability in carrying through this noble enterprise, and is firmly enshrined in the hearts of these generous people. Bishop Galloway preached the dedication sermon, lifted $27,000 to extinguish the debt, and launched the ship with the benediction of God upon its voyage.

I said Methodists blunder in city work, and they do. They located Randolph-Macon College in a piney woods, when it ought to have been in the environs of Richmond. They located Emory College in a rabbit thicket, when it ought to be a force in Atlanta. They located Central College at a cross-roads, when it ought to have been a redoubt at St. Louis. They located the Southwestern University on a ranch, when it ought to have been a power in Austin. And they put thousands in brick and mortar here in a Kentucky hamlet, when they ought to have a great school in Louisville. It would pay the Church to sell every institution I have named, and others, and rebuild in the centres—fortify at strategic points. Vanderbilt University is a tremendous power in Nashville. So is the Richmond College in Richmond. So is Millsaps College in Jackson. I make no charge for these suggestions, and would honestly advise you not to pay anything for them if I did, for they are certain to be unheeded. There isn't wisdom enough to adopt them. Yes, that is true; it is in my thought, that if you had built your school in Richmond instead of where it is, Methodism would have been a great gainer. (Don't you cut this out.) The wisest thing Methodism has done in Richmond in a long time was to inaugurate Bro. Wiley's work. He will testify that I heartily favored it, and had planned to co-operate with him in carrying it out. We need similar work in all our cities.

I thought our friends at Centenary, in Richmond, were about the weakest-kneed Methodists I knew, except some that I heard of down in South Carolina, who took off their hats when an Episcopalian passed by until he got out of sight. But, I believe, I have run across some out here in Kentucky who are even more lacking in denominational spirituality. There are not many Episcopalians in this "neck o' the woods," but the Baptists are thick and saucy, and the Campbellites are thicker. In some places the Methodists have actually taken a back seat. I'm no bigot, but before I fall behind any other denomination I'd wipe the earth up with them or they would have to wipe me up. I told the editor of the Central Methodist to jump on the Baptists. He is one of those peaceable, loveable, heavenly-minded men, who can't bear a fuss, and I am afraid I scared him just a little. But as sure as you live we need a shaking up along the whole line of our denominational life. Five million nine hundred and sixty thousand Methodists in America, if united and loyal to their colors, are invincible, and do not need to have a duck-fit of delight because an Episcopalian happens to notice them. Bah! It is like a steam launch saluting a battle-ship. Methodism is the biggest thing afloat. That's a fact.

The general conviction everywhere I go out here is that our Southern Methodist ship sprung a serious leak in the war claim business, and that unless you repair the damage done at Dallas she will henceforth be a crippled craft upon the sea. I hope all will be well. But you must remember the Book Committee are great at "projecting their mental state into the case." By the way, did you ever hear Lincoln's story on that point? When Lincoln was a member of the Illinois Legislature, there was another member from some backwoods county, who felt it was his sworn duty to speak for or against every measure proposed. He became the bore of the body, but nobody could stop him. At length some of the members appealed to Lincoln to try and squelch him. So after his next speech, as he took his seat, Lincoln rose, and said: "Mr. Speaker, the gentleman reminds me of a story. A man got up early one morning, and was washing his face on the steps of his cabin, when he happened to look up, and saw what he took to be a squirrel on the roof of his corn crib. So he called to his little boy, and said: 'Johnnie, bring me the gun, and I'll kill you a squirrel for breakfast.' Johnnie brought him the gun. He aimed and fired, but the squirrel sat there still. He fired again, but didn't budge the squirrel. So he said to his little boy: 'Sonny, its strange I can't hit that squirrel?' 'Law, dad,' replied the one-gallus urchin, 'taint no squirrel. Hits a louse on your eye-brow!'" This philosophy of "projected mental states" is capable of some curious and fantastic achievements. It transforms a louse into a squirrel, and vice into virtue.

I see Dr. Rankin, editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, raises a question about the eligibility of Rev. H. C. Morrison, a lay delegate from the Kentucky Conference, to a seat in the General Conference. Bro. Morrison, it will be remembered, was arraigned and tried by the Quarterly Conference in Lexington, Ky., and expelled from the ministry and membership of the Church, upon the charge of holding a meeting in Dublin, Texas, in spite of the protest of the pastor there. An appeal was taken to the Annual Conference, Bishop Wilson presiding. I was present at the Conference, and loving Bro. Morrison very much, was deeply interested in the case, and had a hand in the settlement that was reached. As I understood the matter, the case would have been remanded for a new trial, upon the ground of various irregularities; but upon explanations that were satisfactory to all parties, the Conference reinstated Bro. Morrison, and restored to him his credentials. This may have been in itself an irregular procedure, but was wise and in accordance with the spirit of the Gospel, if not with the letter of ecclesiastical law. If the attempt to unseat Dr. Morrison is made, I think it will fail, and the illegality of his expulsion will appear, and many other ugly ghosts get up out of their graves and stalk abroad.

Bro. Morrison is a noble Christian man, an eloquent preacher, and a loyal Southern Methodist. His zeal may have led him into error, but God has greatly blessed his ministry, and thousands of sinners have been led to Christ through his evangelistic work. He is the editor, proprietor, and publisher of The Pentecostal Herald, and runs a big publishing plant in Louisville. I believe the "machine" organs call his paper "a guerilla paper." It is said that its subscription list greatly exceeds that of the Nashville "Christian Advocate." Be this true or false, it is a mighty good paper, and edited by a mighty good man.

The election of Bro. Morrison and the Rev. James Cannon, Jr., to the General Conference looks like a turn in the tide. They are both notorious advocates of reform, and representatives of that wider and freer spirit of progress which has been opposed by the policy of the administration. It is impossible to say how far they, and those who share their spirit, may be able to effect desirable changes, in the face of the formidable combinations that will confront them, but the presence of such men in our ecclesiastical legislature is full of encouragement. We have made some sorry history recently. God give the right success.

I see it stated that Bishop Fitzgerald has made an attempt to solve the presiding elder problem by appointing the pastor of one of the chief churches in New Orleans also presiding elder of the district. This is an interesting experiment, but it will probably carry consternation into the ranks of "the beloved." Imagine the effect of pastor Beauchamp being presiding elder of the Richmond District, and Lear of the West Richmond! Wouldn't it be interesting to overhear what Drs. Garland and Tudor would say about it to themselves. The "dividing elders" will have to hustle to ride the waves of the coming revolution. So will the espiscopoi. We have some mighty rough country in Kentucky. One brother, who travelled one of these rugged mountain circuits, failed to report anything collected on his work for the Bishops. The Bishop asked him why that was, and he replied: "Well Bishop, we have heard how the Bishops get to Nashville and preach in the fine churches, and come on to Bowling Green and preach for the aristocracy, and get to Louisville to spend Sunday, and pass us by. So we just concluded to let the hen peck whar' they scratch." By the way, our Conference meets next fall in a town twenty-five miles away from a railroad. Unless Asbury or McKendree was there, they have never seen "a Beeshup." They have promised to send an automobile to carry him from the railroad station. Great is the responsibility of the "Beeshup" who holds the next session of the Louisville Conference.

S. A. STEEL.

A LIFE OF DR. DUNCAN—WHY NOT?

Rev. Dr. S. A. Steel, in your paper, some weeks ago, expressed regret that there is not such a life. He is not alone in that regret. A short time after Dr. Duncan's death I mentioned to Dr. Lafferty the writing of such a book. If my memory is correct, he said he did not have the time to write it. I afterwards asked Dr. Tillett to write it. He replied about as follows: "Dr. Duncan wrote very little. His sermons and addresses were seldom kept. It would be hard to get sufficient data to write a satisfactory life."

As great as is the difficulty referred to by Dr. Tillett, in my judgment there are even greater difficulties. Many biographies are portrayals of the peculiarities of the persons. A jagged nature, like a gnarled tree, ever shows the knots. It is easy to point out, perhaps, to describe a blur, a defect. But who can paint, in word or canvas, perfection? Dr. Duncan had more of the perfection of nature and less of the imperfections than any other man that I have ever known. With an unequalled and indescribable magnetism, he won his way and held all that he won. That is not post-mortem praise. To those who knew him it is a trite truth.

In a few years, if no life of him is written, those that knew him best will "fall on sleep," and, as many others that live and die, he will be forgotten. But who that knew him can ever forget him?

In physical appearance, though rather undersize, there was a roundness, a perfection that at once attracted. In speaking his gestures were few, but they were the more forceful when made. His voice and delivery surpassed anything that I have ever heard, or ever expect to hear. There was never a harsh sound; rarely ever a word uttered that you could imagine a better or a more perfect way of saying it. His mind was both logical and imaginative. He stated things tersely, tellingly. He did not seem to try to be ornate or to polish his sentences, and yet every thought was appropriately expressed. In pathos I have heard nothing comparable to him. When preaching there were often thoughts and suggestions enough in one sermon for many. He took some one great thought, deduced in subject form from the text, and developed that. The theme, after he had been preaching for about half an hour, seemed to possess the man—body, mind and soul. Nearly all the great men that I have heard have shown some signs of the effort they were making. They showed plainly that they were at their best and doing their best. Sometimes there was a struggling after the great. He seemed all the time to be keeping back a reserved force. He impressed you that, if that force should break away from him, you could not possibly endure the tornado of eloquence and pathos. To him the human soul was like a well-tuned musical instrument, and every key readily responded in sweetest accord to his matchless touch.

Dr. Steel said he was helpful. He was an inspiration. If he was a genius he was so many-sided that any pen would likely fail to adequately portray him. Still, he did not claim genius. He was not the least conscious of his greatness. I had rather be able to produce a worthy life of Dr. Duncan than to be President of this country or a Bishop in our Church. Who could possibly portray, in fitting words, such a man?

But I do think that a very readable and profitable book could be written on his life and labors. I think, though, with the meagre matter on hand, that a better work could be gotten up by a number of pens than by one. For instance, get Bishop Granbery to write of him as a school boy; Dr. Whitehead and Capt. Richard Irby as a friend; Dr. Lafferty and Walter H. Page, LL. D., as a preacher; Dr. Tillett and Prof. F. C. Woodward, Lit. D., as a teacher; Prof. Thomas R. Price, LL. D., and Prof. James A. Harrison, LL. D., as a co-laborer in college work, etc. Such a work, properly edited, would not be as scrappy as this imperfect outline would indicate, but would be of thrilling interest from the first to the last chapter. I believe every one mentioned would gladly make the contribution. What a book for the Sunday school library and the Epworth League.

OUR FATHER'S HOUSE OF MANY MANSIONS.

Before leaving home and kindred to go to a strange and far-distant country, the wise emigrant tries to get all obtainable information touching the soil, the climate, the geography, the inhabitants, etc., of that land where he proposes to settle. It is perfectly natural for one proposing to make a country a home for himself and loved ones to get the facts that would enable him to locate to the best advantage. The welfare, the happiness, the safety of those near and dear to him are at stake and he cannot afford to be careless and indifferent as to where his lot shall fall.

With feelings akin to those of the emigrant from one country into another, the Lord's disciple, when nearing the end of his earthly pilgrimage, seeks all the light to be had touching his eternal home. Happy for him, the Bible gives light touching that "land that is fairer than day," and in familiar figures causes the "home of the soul" to stand out in bold relief. How the eager soul of the pilgrim whose feet are bringing him down to the chilling waters over which all earth's denizens must go welcomes light from the sacred page and revels in anticipation of the joys that will burst ere long on the vision. In those oft-quoted words (John 14: 2, etc.) of our Lord, uttered in the presence of His disciples a short time before His death, we have important information touching the future state, and of our Father's house of many mansions, where all His faithful ones will find "home, sweet home."

It was the opportune time for Jesus to talk to His disciples about the Father's house, for He would soon leave them, and a sense of loneliness and homesickness would naturally take possession more or less of them, but to be told that a home prepared by Himself, who so well knew what would suit them, awaited them, where He would preside, was well calculated to encourage and inspire them. His words are redolent of tenderness, love, and solicitude as He looks upon them, knowing that soon He must leave them. "Father's house"—the phrase is full of suggestion. It can't be a dream, an airy nothingness, an etherealized nonentity, but a heaven that has a locality, that is real, tangible, secure, and in every way adapted to God's children. When we think of the old home where we were born and reared, every spot, every object, well-nigh, is marshaled into view, even down to the most trivial thing, but more than the flowing brook, the moss-covered well, the skirting forests, and the meadow hard by, the house where the family dwelt, in which the fire cracked and roared, and which was the scene of sport and fun, stands out distinctly and prominently. Our Father's house, and the house that so fills the perspective of the past, may hold little in common, but who will say that the one does not at least suggest the other, with the difference that God's house is far more beautiful, far more capacious, far more enduring, has no need of light from sun or moon?

The Greek word used for house is slightly different from the word used for the material temple, as in John 2: 16. In II. Cor. 5: 1 we have the exact meaning of our Lord there given us metaphorically as in this passage also. The word "missions" is in the twenty-third verse rendered "abode," and "resting places" or "dwellings" give the exact idea of the Greek. There are many of these resting places in our Father's home, so there will be abundant room for all. When Jesus was born at Bethlehem there was no room for Him at the inn. There will be plenty of room in heaven.

As to the preparations Jesus is making for the reception of His children into their home in heaven, we can only let the curtain remain unlifted. We can safely trust Him to do this work for us. He is true and tried. He knows what will suit us best. Thrilling thought, we shall be with Jesus forever! He is to be our blessed Host. We will realize the truth of the beautiful lines of the poet:

"When my life work is ended and I cross the swelling tide,
When the bright and glorious morning I shall see;
I shall know my Redeemer when I reach the other side,
And his smile will be the first to welcome me.
"Oh, the soul thrilling rapture when I view His blessed face
And the lustre of His kindly beaming eye;
How my full heart will praise Him for the mercy, love and grace,
That prepare for me a mansion in the sky."

A BISHOP'S QUIXOTIC DREAM.

Our loyal, level-headed laymen, bearing the financial burdens of the Church, will be very thankful to Dr. W. F. Glenn, of Georgia, for an article on the fourth page of this Advocate. In the last General Conference was a trend toward undue liberty, if not extravagance, in the enlargement in salaries at the expense of our worn-out preachers, their widows and orphans. There are already symptoms of a trend to similar extravagance in the next General Conference by increasing the number of connectional officers. Peter went into the first General Conference of the disciples of the Lord, after His ascension, with a similar trend. Evidently he would have been very much gratified to have seen two of his friends elevated to connectional offices; and it is a wonder that he did not move for something like a double-headed secretaryship for a mission board and an editor additional to the secretary in the league work, and get Justus and Matthias both in. Of course, all this kind of work must be done before the coming of the Holy Spirit in the Pentecostal baptism on the tenth day.

Very early in this conference, Peter set forth a movement to get at least one of his friends into office. Whether loaded dice were known in those days, or whether they used dice or not in the "casting of lots," we know not, but "the lot fell upon Matthias," and no one seems to have ever heard of him from that day to this. Some people think the Lord preferred a man for this place like that inimitable Greek and Hebrew scholar, Saul of Tarsus, but Peter was impatient, and too "practical in his politics" to wait too long on the Lord.

General Grant, while President of the United States, had a pet preacher friend who very much resembled Daniel Webster in figure and face. The General became about as much interested in this friend as Peter was in Justus and Matthias. There being no civil office of sufficient scope, breadth, and dignity open, he created the office of Inspector of Consulates, and sent his Websterian chaplain around the world in a halo of glory. This all seemed very fine to the clerical friends of this new officer, but not so fine to the poor, tax-burdened laymen. Some of the spectators, years later in a New York opera-house, who witnessed the election and ordination of this same preacher to the episcopacy, thought when the question was asked: "Are you persuaded that you are called to this office by the will of the Lord?" that he might have very truthfully added: "And also by the energetic and persistent wills of the family and friends of a famous ex-President of the United States!"

The creation of offices for the support of sinecures is still the bane of our national and State governments. A Congressman says such sinecures are stumbling over each other at Washington, and many can recall such scenes at Jefferson City. The Church should set civil government an ample of patriotic exemption from such demoralizing extravagance. The very hopeful sign is that the Church is awakening to the necessity of using the practical, financial and business experience of laymen in her law-making counsels more than in the past. The laymen are awakening to the necessity of providing a better support for superannuated or worn-out preachers, instead of retaining such preachers during all the afternoon of their lives in the presiding eldership. The laymen say that we do not need half the presiding elders required by the conditions of former days. Many a presiding elder can now talk to the pastors of his district any hour of the day through telephones and meet them all face to face every week in preachers' meetings; and reach his quarterly meeting in sixty minutes at five or ten cents' expense with less discomfort in a whole year than was once encountered in a single day. Even in remote and scattered country districts rural delivery is now enabling the elders to reach all their pastors in a very few hours by postal card or letter.

Since so many pastors are being educated in schools and colleges instead of in the saddle, as in former times, the laymen claim that the frequent presence of the presiding elder is not now so imperative. They claim that the dignity and efficiency of the office can be very much enhanced by reducing the quantity and enhancing the quality. Double the size of the districts and put them in charge of the most vigorous and best qualified preachers to be found, blazing with evangelistic and missionary zeal, and let them hold their own district Conferences.

NO MORE BISHOPS NEEDED.

Bishop McCabe's Pickwickian or Quixotic suggestion of forty additional M. E. Bishops is as amusing as some of his experiences in Libby Prison, and has been taken too solemnly in the South. Laymen think that the same changed conditions in civilization which demand a reduction in presiding elders also applies to the episcopacy. Pullman and floating palaces now enables a Bishop to belt the world with less discomfort than Asbury experienced in riding from Philadelphia to Baltimore. The comparison of the work of our episcopacy with that of the diocesan work of the Episcopal Church is as absurd as Bishop McCabe's suggestion. The Episcopal

1, 2. "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables." This was the decision of the twelve when there began to be some murmuring among the disciples concerning the daily ministration of things temporal. As the number of the disciples multiplied it could hardly be expected that in these newborn babes there would not be manifest some phases of the old nature, some of the works of the flesh, such as wrath, strife, surgings and such like (Gal. v. 20). Even Peter, James and John might remember quite a number of things in their own lives, even after they had been a year or two with Christ, which were of the flesh and not of the spirit; so it is to be hoped that while they determined that they could not take time to see to these seemingly unspiritual affairs they were patient with the murmurers.

3, 4. "We will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." They would not serve tables, but they would pray and search and teach the word. They recognized the importance and the difficulty of attending to the daily ministration, for they saw the necessity of a committee of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom.

5, 6. "They chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip." The other five are not mentioned again after this verse, which is not necessarily anything against them. Philip is mentioned sixteen times and Stephen, who became the first martyr for Christ, is mentioned seven times. If the mind of the majority is a correct guide, then the appointing of this committee was the proper thing, for the suggestion pleased the whole multitude. There was something in those days in the laying on of hands (1 Tim. iv. 14; 11 Tim. i. 6), but it was not confined to the hands of the apostles (Acts ix. 17; xiii. 3). The laying on of hands in our day is not unlike the shaking of hands; sometimes there are life and inspiration and sometimes a chill. Barnabas, the son of consolation, was like Stephen, a man full of the Holy Ghost and of faith (chapter xi, 24). There is no reason why each believer should not be so filled.

7, 8. "And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people." The word of God increased, or, as in xii. 24, "grew and multiplied," and in xix. 20, "grew mightily and prevailed." The number of the disciples multiplied greatly in Jerusalem, and a great company of the priests became believers. It was truly a great and mighty work of the Spirit of God and was not confined to the apostles, for Stephen, willing to serve tables, was greatly used, God working wonders and miracles by him. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth (Rom. i. 16), and as the word is preached the Spirit works, convincing of sin and righteousness and judgment. When a servant of Christ preaches the word of God, he has a right to believe that it will accomplish His pleasure and never return to Him void (Isa. lv. 11). We may learn a lesson of assurance from the devil in this matter, for when he sowed his tares he seems to have had no anxiety about their growth, for he went his way, sure that they would grow (Matt. xiii. 25). Let us have faith in God that He will take care of His own word and that no word from God shall be void of power (Luke i. 37, R. V.).

9, 10. "They were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake." The Lord Jesus had promised a mouth and wisdom which no adversary could gainsay or resist (Luke xxi. 15), and this was a fulfillment of His promise. The wisdom was the wisdom of God and the spirit was the Spirit of God. As with the Lord Jesus the words and works were all the Father's, so in these Spirit filled men the words and works were all the Lord's (John xiv. 10; xvii. 18). We think of the night in Gethsemane when, in reply to their saying that they sought Jesus of Nazareth, He simply said, "I am," and they went backward and fell to the ground. It was the same word that healed the leper, cast out demons, rebuked fevers and all manner of disease, stilled the storm and, away back in the beginning, created all things. What do we know of the power of His word in us or through us, or of the experience of Paul in these words: "Striving according to His working which worketh in me mightily?" (Col. i. 29.)

11, 12. "They caught him and brought him to the council." The adversary can stand ten thousand ordinary believers of the Laodicean stamp and be not a whit afraid of them, but let a Peter or a Stephen, filled with the Spirit, stand boldly for Christ and the resurrection, and the devil will do his best to stop them. The power of God in Stephen was more than Satan could put up with, and so he stirs up the rulers and the people to lie about him and to arrest him.

13, 14. "And set up false witnesses." So Jezebel did to Naboth, and so these same rulers did to our Lord Jesus. It was written concerning Him, "False witnesses did rise up; they laid to My charge things that I knew not." "They that hate Me without a cause are more than the hairs of Mine head; they that would destroy Me, being Mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty" (Ps. xxxv. 11; lxi. 4). We must, if we follow Him fully, expect the same treatment He received, for "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (11 Tim. iii. 12), and He Himself said, "If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you" (John xv. 20).

15. "And all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." He was no doubt thinking of the Lord Jesus and all that Christ had endured for him. By faith he saw Christ and not these wicked witnesses or rulers, and the glory of Christ was seen upon him. We are apt to think it very hard when people wrongfully accuse us and lay to our charge things we know not, but we should consider it as blessed fellowship with Christ, remembering His own words, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for My sake; rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven" (Matt. v. 11, 12). Some associate this angel-like appearance of Stephen with the time of his martyrdom, but it was before he gave his address to the council. May we ever so see Jesus that we shall reflect His glory.

EPWORTH LEAGUE

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 23, "Obedience"—Text, I Sam. xv. 22, 23; 1 Kings iii. 14; Rev. xxii. 14.

"To obey is better than sacrifice."

"Blessed are they that do His commandments."

This does not always appear the easiest or most attractive way. Indeed, it is often much easier to pay a heavy forfeit or incur severe penalty than to do the straightforward, plain and simple duty. It takes more manhood to obey than to give a costly sacrifice. Many a person will give $10 in a cause rather than speak a word or be bothered to think of the subject. Sacrifice is worship by proxy. Obedience is personal service. Sacrifice kills something else. Obedience kills one's own self will and pride. The one presents things, while the other presents self to God.

To obey is not to go through outward motions merely. It is from depths of the heart to recognize another's dues and one's own duty to pay those dues, and more than such assent of mind is the consent of feeling that it is good to do it, and we prefer such course to any other one possible. The glad response of heart is the most valuable part of an obedience. Lack of understanding, even misunderstanding, can be overlooked, and mistakes of mind also, but where the intention is not right, where love is lacking and will is rebellious and service is performed grudgingly, it is impossible to pass it by. There must be correction until there is complete change of attitude.

"Right to the tree of life."

Great stress has been put in times past on the personal element of the judge in the adjustment of rewards and penalties under the divine law until it is to be feared not a few have conceived of it as rather matter of caprice or favoritism than of justice mercifully and lovingly administered. It is well sometimes to look at the whole subject on its natural side as the orderly working of forces which must inevitably result in certain ends. We are made in a certain way and are surrounded by a world in which the interworking of powers is fixed to move according to definite laws. Violation of these laws brings disaster, obedience to them brings prosperity. No special pleading will alter results. No favoritism need be expected. No caprice or prejudice can be discovered. The merit system prevails here. Obedience to spiritual law gives right to the tree of life—that is, it opens the path, it is the means by which the eternal life is appropriated. It is the method by which one enters through the gates into the city. God loves the world with infinite compassion, but not with lawless disregard of moral distinctions. He gives His only begotten Son that men may be saved. But the provision of salvation is restricted to those who will accept Him. Those who perish are the "whosoever believeth on Him." They have eternal life because spiritual processes in them produce that result as naturally as vital processes in the body produce physical life and health.

We must keep God's directions for soul life and strength if we will have eternal blessedness. Neglect is as fatal as rebellion. No one becomes good by mere wishing. Jesus learned obedience—learned it through the things which He suffered. God leads us the same road.

Having Peace.

We cannot have peace if we are living our own life, striving for our own will, seeking to walk in our own way. But if in very truth we have faith in God, if we believe that He is companioning us, redeeming us, that all material things are simply the instruments preparing us for another world, that our failures here are the secret and the starting point of a grander success hereafter, if we are willing to leave the past in His hands because we cannot alter it and the future because we cannot control it and live simply in the present moment, we may walk as He walked in the midst of the tempest and go over the sea, and the sea shall not engulf us and the tempest shall not destroy us.—Lyman Abbott.

Loving With the Mind.

It seems very easy for many people to forget that we are commanded to love God not only with all the heart, but with all the mind. They imagine that they will have become altogether Christlike if their heart—that is, their intention—is pure, if their will to do right is good, if their affections are supremely centered on God. It is a mistake which has wrought great harm, brought disrepute on an important doctrine, led people to make professions which their behavior has belied and produced discouragement, failure and loss.—Zion's Herald.

The Answers to Our Prayers.

How deeply rooted must unbelief be in our hearts when we are surprised to find our prayers answered, instead of feeling sure they will be so, if they are only offered up in faith and are in accord with the will of God!—Lutheran Observer.

Contentment.

We shall be made truly wise if we be made content; content, too, not only with what we can understand, but content with what we do not understand—the habit of minds which theologians call, and rightly, faith in God.—Charles Kingsley.

Thy Will Be Done.

Thy will that works from clod to star,
That stretches the bright rainbow bar,
That rules the land, restrains the sea,
That perfect will be done in me.
So shall I rest from pain and care,
Be safe and peaceful everywhere.
—Christian Endeavor World.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

We shall not really live until we live again.—Rev. Dr. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Will.

Nothing can take the place of a resolute will.—Rev. Dr. John T. M. Johnston, Baptist, St. Louis.

Evolution.

Life comes out of death; progress comes out of suffering.—Rev. R. F. Coyle, Presbyterian, Denver.

The Noblest Victory.

To be willing to suffer defeat rather than to win unworthy victory is itself the noblest victory.—Rev. Dr. J. L. Jackson, Baptist, Chicago.

Best For This World.

Religion is the best philosophy and the best morals and the best instrument for time merely.—Rev. Dr. J. C. Armstrong, Baptist, St. Louis.

How to Retain Favor.

Nations as well as individuals retain the favor of the skies only as they do the will of the infinite.—Rev. Dr. Polemus H. Swift, Methodist, Chicago.

Do Your Part.

If we make the church of Christ manifestly worth loving, the people will not fail to love her.—Rev. Dr. S. B. Warner, Methodist, St. Louis.

Honor in All Stations.

A bootblack who does his duty is as honorable as the governor of the state and, being honorable, can afford to rejoice.—Rev. J. C. Solomon, Baptist, Atlanta.

The Only Saving Power.

Righteousness is the only thing which can save the nation, the state, the church or the individual from failure.—Professor John W. Wetzel, Congregationalist, Yale University.

Earnest Citizenship.

God give us a citizenship that shall be trumpet, tongued for the right until the powers that be are supplanted by the powers that ought to be.—Rev. C. J. Hall, People's Tabernacle, Denver.

Unchangeable Religion.

The thought of no century is final, and each century brings different ideas and interpretations, but religion as an active principle is always the same.—Rev. Charles W. Byrd, Methodist, Atlanta.

The Fountain Head of Wisdom.

Man, with all his learning, has not got beyond the Bible. All our ideas of progress, with all the forward looking spirit of modern Christendom, are due to the Bible.—Rev. H. P. Aston, Baptist, Philadelphia.

Holy Lives.

It may not be ours to utter convincing arguments, but it may be ours to live holy lives. It may not be ours to be subtle and learned and logical, but it may be ours to be noble and sweet and pure.—Dean Farrar, Anglican Church, Canterbury, England.

Difficulties.

Let us all learn to thank God for difficulties. They are a part of our discipline. Canaan lies on the other side of Red seas and the Jordan. We need not cross either of them till we come to them.—Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

Why We Are Here.

You are not put into life for a mission or to do great things. You and I are put into life to be made men and women, to do the things that God puts into our hands to do, be they great or be they little.—Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

The Only Reality.

We argue and dispute about the gospel, but it remains airy and unreal until we come face to face with genuine Christian love in action, bearing and hoping and enduring all things.—Rev. Thomas H. Darlow, Literary Superintendent Baptist and Foreign Bible Society.

Our Noblest Treasure.

Man lives not by bread alone, but by love and hope and faith, and because the so called "sacred Scriptures" of the world more or less perfectly voice these higher aspects of human nature, they constitute our noblest treasure.—Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, Before the Chicago Liberal Society.

Forget Sin.

Forget your own sins. Forget the sins of your neighbors. Our memory of them is sometimes more vivid than the memory of our own. Do not allow such remembered transgressions to spoil the peace and purity of your soul.—Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, Presbyterian, President Princeton University.

Successful, but Had Groveled.

A few years ago a man of many millions called me to his bedside when he was dying. In his last hours he spoke out frankly. "Doctor," he said, "I've failed, for I've groveled." Yet the world called him successful. His phrase, "I've groveled," has stuck to me as expressing much.—Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York.

Feed Your Children's Souls.

In so called Christian homes children are neglected as to their spiritual natures. As little animals they are well cared for, but that is all. Parents think they must clothe and feed them and decide questions of amusement and companions and politics, but the subject of religion, the most important of all, they must decide for themselves.—Bishop James M. Thoburn, Methodist.

How to Find True Happiness.

Man possesses fame, but this does not satisfy the cravings of his soul; he seeks sensual pleasure, but with this come repulsion and a reaction, and then, still desiring, he accumulates money, but none of these brings true happiness, for all of them are only of the external of man and not of man himself. It is only by a constant seeking for something noble and better than we can ever possess in this life, by ever seeking a fuller, truer and wider life, that we can expect to become men.—Rev. Nathaniel Mooney, Catholic, Chicago.

Christian faith is a grand cathedral, with divinely pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory, nor can possibly imagine any. Standing within, every ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakable splendors.—Hawthorne.

DR WILMOT B. LANE.

guished graduates. He took full work in the honor department of philosophy, gave evidence of special aptitude for the course and maintained the first place in the annual competitive Class Lists. He has since given three years to post-graduate study. (Three years more since this letter was written.) He has excellent habits of application, perseverance and thoroughness, and his character is all that could be desired."

Victoria University says: "We have had few men who could rank with him in these subjects. He is at the same time an earnest Christian man, wielding an influence for good, and is endowed with a disposition and manner which makes him an agreeable associate in work."

Ontario College of Pedagogy says: "He is one of the very best men that have passed through the school. He is a clear thinker, a good teacher, and withal a manly man."

The University of Wisconsin says: "He has marked ability, has had very thorough training in the whole field of philosophy, and is capable of teaching any branch of it. In his teaching work here he has been eminently successful. His students are remarkably enthusiastic. You will make no mistake in electing him."

Cornell University says: "Dr. Lane is a man of unusual ability and broad scholarship. In philosophy especially is his knowledge of wide range and minute exactness, his thought lucid, his expression clear. His work is done with diligence, enthusiasm and thoroughness. Personally, he is a perfect gentleman. His opinions are sane and clear-cut; his convictions, though strong, are never given with dogmatism or conceit. He is a good speaker, and shows a complete grasp of his topic when lecturing."

Mount Union College says: "In all the particulars about which you make inquiry, Dr. Lane is a man of extraordinary excellence. The quality, breadth and depth of his scholarship, and his superior teaching ability, would make him an honor to the faculty of any University in the land. We shall release him with the greatest reluctance. You can make no mistake in electing him."

DOCTOR LYMAN ABBOTT.

(Hamilton Wright Mabie in the World's Work.

Dr. Abbott's extraordinary working power is significant of a quality of his nature which impresses itself on all who come in contact with him, a singular poise and serenity of spirit. He saves force by avoidance of nervous and emotional waste, and is liable to put his entire strength into his work. This salvage is effected not through coldness of temperament or lack of active sympathy, but through fundamental repose and harmony. A very sensitive man, of slight physique, with small muscular strength and intense mental activity, Dr. Abbott would perish by sheer exhaustion of vitality if he were not almost perfectly adjusted to his life and his task. Those who have seen a great experience strike him have realized how fragile his body would be without the support of his spirit. When such an experience comes he seems to withdraw into some secret place where there is abundance of strength.

A man bred in purely conventional ideas of religion once said of him, by way of dissent and criticism: "Why, Dr. Abbott believes that God is as much with him as He was with Abraham." This is precisely the faith in which Dr. Abbott lives from day to day; and this faith is the secret of his repose. It is both a refuge and an inspiration, the explanation of his serenity, and also of his courage, his ardor, his power of leadership.

The harmony which he has established between himself and his tools, his work and his world, he owes in part to his ancestry. He belongs to the class of men, who, like Emerson and Phillips Brooks, build on ancestral moral foundations. For such men the questions or personal character seem to have been settled in advance, and they are left free to put their full force into work. Born with a harmonious moral nature, men of this supreme good fortune need waste no time on themselves.

Dr. Abbott works without the slightest friction; although one of the most vital and spontaneous men of his time, his mind has the exactness and rapidity of an exquisitely adjusted machine. He fastens by instinct on the central and formative fact or facts in the most confused situation or question, puts all subordinate matters aside, reasons with singular directness, and states both the process and the results of his thought with lucidity and simplicity. So easily does he work that when he has thought out his problem or reached his conclusion he regards the matter as finished; the task of writing out what he has to say is to him only a detail involving time but no labor.

The February issue of the American Illustrated Methodist Magazine is bright and varied. The opening article takes up art, in the person of Sir John Everett Millais, and gives pictures of his exquisite studies, "Cherry Ripe," "Caller Herrin," and "Effie Deans."

Dr. T. N. Ivey deals with the beginnings of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in "The Celebrated Conference at Green Hill's," the first Annual Conference held in this country.

The Hymn Writers Series, in its eighteenth chapter, tells the story of the gifted Cloverbrook sisters, Alice and Phoebe Cary, whose sweet lyrics are not likely to be forgotten. Fresh pictures, direct from the old family home, illustrate the article.

Miss M. E. Braddon's powerful recent story, "The Infidel," which takes up the stirring times of the Methodist revival of the eighteenth century, forms the subject of an article, illustrated by pictures of the writer's beautiful home in the New Forest.

Other articles are "Toronto as a Convention City," "Darkness and Song," and "Grasshoppers and Crickets." Poetry is represented by a study of "Job," entitled, "Thy Will Be Done," from the pen of Stanley Waterloo; "The Crocus," by C. H. Williamson, and "Comfort by the Way," by J. M. Dixon, with music by W. H. Pommer.

Published monthly by the Methodist Magazine Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo. One dollar a year.

THE LOVE STORY OF GEORGE ELIOT.

The world has always judged pretty harshly the union of George Eliot and George Henry Lewes; not for itself, but for its influence upon others. The early life of George Eliot and the nature of her intimacy with Mr. Lewes and the strong personality of each are feelingly discussed in the March Delineator by Clara E. Laughlin in her series on Authors' Loves. Certainly George Eliot's four and twenty years of life with Lewes were idyllic, full of earnest purpose and unremitting labor and crowned with a perfection of mutual understanding and helpfulness. Mr. Lewes first encouraged her to write fiction and her success proved his wisdom; her novels bear ample testimony to this. The article is accompanied by some rare illustrations.

Religious News.

Dr. Joseph F. Berry, editor of the Epworth Herald, who has been in Southern California for some weeks recuperating his health, is making encouraging progress. He is living at Ocean Park, and is gaining daily. He expects to reach Chicago about the middle of March and resume his work.

The revival meeting that has been in progress at Main Street Methodist church since the 26th of January closed last night, and Rev. George R. Stuart, the evangelist, who has been conducting the services, left this morning for his home, in Tennessee.

As a result of the revival hundreds were converted, and a large number of "backsliders" reclaimed.

Mr. Stuart won for himself a score of friends during his short stay in Danville.

A voluntary contribution of nearly $1,000 was presented to him by the people of the city.—Dispatch.

At Monumental M. E. church, beginning last night, the Monumental Men's League will hold a series of services preparatory to revival meetings which will begin February 16th. The topic last night was "What is It to be Converted?" to which Captain James H. Toomer spoke. The topic to be spoken to during the meetings will be: To-night, "The Part of Prayer in Revivals," by Mr. R. G. Lowe; Wednesday night, "Am I Ready for Revival?" by Rev. E. H. Rawlings; Thursday night, "Soul Winning, or How to Work with Individuals," by Mr. J. A. Deans; Friday night, "Tempted and Tried," by Mr. A. C. Zepp.

The services on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday evenings are for men only. On Wednesday evening the Men's League will unite with the regular church service, and on Friday evening with the Epworth League. Services begin at 8 o'clock. The public is cordially invited to attend.—Landmark.

A large congregation, which filled Wright Memorial church to its capacity, assembled last night to hear the third of the series of sermons on home life, "Pulling Together," by the pastor, Rev. George McFaden.

In the midst of his sermon last night the Rev. Mr. McFaden was taken suddenly ill, and for a few minutes discontinued his discourse. He was suffering from an attack of indigestion. The attack lasted but a short time. The reverend gentleman soon recovered sufficiently to finish his discourse, which done, he immediately left the pulpit. The Rev. C. W. Cain, who happened to be present, dismissed the congregation. Mr. McFaden is out today, much to the pleasure of his congregation and citizens generally, seemingly in his usual good health.

Next Sunday night the reverend gentleman will deliver the fourth, on "Three House Burners."—Star.

The Ministerial Union of Richmond, Manchester and vicinity held a regular meeting yesterday morning in the parlors of the Young Men's Christian Association. The attendance was quite large and considerable interesting business was transacted.

The special order for the day was a paper by the Rev. M. Ashby Jones on "How to Reach the Young Men of the City." Mr. Jones had to be away from town during the week, however, and could not find time to prepare the paper. Dr. W. H. Whitsitt, whom he designated in his stead, did not appear, and the paper had to be gone without. In its place there was a symposium on the subject assigned to Mr. Jones.

Among the speakers were Dr. R. P. Kerr, Mr. S. K. McKee, Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, Dr. Jere Witherspoon, Rev. P. A. Cave, Dr. C. S. Gardner, Rev. James E. Cook, and others. The consensus of opinion was that the young men could be reached if the churches would go after them, would make the young men feel that they are welcome, and would provide interesting and attractive services for them. Dr. Witherspoon declared that he was greatly interested in this work, and that he had called a meeting of his young men for Wednesday night, when a Good-Fellowship League will be formed.

Mr. B. F. Johnson appeared before the union and suggested that the various denominations unite in purchasing a tent, inviting some well-known speakers here, and for several months conducting a campaign to reach the young men. He suggested a band and other attractions. After some considerable discussion the matter was referred to a committee consisting of Dr. C. S. Gardner, Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, Rev. C. P. Williamson, Rev. C. A. Marks, and Rev. T. H. Semmes. Mr. Johnson excited considerable amusement by stating his belief that the preachers frequently drove the young men away from the churches by praying too long. One of the ministers asked Mr. Johnson if he had been delegated by the laymen to appear before the preachers and tell them that.

Just before the adjournment of the union the Rev. C. H. Crawford, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, made a statement in reference to his work. He said that the League was planning a campaign which will soon be opened up in Richmond. On the first, second, and third Sundays of March well-known speakers from different places will speak in Richmond in the interest of the League work.

The Rev. J. Spencer Smith, formerly of Elizabeth City, N. C., now of this city, and Dr. Philip Du Val were elected members of the union.—Times.

The activities of the Methodist Institute for Christian Work are steadily branching out. In a short while now the halt, the lame, and the blind will be coming to the Institute at Nineteenth and Main streets.

Rev. George H. Wiley, the superintendent, is making arrangements for a free dispensary at the Institute. His plan is to have a physician of the city to spend an hour each day there, and all who need treatment and are unable to pay for it may come and get it. Mr. Wiley hopes to get the physicians to serve by terms, so it will not be hard on any of them.

His plans seem practicable, and all the physicians he has spoken to about the scheme have fallen in readily with it. But not only will he have the general practitioners there; he is endeavoring to have specialists for the eye, ear, and throat there at regular intervals, say one day a week, to attend those who are afflicted out of the ordinary. It is not known, perhaps, that there are many persons, men, women, and children, who are in pain and at great inconvenience, when, if treated by a skilled specialist once or twice, would soon be well. They are deaf, or partially blind, just for the lack of some brief treatment at the hands of a person who knows.

There are in the section of the city where the Institute is doing fine work a large number of persons who have no organic trouble, but who are sick because of neglect, and because of their unwholesome environments. The privilege for these to see a physician and get proper medicine from him would be a saving of life to them, to say nothing of pain.

Rev. Mr. Wiley is asking for food and clothing for his spiritual constituency just now. On yesterday he gave several interesting instances of help received just in time. On Thursday he received from a Cary street dry goods house a donation of warm vests for children. At the night school last night the teachers saw two girls shivering at the stove, without wraps on. She ran her finger up the sleeve of the little girls' arms and found that they were without underwear. A pair of these vests went to each girl. A Broad street dry goods merchant sent a dozen wraps and cloaks to the mission. Ten of them have been placed on ten as needy and worthy cases as the committee of painstaking ladies could find. One of the unalterable rules of Mr. Wiley's work is, "No one is to be helped without the best possible investigation." This rule is more stringently applied this year than before, experience having shown that many beg only to dissipate or to escape work. Mr. Wiley is very much in need of shoes for women and children, and will gladly receive any odds and ends, no matter how bright the color, or how sharp the toe. Style does not count with his folks.—Times.

At the regular meeting of Methodist preachers of this city held yesterday in the pastors' study of Epworth church, a statement in regard to the work being done in this city by the Union Mission was made by the superintendent, and the enlargement of the mission work in Norfolk was discussed. The president, the Rev. W. R. Proctor, called the session to order, and prayer was offered by the Rev. D. B. Austin, of Haygood Memorial church.

In reference to the project of establishing a new mission, as requested by the Board of Missions of the Virginia Conference, it was stated that the church buildings in the three cities would not seat half of the population. People are flocking here all the time from the country districts, and it was contended that an effort should be made to find out who they were and get them into the church.

The pastors of the churches have all the work they can do, and the laymen will be organized to look after this work.

The Rev. G. H. McFaden reported that he has recently organized a missionary Sunday school at the end of Sixth street, in Portsmouth, and now has forty children in attendance regularly. None of these had ever before been to Sunday school. The pastor addresses them one night every week, and the interest shown in the work is encouraging.

The Rev. R. H. Bennett called the attention of those present to the union revival that will be begun in this city next Sunday. Many interesting statements were made in connection with the event, showing that the pastors are anxious for the work to begin.

REPORT OF PASTORS.

After the regular business the following reports were made by the pastors present:

The Rev. E. T. Dadmun, of Centenary, reported the usual interesting services.

The Rev. R. H. Bennett had a pleasant day. He taught a Sunday school class at Epworth, delivered an address before the Sunday School Missionary Society of Wright Memorial church in the afternoon, and preached to a fine congregation at night at Epworth.

The Rev. J. B. Merritt, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel, had a good day. A very large audience greeted him at night, and the exercises were very interesting.

The Rev. George Wesley Jones attended the new Sunday school at Park Place, and preached at Trinity church in the morning and conducted the revival services at LeKies Memorial at night. There was one conversion.

The Rev. D. B. Austin preached at Haygood Memorial church in the morning and at Lynnhaven in the afternoon. The services were of an interesting character. The congregations have improved lately.

The Rev. W. R. Crowder had a fairly good day at Denby's. He preached in the morning and at night. There were three additions to the Sunday school. One was received into the church by certificate.

The Rev. Ernest Stevens said his congregations at Owens' Memorial were larger than for several Sundays past.

The Rev. C. L. Bane had a very good day at Cumberland Street. The Epworth League service was the best since his pastorate commenced there. A Bible Teachers' Study Circle of twenty-five members was organized. He preached to good congregations. One was received by certificate.

The Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith reported a good Sunday school at Epworth. He preached in the morning on home missions, and had a generous response to the request for help. He also stated that the Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at the evening service the third in his series of sermons, and the impression made was exceedingly fine. In answer to a question as to the outcome of the mission movement on Virginia street, he said that good work is being done. Better work would be done if they had better facilities, and if it were better supported.

The Rev. D. T. Merritt said that

Talmage's Sermon.

WASHINGTON. —In this discourse Dr. Talmage calls all people to gladness and opens all the doors of expectancy; texts, Genesis vi. 18, "Come;" Revelation xxii. 17, "Come."

Imperial, tender and all persuasive is the word "come." Six hundred and seventy-eight times is it found in the Scriptures. It stands at the front gate of the Bible, as in my first text, inviting antediluvians into Noah's ark, and it stands at the other gate of the Bible, as in my second text, inviting the post-diluvians of all later ages into the ark of a Saviour's mercy. "Come" is only a word of four letters, but it is the queen of words, and nearly the entire nation of English vocabulary bows to its scepter. It is an ocean into which empties ten thousand rivers of meaning. Other words drive, but this beckons. All moods of feeling hush that word "come." Sometimes it weeps and sometimes it laughs. Sometimes it prays, sometimes it tempts, and sometimes it destroys. It sounds from the door of the church and from the seraglios of sin, from the gates of heaven and the gates of hell. It is confluent and accrescent of all power. It is the heiress of most of the past and the almoner of most of the future. "Come!" You may pronounce it so that all the heavens will be heard in its cadences or pronounce it so that all the woes of time and eternity shall reverberate in its one syllable. It is on the lip of saint and profligate. It is the mightiest of all solicitants either for good or bad.

Today I weigh anchor and haul in the planks and set sail on that great word, although I am sure I will not be able to reach the farther shore. I will let down the fathoming line into this sea and try to measure its depths, and, though I tie together all the cables and cordage I have on board, I will not be able to touch bottom. All the power of the Christian religion is in that word "come." The dictatorial and commendatory in religion are of no avail. The imperative mood is not the appropriate mood when we would have people savingly impressed. They may be coaxed, but they cannot be driven. Our hearts are like our homes—at a friendly knock the door will be opened, but an attempt to force open our door would land the assailant in prison. Our theological seminaries, which keep young men three years in their curriculum before launching them into the ministry, will do well if in so short a time they can teach the candidates for the holy office how to say with right emphasis and intonation and power that one word "come." That man who has such efficiency in Christian work and that woman who has such power to persuade people to quit the wrong and begin the right went through a series of losses, bereavements, persecutions and the trials of twenty or thirty years before they could make it a triumph of grace every time they uttered the word "come."

The Persuasive Word.

You must remember that in many cases our "come" has a mightier "come" to conquer before it has any effect at all. Just give me the accurate census, the statistics of how many are down in fraud, in drunkenness, in gambling, in impurity or in vice of any sort, and I will give you the accurate census or statistics of how many have been slain by the word "come." "Come and click wineglasses with me at this ivory bar." "Come and see what we can win at this gaming table." "Come, enter with me this doubtful speculation." "Come with me and read those infidel tracts on Christianity." "Come with me to a place of bad amusement." "Come with me in a gay boat through the underground life of the city." If in this city there are twenty thousand who are down in moral character, then twenty thousand fell under the power of the word "come." I was reading of a wife whose husband had been overthrown by strong drink, and she went to the saloon where he was ruined, and she said, "Give me back my husband." And the bartender, pointing to a maudlin and battered man drowsing in the corner of the barroom, said: "There he is. Jim, wake up. Here's your wife come for you." And the woman said: "Do you call that my husband? What have you been doing with him? Is that the manly brow—is that the clear eye, is that the noble heart, that I married? What vile drug have you given him that has turned him into a fiend? Take your tiger claws off of him. Uncoil those serpent folds of evil habit that are crushing him. Give me back my husband, the one with whom I stood at the altar ten years ago. Give him back to me." Victim was he, as millions of others have been, of the word "come."

Now, we want all the world over to harness this word for good as others have harnessed it for evil, and it will draw the five continents and the seas between them—yea, it will draw the whole earth back to the God from whom it has wandered. It is that wooing and persuasive word that will lead men to give up their sins. Was skepticism ever brought into love of the truth by an ebullition of hot words against infidelity? Was ever the blasphemer stopped in his oaths by denunciation of blasphemy? Was ever a drunkard weaned from his cups by the temperance lecturer's mimicry of staggering step and hiccough? No. It was, "Come with me to church today and hear our singing." "Come and let me introduce you to a Christian man whom you will be sure to admire." "Come with me into associations that are cheerful and good and inspiring." "Come with me into joy such as you never before experienced."

Unhonored Heroes.

With that word which has done so much for others I approach you today. Are you all right with God? "No," you say, "I think not. I am sometimes alarmed when I think of him. I fear I will not be ready to meet him in the last day. My heart is not right with God." Come, then, and have it made right. Through the Christ who died to save you, come! What is the use in waiting? The longer you wait the farther off you are and the deeper you are down. Strike out for heaven! You remember that a few years ago a steamer called the Princess Alice, with a crowd of excursionists aboard, sank in the Thames, and there was an awful sacrifice of life. A boatman from the shore put out for the rescue, and he had a big boat, and he got it so full it would not hold another person, and as he laid hold of the oars to pull for the shore, leaving hundreds helpless and drowning, he cried out, "Oh, that I had a bigger boat!" Thank God I am not thus limited and that I can promise room for all in this gospel boat. Get in, get in! And yet there is room. Room in the heart of a pardoning God. Room in heaven.

I also apply the word of my text to those who would like practical comfort. If any ever escape the struggle of life, I have not found them. They are not certainly among the prosperous classes. In most cases it was a struggle all the way up till they reached the prosperity, and since they have reached these heights there have been perplexities, anxieties and crises which were almost enough to shatter the nerves and turn the brain. It would be hard to tell which have the biggest fight in this world, the prosperities or the adversities, the conspicuities or the obscurities. Just as soon as you have enough success to attract the attention of others the envies and jealousies are let loose from their kennel. The greatest crime that you can commit in the estimation of others is to get on better than they do. They think your addition is their subtraction. Five hundred persons start for a certain goal of success. One reaches it, and the other four hundred and ninety-nine are mad. It would take volumes to hold the story of the wrongs, outrages and defamations that have come upon you as a result of your success. The warm sun of prosperity brings into life a swamp full of annoying insects. On the other hand, the unfortunate classes have their struggles for maintenance. To achieve a livelihood by one who had nothing to start with and after awhile for a family as well and carry this on until children are reared and educated and fairly started in the world and to do this amid all the rivalries of business and the uncertainty of crops and the fickleness of tariff legislation, with an occasional labor strike and here and there a financial panic thrown in, is a mighty thing to do, and there are hundreds and thousands of such heroes and heroines who live unsung and die unhonored.

What We Most Need.

What we all need, whether up or down in life or half way between, is the infinite solace of the Christian religion. And so we employ the word "come." It will take all eternity to find out the number of business men who have been strengthened by the promises of God and the people who have been fed by the ravens when other resources gave out and the men and women who, going into this battle armed only with needle or saw or ax or yardstick or pen or type or shovel or shoe-last, have gained a victory that made the heavens resound. With all the resources of God promised for every exigency no one need be left in the lurch.

I like the faith displayed years ago in Drury lane, London, in an humble home where every particle of food had given out and a kindly soul entered with tea and other table supplies and found a kettle on the fire ready for the tea. The benevolent lady said, "How is it that you have the kettle ready for the tea when you had no tea in the house?" And the daughter in the home said: "Mother would have me put the kettle on the fire, and when I said, 'What is the use of doing so when we have nothing in the house?' she said: 'My child, God will provide. Thirty years he has already provided for me through all pain and helplessness, and he will not leave me to starve at last. He will send us help though we do not yet see how.' We have been waiting all day for something to come, but until we saw you we knew not how it was to come." Such things the world may call coincidences, but I call them Almighty deliverances, and, though you do not hear of them, they are occurring every hour of every day and in all parts of Christendom.

But the word "come" applied to those who need solace will amount to nothing unless it be uttered by some one who has experienced that solace. That unreads the responsibility of giving this gospel can among a great many. Those who have lost property and been consoled by religion in that trial are the ones to invite those who have failed in business. Those who have lost their health and been consoled by religion are the ones to invite those who are in poor health. Those who have had bereavements and been consoled in those bereavements are the ones to sympathize with those who have lost father or mother or companion or child or friend. What multitudes of us are alive today and in good health and buoyant in this journey of life who would have been broken down or dead long ago but for the sustaining and cheering help of our holy religion! So we say, "Come!" The well is not dry. The buckets are not empty. The supply is not exhausted. There is just as much mercy and condolence and soothing power in God as before the first grave was dug, or the first tear started, or the first heart broken, or the first accident happened, or the first fortune vanished. Those of us who have felt the consolatory power of religion have a right to speak out of our own experiences and say, "Come!"

The Star of Faith.

What dismal work of condolence the world makes when it attempts to condole! The plaster they spread does not stick. The broken bones under their bandage do not knit. A farmer was lost in a snowstorm on a prairie of the far west. Night coming on and after he was almost frantic from not knowing which way to go, his sleigh struck the rut of another sleigh, and he said, "I will follow this rut, and it will take me out to safety." He hastened on until he heard the bells of the preceding horses; but, coming up, he found that that man was also lost, and, as is the tendency of those who are thus confused in the forest or on the moors, they were both moving in a circle, and the runner of the one lost sleigh was following the runner of the other lost sleigh round and round. At last it occurred to them to look at the north star, which was peering through the night, and by the direction of that star they got home again. Those who follow the advice of this world in time of perplexity are in a fearful round, for it is one bewildered soul following another bewildered soul, and only those who have in such time got their eye on the morning star of our Christian faith can find their way out or be strong enough to lead others with an all persuasive invitation.

"But," says some one, "you Christian people keep telling us to 'come,' yet you do not tell us how to come." That charge shall not be true on this occasion. Come believing! Come repenting! Come praying! After all that God has been doing for six thousand years, sometimes through patriarchs and sometimes through prophets and at last through the culmination of all the tragedies on Golgotha, can any one think that God will not welcome your coming? Will a father at vast outlay construct a mansion for his son and lay out parks white with statues and green with foliage and all a-sparkle with fountains and then not allow his son to live in the house or walk in the parks? Has God built this house of gospel mercy and will he then refuse entrance to his children? Will a government at great expense build life saving stations all along the coast and boats that can hover unhurt like a petrel over the wildest surge and then, when the lifeboat has reached the wreck of a ship in the offing, not allow the drowning to seize the life line or take the boat for the shore in safety? Shall God provide at the cost of his only Son's assassination escape for a sinking world and then turn a deaf ear

LIQUOR TRADE STATISTICS.

An Array of Figures That Should Prove Productive of Thought.

Analyzing data relating to the liquor business, The Corn Belt says:

"There are 199,729 persons holding licenses granted by the states of the United States to sell spirituous liquors, an increase from 195,964 on Jan. 1, 1899. In addition to these there are 12,327 persons licensed to sell malt liquors only, an increase of 244 from the previous year, making a total of 12,156 retail liquor dealers in the United States, 4,121 more than in 1898. There are 4,496 persons licensed as wholesale dealers, 1,959 brewers and 1,907 rectifiers, making a total of 220,518 licenses granted for the manufacture and sale of liquor.

"It is fair to estimate that at least three persons are employed under every license. This is undoubtedly a small average, because some of the brewers and distillers employ several thousand men, but even at that rate there are less than 661,554 persons engaged in the manufacture and sale of liquor in the United States. Estimating the population of the country at 75,000,000, this would make an average of one liquor seller to every 114 of the population.

"During the last year 25,202,901 bushels of grain and 2,198,513 gallons of molasses were used for the manufacture of liquor in this country, which produced 107,618,120 gallons of spirits and 1,657,808 gallons of rum, making a total of 109,275,928 gallons."

Leaving Self Behind.

Whosoever will may enter the open door, leaving selfish care behind, dropping all burdens save those that bless us as we hear them, the burdens of sympathy and love, and our lives may be lighted with hope, and in our hearts may be peace.—Rev. David Uter, Unitarian, Denver.

Christian Love.

Love and Christianity are convertible terms. When Christ put his foot upon earth, in all the Roman empire there was not one house of mercy, not one hospital. Love is the great, calm, thoughtful purpose to assist others to the best of our ability.—Rev. Dr. Edward G. Andrews, Methodist Bishop of New York.

Preaching in the Market Place.

The only way to bring the gospel to the people is to return to the example of the apostles and "go everywhere, preaching the word." Let it be preached in the market places, in the streets, in the parks, in the street cars, on the street corners and in the open fields.—Rev. Dr. Paul F. Sutphen, Presbyterian, Cleveland, O.

The Uses of Temptation.

Innocence is not desirable if it means the absence of any chance of temptation. I like this clean white sheet of paper, but I would rather see it spotted if the spots came in the efforts of a boy learning to write. I like a pure white stone, but I would rather see it cut and hammered if out of it a sculptor was trying to carve an angel.—Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

God an Arithmetician.

Arithmetic is the science of all sciences. Civilization is built on arithmetic. Man must know arithmetic before progress in art, architecture, music and commerce is possible. God is an arithmetician. In nature he never misses count. In the cornfield, in the snowstorm, in the bird's plumage, in the stars, in chemistry, there is mathematical exactness that proclaims God the Almighty arithmetician.—Rev. John R. White, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

LITTLE NUT PEOPLE.

Old Mistress Chestnut once lived in a bur.
Padded and lined with the softest of fur.
Jack Frost split it wide with his keen silver knife,
And tumbled her out at the risk of her life.
Here is Don Almond, a grandee from Spain;
Some raisins from Malaga came in his train.
He has a twin brother a shade or two leaner;
When both come together we shout "Philopena!"
Little Miss Peanut, from North Carolina—
She's not 'ristocratic, but no nut is finer;
Sometimes she is roasted and burnt to a cinder—
In Georgia they call her Miss Goober or Pindar.
Little Miss Hazlenut, in her best bonnet
Is lovely enough to put in a sonnet,
And young Mr. Filbert has journeyed from Kent,
To ask her to marry him soon after Lent.
This is old Hickory, look at him well;
A general was named for him, so I've heard tell.
Take care how you hit him. He sometimes hits back!
This stolid old chap is a hard nut to crack.

Old Mr. Butternut, just from Brazil,
Is rugged and rough as the side of a hill;
But like many a countenance quite as ill-favored,
He covers a kernel deliciously flavored.
Here is a Southerner, graceful and slim
In flavor no nut is quite equal to him.
Ha, Monsieur Pecan, you know what it means
To be served with black coffee in French New Orleans.
Dear little Chinquapin, modest and neat,
Isn't she cunning, and isn't she sweet?
Her skin is as smooth as a little boy's chin.
And the squirrels all chatter about Miss Chinquapin.
This last is Sir Walnut; he's English you know,
A friend of my Lady and Lord So-and-So.
And now, my dear children, I'm sure I have told
All the queer rhymes that a nutshell can hold.
—Pearl Rivers, in the Presbyterian.

Near the end of the season our boy announced the height of our tall maple tree to be thirty-three feet.
"Why, how do you know?" was the general question.
"Measured it."
"How?"
"Foot-rule and yard-stick."
"You didn't climb that tall tree?" his mother asked, anxiously.
"No'm; I just found the length of the shadow and measured that."

"But the length of the shadow changes."

"Yes'm; but twice a day the shadows are just as long as the things themselves. I've been trying it all summer. I drove a stick into the ground, and when the shadow was just as long as the stick I knew that the shadow of the tree would be just as long as the tree, and that's thirty-three feet."

A few days ago the iron king received this original missive:

"My Dear Carnegie,—I see by the daily papers that you are prosperous. I want to get a hymn book; it costs $1.50. If you will send me this hymn book I will bless you, God will bless you, and it will do a great deal of good.
Yours truly, MARK TWAIN.

"P. S.—Don't send the hymn book; send me $1.50."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

every teacher and officer of the Sunday school at Port Norfolk were in their place. He had large congregations and received five by certificate. There were fine meetings of the Junior and of the Senior Epworth Leagues.

The Rev. C. H. McGhee said there was a good Sunday school at Lambert's Point. He preached twice. A teachers' institute will be held hereafter on Friday evenings.

The Rev. G. H. McFaden taught a Bible class in the Sunday school, and preached twice to fine congregations. One was received by certificate. The Sunday school is growing. Nine new scholars were received on Sunday. There was an interesting meeting of the Sunday School Missionary Society Sunday afternoon.

The Rev. J. N. Latham had a fine Sunday school at Park Place. He preached to good congregations and received two by certificate. A Bible Teachers' Study Circle has been organized, of which Professor Jenkins has been made the leader.

The Rev. G. H. Lambeth preached to a large congregation in the morning at LeKies Memorial, and at Trinity at night. At the former church a fine revival meeting has been in progress during the past week. It has been a meeting of considerable interest and of great spiritual power. It will be continued this week.

The Rev. W. R. Proctor conducted the usual interesting services at McKendree. Two were received by certificate.

The Rev. E. H. Rawlings preached morning and evening at Monumental. He received six by certificate.

The Rev. W. A. Christian had good congregations and interesting services at Memorial, Berkley.

The Rev. W. P. Jordan attended the new Sunday school at Park Place and taught a Bible class. In answer to inquiries, it was stated that the time is ripe to commence a work at Park Place. There are from twenty-five to thirty Methodist families there, and that a new church will probably be built there before next Conference.

After a most interesting and harmonious session, adjournment was had, with the benediction by the Rev. C. L. Bane.—Landmark.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The services at Laurel Street Methodist church Sunday morning and evening were especially interesting. Dr. Johnson, the pastor, occupied the pulpit at both services, and preached two able sermons. His subject at night was from the words: "They told him that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," and at its conclusion there was one conversion. There were large crowds at both services, the one at night having an attendance which taxed the seating capacity of the church.

At the services next Sunday Dr. Johnson will speak to the children and young people.—Times.

OBITUARY.

FORD.—On January 7, 1902, Mrs. Sarah F. Ford, aged 52 years, died at her home in Dinwiddie county, leaving a family bereft of its guiding star.

The writer knew her at an early age as one of rare gifts and laudable ambition. Of a kind and affectionate disposition, she was held in high esteem by her associates, and her devotion to her parents was strong and beautiful. At an early age she gave her heart to Christ and joined Trinity Methodist church, making an earnest, diligent worker in the Sunday school. At the age of 18 she was happily married to John W. Ford. They settled in a comfortable home near the church, and here the tired preacher ever found a place of rest, comfort and liberality. Nine children were born to them, five boys and four girls. Eight are now living, all of whom seem to have inherited in full measure the best qualities of their mother. The second son died when only 18 months old. This crushing blow she bore with Christian fortitude, but the vacancy in her heart and home was never filled; she often spoke of him, and her mind seemed to dwell on meeting that dear one in heaven. Adversity never shook her faith, for, whether basking in the sunshine, or enshrouded in darkness, Christ to her was superior to earthly joy, and her faith was supreme in sorrow and affliction.

In the circle of home and Church she was self-sacrificing, patient, and tender. A devoted wife, mother, and friend, giving unwearied diligence to temporal wants and training all to spiritual things.

For more than a year she was a great sufferer, but bore all with heroic fortitude and patience, often talking to those around her of the comforting faith in her Saviour, and expressing her willingness to go to her heavenly home, being only grieved for having to part with her family. She was blessed with bright consciousness and ability to talk with them to the end, and with composure and precision gave advice about her burial. The closing scene in the death chamber was, as the life, beautiful to the end.

Her funeral service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. N. J. Pruden, and her remains were laid to rest in the old family burying ground, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, while the hymns sung were "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Saviour, More Than Life to Me," leaving with all the precious hope that "some sweet day" they would meet in that happy home where there shall be no more pains of parting.

You'll miss her in the household.

You'll miss her watchful care.

You'll miss her welcome footsteps.

You'll miss her everywhere. P.

DEATH OF A. A. HARDY.

Dear Bro.—I have just received message announcing the death of Bro. A. A. Hardy. He passed away on the morning of February 3d, in the home of his step-son, Dr. B. Crawley Jones, in full hope of a glorious immortality. We lay him away to-morrow in Asbury church-yard (where sleeps the sacred dust of James E. Medlock and the sister Hawkins, with whom he worshipped God on earth, and who were waiting to greet him on the other shore.

In prosperity and in deepest, darkest adversity, in joy and in sorrow, in health, and in pain that reached well-nigh physical agony, he walked with God.

He was one of the most trustful souls I have ever known. His faith was as simple as a child's. Whatever the dealings of God with him, he never murmured, nor did his faith falter. His Father's will was his will. He followed where His hand led. He trusted when he could not understand, and believed, while he peered through a glass darkly, whom having not seen he loved, and in whom, though he saw Him not, yet believing, he rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

He was as gentle as a woman, as trustful as a child, a gentleman in every fibre of his being, yet as brave as Caesar, as fearless as a lion. He never feared the face of a man. He fought valiantly for his country, and carries the marks of his gallantry to the grave. He was ever ready to assert his convictions anywhere and rebuke a wrong in any offender.

He was an ardent Methodist. He loved his Church, its doctrines, its polity, its ministers, and was a liberal supporter of all its institutions. He delighted in communion of saints, the fellowship of God's people. With David he could say: "I was glad when they said unto me, 'Let us go up to the house of the Lord.'" And with Timothy Dwight could sing:

"I love Thy Church, O Lord!

Her walls before Thee stand;

Dear as the apple of Thine eye,

And grave on Thy hand.

"Beyond my highest joy

I prize her heavenly ways;

Her sweet communion, solemn vows,

Her hymns of love and praise."

His soul feasted on the Word of God, either read or expounded. Last summer, in Asbury church, Bro. R. M. Maxey preached some of the greatest sermons I ever heard, and our glorified brother seemed as one caught up to the third heaven, into which he has now entered.

And yet Bro. Hardy was far removed from everything that savors of a bigot. He loved everybody that loved his Lord. He did not draw the color line in his religion. His voice was heard in prayer and praise and exhortation in the churches where his "brother in black" worshipped God. During his last illness a worthy colored preacher, well versed in the Bible, sometimes visited him, and he told me that his soul was greatly refreshed while the honorable man of God talked of God and heaven and eternal life.

He loved God. He loved God's people of every name. His prayer was: "The arms of love that compass me. Would all mankind embrace."

Our Enoch, who walked with God, and is not found because God has translated him; our Nathaniel, an Israelite in whom was no guile; our Barnabas, a good man, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, has gone to be with God, and to meet Benjamin Connelly, from Rocky Run; James Medlock and William Reed, from Asbury; Joseph Haddon, from Crawfords; Alfred James, from Ocran, and others from Dinwiddie Circuit not so well known as these, but who, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, have joined the sacramental host on high.

Who will take his place? Upon whom shall his mantle fall?

JOHN O. MOSS.

The story is told of the owner of several railroads who was unable to buy relief from the nerve-twisting agony of neuralgia. It is an unlikely tale. The sick man must have known that Perry Davis' Painkiller would help him at once, as it has helped so many thousands of sufferers in the past sixty years. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21, 1902.

The United States did an act worthy of the world's foremost Christian nation this week, when Secretary Hay handed to the Chinese Minister a check on the United States Treasury for $376,000, being the full value of the silver captured by our marines at Tientsin, China, during the trouble in that country. When the silver was taken it was forwarded to Washington and deposited in the treasury as a trust fund, to be checked against by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President. The check given the Chinese Minister was drawn by Secretary Long and endorsed by President Roosevelt. It was an object lesson in national honesty for those governments which still retain money taken under similar circumstances by their troops in China, and it was more than that. It was a sermon on the honesty of Christianity that will reverberate through China for years to come, and which can be understood and appreciated by even the most ignorant among the Chinese, and will furnish missionary workers with a strong argument for Christianity, the teaching of which has produced this act, which ought to make every American prouder than ever, and more determined than ever that the United States shall continue in the vanguard of Christian civilization—that civilization which is teaching the world to "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."

Dr. Tunis S. Hamlin, of the Church of the Covenant, has opened a timely fight upon the desecration of the Sabbath by Washington society, which is showing a rapidly growing tendency to follow the continental European custom, once confined exclusively to members of the diplomatic corps, of giving and attending social entertainments on the Sabbath. Dr. Hamlin this week preached a strong sermon on "The Reasonable Observance of the Sabbath," taking his text from St. Mark 11: 27-28: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; so that the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath," which he declared to be "our Lord's one comprehensive and authoritative utterance about the Sabbath, upon which all His conduct is a luminous commentary." He argued that, from a humanitarian point of view, as well as religious, social pleasures should cease on the Sabbath; that the open tea-room, dining-room, reception-room, and ball-room on the Sabbath constitutes even a deadlier peril than the open bar-room. Following are some extracts from the sermon:

"Six days in the week are enough for calls, teas, dinners, parties, and receptions. Witness the young girls who in their first season break down their health, lose their bloom and beauty and elasticity, and never recover them. Witness the mothers who drag themselves wearily from one entertainment to another until they are utterly unfitted for the daily duties of the home, into ruinous neglect of which they are forced by sheer exhaustion. Witness the servants who toil early and late six days each week, only to be held to the same long hours and the same grinding round on the seventh. This is no fancy sketch. You all know that it is well within the facts. Men and women are society-mad when they refuse to heed the plainest physical danger signals, and insist on maintaining for seven days and nights in the week a pace that human nature simply cannot endure. * * * The best balanced, best educated, best trained young man or young woman cannot endure uninterrupted social life without deterioration at the roots and springs of character. There must be time to think. And to think of something else than the delights, compliments, and conquests of the drawing-room, or its disappointments, jealousies, and heartless gossip. If it is idle to ask that this pace be moderated for any part of six days each week, I, for one, do ask that it be stopped altogether on the seventh day. And I do not ask this because I am a straight-laced old Jew, or a sour Puritan, who cannot bear to see people enjoy themselves. I plead for the safeguarding of the Lord's day from social intrusion, because it is 'for man,' who, making it a day of pleasure, different from the other six days only in being more crowded, abuses it to its own inevitable impairment of character; and, if persisted in, to his spiritual ruin." * * * "I most earnestly appeal to you, beloved, because the Lord's day is 'for man,' to use your utmost effort and influence to guard it against the inroads of society. I appeal to the young. Stand by the principles and practices in which you have been reared. Consider it no compliment, but an offence, when people think you so weak, spiritless, and timid that you will not stand for your higher nature, but will give all your time to sensuous, materializing pleasures. Count those not your friends, protest what they may, who would help you to forget that you are immortal spirits. Many guests of our nation at the legations at this capital are showing us scant courtesy in lightly overriding our best national traditions and customs of the Lord's day. Some of our own people are nerveless enough to flatter by imitation. I appeal to you, who know that the Lord's day is 'for man,' who have experienced its blessings, to say a courteous but firm 'No' to every invitation to secularize it, because you need it, and will have it, for physical rest and spiritual nurture."

THE CABINET AS A SOCIAL FACTOR.

The pre-eminent circumstance which makes the Cabinet the social power that it is, is found in the character of the body itself. There is not a man in the circle of the President's advisers who is not sacrificing personal interests every day that he continues to share in the management of the machinery of the government. An article in the March Delineator deals at length with the social position and influence of the Cabinet members and their families, and some new and exclusive photographs, among them one of Mrs. Roosevelt, are given which will tend to make the personalities of the Cabinet ladies better known.

A BISHOP'S QUIXOTIC DREAM.

Bishop not only presides in deliberative bodies in the appointment of preachers, but strives to preach in every church, and visit every home in his Diocese, baptizing the children and confirming believers. Ours in some respects is the most remarkable episcopacy in the world. The M. E. Bishops are compelled to itinerate and live where the General Conference thinks best; ours can locate for life in New Orleans, Spartanburg, Atlanta, Louisville, Jackson, Birmingham, Sherman, Kansas City, or group themselves in Nashville. They can so arrange their Conferences, one year on one side of the continent and the next year on the other side, as to locate but little of the burden of responsibility as to whether the individual Conference goes back or forward. And these Conferences can be reached in much less than half the time and discomfort of thirty years ago.

Of our forty-seven Annual Conferences, seventeen are but little more than district Conferences, so far as the burden of their presidency is concerned. Eight of these are mission Conferences, and nine are within our own republic. We have only thirty Conferences requiring anything like full physical vigor in a presiding officer, and we certainly have at least six Bishops strong enough to preside over an Ecumenical or any other Conference of the world. This would average them only five Conferences each, annually. Allowing two weeks of time for each Conference, each of these strong Bishops would have forty-two weeks of every year for recuperation, the writing of new sermons, review articles, lectures and books.

Of the seventeen miniature Conferences, some are only visited once or twice in a quadrennium. This leaves only about three each to be held by the Bishops in delicate health. The Western, Denver, Montana, East Columbia, Columbia, Pacific, Los Angeles, and New Mexico are but little more than gardens of summer recreation or refuges from hay fever. And as to visiting Conferences in foreign lands, invalids are to be envied who can for a few weeks breathe the pure air of the Pacific, Indian ocean, Mediterranean or Atlantic, lighted and fanned by electricity and rocked to sleep by day or night on the billowy aerial couches of floating palaces, with their magnificent libraries, sumptuous dining saloons and luxurious smoking rooms.

to the cry that comes up from the breakers?

Snap the Shackle.

"But," you say, "there are so many things I have to believe and so many things in the shape of a creed that I have to adopt that I am kept back." No, no! You need believe but two things—namely, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners and that you are one of them. "But," you say, "I do believe both of those things." Do you really believe them with all your heart? "Yes." Why, then, you have passed from death into life. Why, then, you are a son or a daughter of the Lord Almighty. Why, then, you are an heir or an heiress of an inheritance that will declare dividends from now until long after the stars are dead. Hallelulah! Prince of God, why do you not come and take your coronet? Princess of the Lord Almighty, why do you not mount your throne? Pass up into the light. Your boat is anchored, why do you not go ashore? Just plant your feet hard down, and you will feel under them the Rock of Ages. I challenge the universe for one instance in which a man in the right spirit appealed for the salvation of the gospel and did not get it. Man alive, are you going to let all the years of your life go away with you without your having this great peace, this glorious hope, this bright expectancy? Are you going to let the pearl of great price lie in the dust at your feet because you are too indolent or too proud to stoop down and pick it up? Will you wear the chain of evil habit when near by you is the hammer that could with one stroke snap the shackle? Will you stay in the prison of sin when here is a gospel key that could unlock you. Incarceration? No, no!

Pardon For All.

As the one word "come" has sometimes brought many souls to Christ, I will try the experiment of piling up into a mountain and then send down in an avalanche of power many of these gospel "comes." "Come thou and all thy house into the ark;" "Come unto me all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" "Come, for all things are now ready;" "Come with us, and we will do you good;" "Come and see;" "The Spirit and the bride say 'come,' and let him that heareth say 'come,' and let him that is athirst come." The stroke of one bell in a tower may be sweet, but a score of bells well tuned and rightly lifted and skillfully swung in one great chime fill the heavens with music almost celestial. And no one who has heard the mighty chimes in the towers of Amsterdam or Ghent or Copenhagen can forget them. Now, it seems to me that in this Sabbath hour all heaven is chiming, and the voices of departed friends and kindred ring down the sky, saying, "Come!" The angels who never fell, bending from sapphire thrones, are chanting, "Come!" Yea, all the towers of heaven, tower of martyrs, tower of prophets, tower of apostles, tower of evangelists, tower of the temple of the Lord God and the Lamb are chiming "Come! Come!" Pardon for all, and peace for all, and heaven for all who come.

When Russia was in one of her great wars, the suffering of the soldiers had been long and bitter, and they were waiting for the end of the strife. One day a messenger in great excitement ran among the tents of the army shouting, "Peace! Peace!" The sentinel on guard asked, "Who says 'peace?'" And the sick soldier turned on his hospital mattress and asked, "Who says 'peace?'" And all up and down the encampment of the Russians went the question, "Who says 'peace?'" Then the messenger responded, "The czar says 'peace.'" That was enough. That meant going home. That meant the war was over. No more wounds and no more long marches. So today, as one of the Lord's messengers, I move through these great encampments of souls and cry: "Peace between earth and heaven! Peace between God and man! Peace between your repenting soul and a pardoning Lord!" If you ask me, "Who says peace?" I answer, "Christ our King declares it." "My peace I give unto you!" "Peace of God that passeth all understanding!" Everlasting peace!

"THE BASEST OUTLAW."

Some Strong Words From Michigan Concerning the Saloon.

The Michigan Christian Advocate, under the title, "A Protected Fiend," comments upon the eternal and inevitable lawlessness of the saloon and points to the outbreak at Owosso recently as illustrating its assertions. It says:

The liquor traffic is the basest outlaw ever tolerated in a civilized country. It raises up a class of men who consider themselves amenable to no authority and justified in resisting even by violent methods all attempts to restrain them in their unlawful operations. Murder, assault, dynamite outrages, bullying, bluff, mobs and other criminal practices are resorted to whenever attempts are made to eradicate the saloon or even to confine its detestable work to the limits of the law.

Any community can have a mob on its hands by undertaking to enforce the prohibitory features of the liquor law. No community will venture to cope with the monster unless strong and fearless citizens who count not their lives and property dear unto themselves stand ready to lead the van. As a rule influential men in every community prefer social quiet to tumult and would rather let the saloon, like a mad wolf, go free than to undertake to corral it or destroy it.

Whisky Does Not Kill Bacteria.

A particular fallacy is that cherished by many as to the efficacy of whisky or brandy as a germ killer when added to water supposed to be infected. The whisky is assumed to sterilize the water and make it germ free. This, it is declared, is absolutely untrue. Whisky will do nothing of the kind. It is quite certain that microbes can live and thrive in the ordinary mixed drink of whisky and water, the average amount of alcohol in a tumblerful of whisky and water, in the proportion usually adopted, being not more than 10 or 11 per cent. Bacteriological investigations have shown that most germs are not affected by a liquid containing 22 per cent of alcohol, while their corresponding spores are unharmed in 83 per cent alcohol. Alcoholic drinks, therefore, cannot be regarded as effectual destroyers of microbe life.—Leslie's Weekly.

A Plea For Enthusiasm.

Never in the world's history has the subject of temperance received so much attention as at the present, says Christian Work. New methods are being employed, and greater victories are being achieved. Public sentiment is rising like a mighty tidal wave that threatens to sweep the traffic out of existence. Let us rally with new courage, fresh strength and abounding enthusiasm and send the cause forward with a shout, spread our literature, plan new meetings, follow up every point of vantage, be sweet spirited, insistent, practical, believing. This is God's work, and it shall triumph gloriously. Be not slow nor faithless nor fearful nor asleep

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms; music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Editorial.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren,—This writer has been greatly concerned for nearly four years about the matter known among us as the "War Claim." First, as one of the 1,500,000 members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he is concerned in whatever pertains to the welfare of the body of which he is a member. Secondly, as one of the 5,000 ministers of the Church, as one to stand before the people in her pulpits and preach truth and righteousness, he is concerned. Thirdly, as the editor of a paper, which circulates among our people, and which tries to give the facts as to our Church life, he is concerned. But would not these relations did any responsibility fall upon him other than to express his views, and to strive to give such information to the preachers and laymen as would enable them to act wisely in their various Conferences. Any responsibility for direct action in the case has been so far with the Bishops, the Book Committee, and the agents. But with the election of the delegates to the General Conference the situation has changed, and there has been laid upon those elected to this body a responsibility not upon them before. These delegates will have to pass upon this question, and will be responsible not only for opinions, but for the action taken by them in the General Conference. It is for them, therefore, to study the question with, if possible, even greater care than heretofore, and to see to it that all the facts are in their possession. At the last session of the Virginia Conference in November, this writer was elected as one of the Virginia delegates, and since that time he has been determined to do everything possible to fulfill the trust committed to him by his brethren, and to give all the time and thought possible to this, the greatest question which is to come before the body for settlement.

This writer has received a number of letters from delegates from different sections of the Church in reference to the approaching Conference. Others also have doubtless received them. The letters have all shown great desire that some plan be suggested which could command the support of all the delegates who condemn the methods employed by the agents but not condemned by the Book Committee. There seems to be difference of opinion, principally on one point. All unite in condemnation of the deceptive course of the agents, and demand their retirement as lacking either in wisdom, in judgment, or in high moral sense. All condemn the Book Committee in their failure to condemn the conduct of Stahlman and the agents. All condemn the exhibition made by our representatives in Washington before the investigating committee. But after the agents and the Book Committee have been condemned, what action shall be taken in reference to the money? At this point there is difference of opinion. Some say return it. Others say that the money is ours and it would be wrong to give it back, and just here the question arises as to whether a plan can be suggested upon which all the delegates opposed to the methods employed can unite.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, the chairman of the Virginia delegation, was visiting the writer a few days ago, and they were discussing the various phases of the question, as thousands of our people have been doing the last four years, and discussing especially the views expressed in letters of brethren. The objection of many good men to the return of the money was especially discussed. Finally, the writer said that after studying the question since May, 1898, he felt obliged to stand for either one of two propositions in reference to the money: (1) Either all of the money—$288,000—should be returned to the United States Government, with the statement that while the claim was acknowledged by the Senate to be just, yet the circumstances connected with its final passage were so discreditable to our agents that we, the principals, could not consent to keep it. (2) Or, in view of the fact that in the report of the investigating committee of the Senate, which report was adopted by the Senate, the committee do not deny the justice of the claim, nor do they say that the bill could not have been passed had the agents not deceived them; but the committee do say that the bill could not have passed the Senate unless it had been so amended as to protect the beneficiaries, the General Conference should take such action as will carry out the purpose of the Senate in the passage of the bill, and as will restore to the treasury of the Publishing House $95,000, the amount paid to Stahlman, contrary to the expressed intention of the Senate, and contrary to the statements of Stahlman and of Barbee and Smith, our agents.

Or, in other and fewer words, either the Church should pay back the $288,000, the whole amount, as having been improperly obtained, or it should see to it that the purpose and aim of the Senate should be carried out, notwithstanding the deception practiced by our agents, and the Publishing House receive the full amount which the Senate intended it should receive.

The question then arose as to how this second plan could be carried out; what method could be employed to restore to the Publishing House the amount paid out contrary to the purpose of the Senate. There were only two ways: (1) Either Stahlman must be made to pay it back, (2) or the Church must make a vicarious offering for the sin of the agents, and contribute $95,000 to take the place of that paid to Stahlman contrary to the purpose of the Senate, which purpose was thwarted by the deception practiced by the agents.

The first method could succeed on only one ground: Stahlman could be sued for violation of his contract in using improper means to secure the passage of the bill without any clause in it restricting the amount of attorney's or lobbyist's fees. The Book Committee, in making their contract with this notorious lobbyist, were derelict in not putting into the written contract a clause making void the contract if any improper means were used. This they failed to do, but Stahlman himself stated in his testimony before the Senate committee that he had a conversation with the Book Committee. He said: "They said to me in the most positive terms (which I thought very proper, and to which I gave ready assent), that whatever was done with reference to the claim was to be done in such a way as to avoid even a suspicion that anything unclean or unseemly was done to promote the passage of the bill or the payment of their claim. I said to them in that connection: 'Now, gentlemen, I agree with you. I think that that ought by all means to be done. Your claim has merit. There is no reason on earth why any improper methods should be resorted to, or any deception.' " This verbal contract he violated time and again, but should he be sued, he would very probably reply that he did no worse than the agents with whom he had the contract, and it would be hard to answer his defence. It is hardly possible that any suit could collect the money, as his employers, our agents, also deceived the Senate.

The second method is the only method by which the purpose of the Senate can be carried out. Let us clearly understand that purpose, as stated in the report of the investigating committee and adopted as the voice of the Senate. This report does not in any place declare that even if Stahlman and the agents had told the truth and admitted the contract, that the bill would not have been passed, but it does say that the bill could not have been passed without the adoption of an amendment limiting the amount of fees to be paid and protecting the beneficiaries. This is the main idea underlying the report, and is based on the history of the bill. The bill was being discussed in the Senate, and the report was in circulation that 40 per cent. of the amount was to be paid to a claim agent, Senator Lodge offered an amendment to the bill providing that only $5,000 should be paid for agents' fees. The friends of the bill feared that if the amendment were adopted it would throw the bill into conference, and possibly give trouble and endanger its final passage. They therefore stated on the authority of Stahlman and of Barbee and Smith that no fees at all were to be paid, and opposed the amendment of Senator Lodge. Because of the statements of Senators Pasco and Bate of the telegrams of Barbee and Smith, the Lodge amendment was laid on the table, and the bill was passed unamended. The discussion on the floor of the Senate therefore was not on the question of the passage of the bill, but on the question of the passage of the bill without the Lodge amendment limiting the amount to be paid for expenses to $5,000. The deception practiced by Barbee and Smith upon the Senate was not necessary therefore to secure the passage of the bill, but it was necessary to keep it from being passed without the amendment limiting the amount to be paid for expenses. The effect of their deception, therefore, was not to secure the passage of the bill. The bill could have been passed without deception; but the effect was to secure the passage of the bill unamended, because the Senate was made to believe that amendment was not necessary in order to accomplish the purpose of the Senate in the matter of agents' fees. It cannot be said, therefore, that the bill appropriating $288,000 was passed by deception, but it can be said that the Lodge amendment was defeated by deception, and that by the conduct of our agents the money which the Senate intended should be paid to the Publishing House was paid to Stahlman. That this was the main issue in the eyes of the Senate, is seen by the following extract: (Continued on page 8.)

war. But the days went by, and still the troops remained in camp. A letter from Willis to Edward three weeks later expressed his views of the situation and gave Edward a strong impression that "war, glorious war," is not all "fun and glory," at least not that part of it spent in camp.

We've been rotting in this hole now until we're all ready to desert and be shot, just for a change—Willis wrote in great disgust. It's drill, drill, drill, until I'm sick of the whole business. We've got a captain that's made of a ramrod and a pair of boots, and he trots us out through the broiling sun and the rain alike and marches us around as if our legs were made of vulcanized rubber and our backs of boiler iron. We have plenty to eat, such as it is, and enough what there is of it, but I'd give $1 apiece for one of those club pies that we used to say were bullet proof and ought to be made for the United States instead of the defective armor plates manufactured for the navy. Send me one of them in a hat box, C. O. D., and throw in a couple dozen doughnuts. We get some things here, of course, from the wagons that come around, but lately most of the peddlers have been ordered out of camp on account of the boys getting poisoned on some secondhand warmed over ice cream.

The worst thing about this waiting is the feeling that at the rate things are moving the war will be all over before we can hit a lick at anything except the bacon and coffee. There's been considerable sickness here. Winters of Company D died in hospital yesterday, and more than a dozen of the fellows in Company H are down with fever. Not more than half the boys take any precaution about the water or their diet. We have orders enough and advice enough, from the colonel down to sergeant and corporal, but there's lots of go as you please about it. For amusements we play cards and pitch quoits and once in awhile a game of baseball, but most of the fellows are glad to lie still when drill isn't on. Won't you send me a copy of Conic Sections, any old thing to read? One of the chapel hymnbooks will do. Old man, I feel pretty blue at times. I think mother was right about it when she said I'd get sick of it. There's a bare chance of our being transferred to Tampa within a week. If we are, that will mean active service. Write me, old man, and tell me all about the new president. It was rather sudden, wasn't it, the way he was called? Don't tell the fellows I am blue. But if any of them wishes he was down here tell him the climate of Hope college is good enough. Your schum, WILLIS PRESTON.

Willis' allusion to the new president touched upon an event in the college that we have received much more attention at the time if the country had not been so entirely carried away with the excitement of the war.

Early in the year the president of Hope college had received a call to a larger institution in the east and had accepted. His place had been at once filled by the trustees through the election of one of the professors, a comparatively young man, who had proved in many ways his fitness for the position.

The election of this new man meant in several ways a change of policy in many directions. Edward was only one of all the rest of the students to be affected by this change, but as the college year went on he realized the serious nature of the difference in the college atmosphere and began to understand something of what he owed to President Royce for a new impetus toward the character of life.

"I'm going to take it with me if you don't object."

So the month of June came on, with its commencement season. The nation's history had been of an exciting and unusual character. Admiral Dewey's battle in Manila bay, Lieutenant Hobson's feat in Santiago harbor and the landing of the American army near Santiago were all history before the day came for the usual exercises that closed the college term. All this time the college company was a fixture in its southern camp, and every letter that Edward received from Willis contained a wall at the enforced inaction. Edward was struck with the tone of his last letter received during commencement week. It seemed to him as if something was wrong with Willis, something that was vitally out of keeping with his usually careless but happy habits. Just what it was he could not tell, but it made him uneasy, and even in the midst of his examination and all the stir of the commencement week he wrote Willis a long letter, cheering him up all he could. He also sent Willis' letter to him to Willis' mother with a line expressing his conviction that something was not right and asking Mrs. Preston to let him know if there was anything that he (Edward) could do for his roommate.

Freeda had continued her position with the professor's family in spite of Edward's plea that she go back to the hall, now that the receipts from the new paper route warranted it. She promised to begin the fall term in the hall, and Edward had to be content with that. She was planning to go home for the summer and stay on the farm, and Edward had decided to remain in Raynor and carry his paper, besides doing some extra work that had been offered him in laboratory practice. His determination was strengthened by news from home that matters on the farm were in a good condition, and his uncle could manage affairs without him.

In addition to all this the president had unexpectedly given him some work to do in copying manuscript on a volume that he had been preparing for some time. This meant for Edward a personal acquaintance with the head of the college that shaped his whole life and is shaping it to this day.

It was almost the end of June, and Edward's summer was passing almost ideally for him. He was saving nearly $5 a week from his paper route, counting in what he was earning extra from a job or two on the hill and the work the president gave him to do. This latter task was becoming every day more of a pleasure to Edward. The president at first had given him the corrected manuscript sheets to take to his room in Rankin hall. Edward had studied shorthand and the use of the typewriter while on the farm, expecting one winter to fit himself for a business course at Randall. He had learned the typewriting slowly, but his dogged perseverance conquered even his naturally slow movement of fingers and hands, and he was rapidly growing expert in the use of a machine which the president let him have.

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. STAHL-MAN.

By Rev. John C. Shackelford.

Dear Sir,—I understand that you are a member of the Southern Methodist Church, connected with one of the most important charges of Nashville. If such be the fact, and you are interested in the welfare of the Church you have not failed to notice, through the Church papers, the deep feeling and anxiety prevailing among our people in reference to the action our next General Conference shall take about returning to the Congress of the United States the $288,000 appropriated to our Church for damages done to our Publishing House during the civil war. Unless something is done to check the intensity of feeling now prevailing, the unity and peace of the Church will be jeopardized. Are you not aware, sir, that you have it in your power to allay the anxiety of our people and roll away the reproach our agents have brought upon our Church by the deception and evasions used to secure the favorable action of the United States Senate? The facts disclosed reveal the truth that the deception, so greatly condemned by a majority of our people and by the Senate, was for your benefit alone. The Senate recognized the justice of the claim of our Church, and hesitated to make the appropriation simply because they did not want a large part of the money they proposed to appropriate diverted from the end they had in view—to wit: the benefit of "our superannuated and worn-out preachers, their wives and children."

And with the claims of our superannuates were used by our agents and their lawyer as a strong plea to move Congress to action, yet in the end it seems the Senate was more interested in the beneficiaries of the Church than were our agents and their lawyer. For it is a fact, not gainsayed nor denied, that when it was intimated to Senators that a lawyer who had been engineering the case for the agents was to receive an exorbitant sum of the money sought for his services, those Senators determined to withhold the appropriation till it was hedged in by conditions that would preclude the possibility of any intermediate party getting more than a reasonable compensation for services rendered.

Mark you! the Senate did not propose to withhold the money from the Church because of this information that had reached their ears, but they did propose to appropriate it under such conditions that the beneficiaries of the Church should not be robbed of more than one-third of the whole amount appropriated by an unlawful contract between the agents and their lawyer. The deception of our agents was not therefore necessary to secure this money to the Church. Had they told the truth the money would have been paid just the same, only safeguarded by conditions. The deception of our agents was used to prevent this safeguard and leave the way open for their lawyer to get his exorbitant salary. It was, therefore, sir, for your personal benefit that our agents disgraced themselves before the Church and the world, and brought upon our Church this mountain of reproach that threatens to crush us. I, therefore, submit to you in all candor this question: Would it not be an act of sublime magnanimity if you would rise to the fulness of the stature of Christian manhood, and return to the superannuated and worn-out preachers, their wives and children, all the money you received above a reasonable compensation for your services? Such action on your part would perfectly satisfy the United States Senate, who complain, not that the government was wronged, but that the beneficiaries of the Church they wished to favor were robbed. Such action on your part would also roll away the great mountain of reproach that is crushing us and causing the enemy to blaspheme, and, above all, such action on your part would be approved of men and God. Your name among the superannuated and worn-out preachers, their wives and orphans, in our Church, would thereby, in all coming time, be as ointment poured forth, instead of being as it now is, a by-word of reproach.

OUR WAR CLAIM

"Did Not Parallel With the Sermon on the Mount."

The St. Louis Republic of Tuesday, in reporting the proceedings of the Preachers' meeting of the M. E. Church, South, said:

"The controversy in the Southern Methodist Church arising from the collection of a war claim of $288,000 from the government by the Publishing House identified with the Church, and alleged to have been fraudulent, is revived. It was brought up yesterday at a Conference of ministers of St. Louis and vicinity at Centenary church, when it was decided to urge a bona fide tender of the money back to the government. The matter will come before the General Conference of the Methodist Church, South, at the spring meeting in Dallas, Texas.

"Dr. R. D. Smart, pastor of Cook Avenue church, brought up the subject, and was endorsed by Dr. W. F. McMurry, presiding elder, who said 'that the Church did not want any dirty money. We want to wipe out the stain in connection with it.' He also said the testimony in the case, when the claim was secured, 'did not parallel with the Sermon on the Mount.'"

Dr. Smart, who offered the opening prayer in the United States Senate on the day when this matter was discussed, and listened carefully to the discussion, is profoundly convicted and is eloquently earnest in declaring that this money should be tendered back to the government if we have to mortgage the Publishing House and issue bonds to do so. He thinks such bonds would be readily taken up by our people everywhere, and that the Church would not only lift every shadow of stain or stigma, but be greatly blessed and prospered as a result.

The laity and clergy of St. Louis are a unit in their conviction that Southern Methodism is approaching a crisis in her history. The laymen especially are looking with anxious longing for relief, believing that from Dallas we shall start out into a history, either of glory or shame. In this materialistic, money-grabbing age there never was such an opportunity for a Church to give to the world an example of righteousness.

MORE SERVICES IN THE COUNTRY.

Why should we have less preaching and moral teaching in the country during the winter months than at other times? It seems to me that there is really a need of more. It is a time of more leisure, and the people have more time for moral and spiritual culture; and then when they do not have preaching where they can attend they will be visiting from house to house on the Sabbath, and frequently they will be out on Sabbath night until from 10 to 12 o'clock. And yet they will say there ought not to be evening preaching, as it takes until night to get home after service; and, indeed, even heads of families talk that way in some instances. But if these same people are invited to a marriage or entertainment of any kind at night, they go in the coldest kind of weather, and go back home at a very late hour of the night, with their families. But when they go to church and it happens to be getting dark when they get home, they say the evenings are too short for evening preaching. Now, if they are truly seeking to get all the moral and religious light they can get, or if they are not seeking for it, ought not the preachers and those who are seeking to be religious, try, by all means, to get them to church as often as it is possible? And a large proportion of this class of people are the young men that it seems cannot be gotten to attend the Sunday schools in the country, and most of them do go to preaching on Sunday, and then to give them up into the hands of the world and its enjoyments for three or four Sabbaths in the month during the winter, without preaching is more than we as preachers and church members ought to do. And again, when our preachers don't have any preaching to do except on the Sabbath, can't they prepare two sermons a week? The time was when the Methodist travelling preacher had to travel nearly all the time, and preach five or six times per week.

Then some are saying we should leave off the evening appointment during the winter, that they may visit more. My observation is that they visit less. When they preach only at 11 o'clock, once per day, they go with some brother and get dinner, and then go home in the evening, and we hear no more of their visiting until the next Saturday evening—they will go somewhere in the neighborhood of their next appointment; whereas, if there is a Sabbath evening appointment, the preacher will go with a friend that night, and the next morning while he is out he will go to see some others before he goes home that night.

Now, the mass of holidays are over, and it seems hard for the frolicking people and loafers to get to business, and we have had preaching only once a month since the first Sunday of December, but a plenty of frolicking and dancing, and I understand that many of our church members have been engaged in these frolicks nearly all night in many instances, and I am sorry to have to say some of the stewards and officers of the church are allowing or have them at their house all night.

Now, it seems to me that instead of having less preaching during these holidays and winter season, when our country people are more at leisure, and consequently have more time to spend in social enjoyment, we ought to have more preaching; if we could have our young people talked to and admonished about suffering the worldly enjoyments getting possession of their hearts, so that it would cause them not to violate their obligations they take when they join the church, and thereby injure ourselves. Now it seems to me that if they or we had frequent preaching along this line to remind us of our obligations as church members, and cause us to remember that we are our brother's keeper (especially during the holidays), many of us might be kept from allowing the world to come in and take possession of us and our homes. So it seems to me, instead of giving up the evening appointment during the winter, let us have that, and it can be done, add a week-day appointment at all the churches during the holidays, which last a week in this section of the country.

GENERAL CONFERENCE LEGISLATION.

A discussion on the legislation expected at our next General Conference was introduced by Dr. R. D. Smart, followed by Rev. W. F. McMurry, Rev. Harry Whitehead, and Dr. W. B. Palmore. Dr. R. D. Smart recommended the order of deaconesses, the payment of the Publishing House claim promptly to Congress, a conditional removal of one or two Bishops. To these the second speaker assented, but in addition offered reasons for the responsibility to be removed from the pastors in dealing with cases in which the people have invited men to hold meetings in their charge in opposition to his judgment and the concentration of the work of our Missionary Board in one secretariat instead of two, as it now exists. Rev. Harry Whitehead pled for the authorization of one treasurer in our Conferences for all the boards instead of the many, which now produce such great confusion and inconvenience. Dr. W. B. Palmore emphasized only one point, in which he took strong issue with the former speakers—viz., the election of more Bishops. He believed we had enough for the demands of the work, and thought that we needed fewer presiding elders and Bishops, thus dignifying that office and saving money to the Church. With the wonderful saving of time by the modern means of transportation, and the great number of weeks allotted to each Bishop, up, who can and ought to be succeeded at the District Conferences by the presiding elders, the real chairman, he concluded that increase was not logical and imperative need. The substance of his argument was embodied in an editorial on the subject in the last week's issue of the Advocate. A more general discussion, in which we can voice their convictions, will be the order of the day on next Monday morning.—St. Louis Advocate.

CHAUTAUQUA.

The title "Chautauqua, a system of popular education," stands for an institution. With 15,000 people in daily attendance at the mother assembly, with several hundred thousand at her branch assemblies, with 2,500 students in her summer schools, and 25,000 readers in her circles, Chautauqua has been truly called "The Largest Institution for Higher Education in the World."

Its work is conducted under an educational charter from the State of New York, which requires that surplus revenue shall be devoted wholly to the building up of the institution. It is managed by trustees like any other educational institution. There are two main divisions of its work: (1) Division of Home Reading (nine months of the year), and (2) Division of Summer Study and Recreation at Chautauqua, New York (summer schools six weeks, lectures and entertainments eight weeks, in July and August of each year). The corporate name of the institution is "Chautauqua Assembly."

The summer features have perhaps attracted most attention by reason of the spectacular elements inhering in them. The Chautauqua platform, aside blies in the common work of pointing humanity to the better things.

The nine-months-of-the-year Home Reading Division of the Chautauqua system is not spectacular. But it is the factor of basic importance in a comprehensive plan for the home-making of intellectual fiber.

Chautauqua does not pretend to do the work of a university; it does not claim to furnish ready-made education. It does profess to be able to give those who will follow the regular course of the C. L. S. C. for four years something of that "College Outlook" which better equips the college student for life-work than his less fortunate fellow.

The general plan offered may be stated as: (1) A four years' course, designed to give the "College Outlook." (2) Each year's course distinct from the rest. (3) Forty-two supplementary courses for special students. (4) A monthly magazine with readings, notes, and programmes. (5) A membership book, with special review questions. (6) Individual readers may pursue the entire course alone. (7) Local circles of three or more are recommended. (8) Twenty minutes a day will cover the required reading. (9)

WASHINGTON RELIGIOUS LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Rev. Clarence E. Eberman, field secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, has just concluded a series of special services in Washington, under the auspices of the District of Columbia Christian Endeavor Union, as a celebration of the twenty-first anniversary of the establishment of the society. He began the services Sunday, preaching in the morning at the Metropolitan Presbyterian church, and in the evening at the Memorial Lutheran church. Yesterday he addressed two meetings, both at the Mount Vernon Place M. E. church, South. The first was a meeting of Christian Endeavor workers, and was followed by a supper. The other was a public mass-meeting, at which Mr. Eberman spoke on "The True Mission of Christian Endeavor." Mr. Eberman is a forceful speaker, and thoroughly familiar with his work, having been president of the Pennsylvania Christian Endeavor Union, the largest of the State Unions, for three years previous to becoming field secretary of the United Society. The following quotation from one of his addresses to young people gives a partments of work. Thus they have not only the fellowship of Christ, but the companionship of Christian people in whose company they can grow better." Mr. Eberman is making a tour of the country. From here he will go South, and later will visit all the large cities of the West.

Few men with good eyesight have had a more interesting career than Dr. W. H. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the Senate. Speaking of his long connection with Congress, Dr. Milburn said the other day: "I think I am justly entitled to be called the grandfather of the House, because I entered the service of that body ten years before John Sherman, of Ohio, and Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, who were termed fathers of the House, became members of it. Sherman and Morrill entered Congress in 1855, and I was there in 1845. At that time I was a resident of the district in Illinois represented in the House by Abraham Lincoln, and upon his nomination was elected chaplain of Congress for the years 1845-'46. In those days one chaplain offered the prayer at the opening of each branch of Congress, and the only way this could be done by one man was to have the Senate clock kept ten minutes slower than the House clock. After I offered the invocation in the House, a page would take me to the Senate chamber, where I performed a similar duty. If, however, I was a little late the Vice-President always waited for me. Every Sunday morning I preached in the Hall of the House, and the services were attended by many members of the House."

One of the strongest addresses delivered at this season's series of C. A. mass-meetings was that of Mr. Charles Inglis, of London, England, this week. His subject was Christ's command to the rich young man: "One thing thou lackest: Go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast." The keynote of the address was in this sentence: "The reason that many a man has not received salvation is because he has not abandoned something in his life that is not in harmony with salvation." He closed by saying: "God can snap every tie, every chain that holds you to the world, and set you in the right path to-day. Brother man, you know what the idol is that has never been dethroned. You know what sin it is that holds you in its clutch. Pause to-day; throw it aside forever. God's terms are a full surrender. Are you prepared to say this very hour, 'The dearest idol in my heart I will thrust out and throw aside forever.'"

Temperance legislation in various forms and toward various ends is still a topic of interest and importance at the capital, as a result of the agitation over the subject in all parts of the country. In the first place, there is attention called to the particular brand of altruistic temperance still being advocated by the Congressmen of the United States. There has just been passed a bill, fathered by Mr. Sperry, of Connecticut, prohibiting the sale of liquor to the inhabitants of the New Hebrides, in the South Pacific. It seems easy for the legislators to apply charity away from home, while there are saloons in the Capitol building it-from presenting the most extensive series of lectures on the University Extension model in the world, has become famous as a clearing-house for the ideas represented by the greatest living leaders of the times. To establish the first continuous summer school, now the largest school of the kind in the world, is by itself a remarkable achievement.

Former Chautauquans will be interested to know that the Chancellor, Bishop Vincent, who for the past two years has been resident in Switzerland in charge of the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Europe, will sail for the United States in July and spend August in his old work at Chautauqua.

It is to be noted that the number of summer schools is increasing every year, and that last year one hundred and twenty summer assemblies, modeled more or less closely on the Chautauqua plan, were held in thirty-five states, with an attendance approximating 1,000,000 people. At over forty of these assemblies "Recognition Day" exercises, similar to those at the mother Chautauqua, are held, thus affording graduates of the C. L. S. C. an opportunity to receive their diplomas with ceremony at the assembly centre nearest to them, anywhere from California to Maine, provided they can have home for that purpose. In this sense the Home Reading Course is the educational tie that binds the assem-

Expense, less than fifteen cents a week for nine months. (10) A diploma at the end of the four years' course. (11) Seals for written review work for extra reading.

Over 260,000 readers have been enrolled as members of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle since its organization; nearly three times that number (about 750,000 persons) have read parts of the Home Study Courses. There are over 41,000 graduates of the four years' course. Flourishing circles have been maintained in every State and Territory, Canada, Mexico, South America, the Hawaiian Islands, the West Indies, Japan, and other countries of Europe, Asia and Africa.

Chautauqua is not conducted for personal profit. It is not a stock company. It pays no dividends. Only those officers who do active work receive salaries, which are in no case large. Through a Bureau of Publication, Chautauqua, by contract, provides the special material for the regular Home Reading Courses at the lowest possible cost. It does not conduct a general publishing business, and is perfectly free to direct the student to the best sources of information wherever obtainable.

fair idea of Mr. Eberman's style: "Religion is a life. It is more than a creed, though it is a creed; it is more than a doctrine, though it is a doctrine. It is a living with a personal Saviour and serving a personal Lord. The Christian Endeavor pledge gives to the young people an excellent programme by which they may grow up in Christ, and this growth can be seen in increased strength, grace, beauty of character, and fruitage, just as the growth of plants is observed. In dealing with the material things of life more thought should be given to their ultimate effect on the soul. God wants us to be joyous and happy, but He wants us to enter into the fullest possibilities of manhood and womanhood. There is a tendency, which should be combated, on the part of young manhood, to take up with the things of the world so completely that they lose sight of the things of the soul. It is well to have ideals, but they should not be of such a vague, far-off character that we never think seriously of realizing them. We should keep constantly before us the ideals of truth, purity, honesty, reverence, and power, and translate them into the every-day things of life. The spiritual should be master of the carnal, and we should never allow this order to be reversed. There is every reason why young men and young women should identify themselves with the Church and its de-

LESSON IX, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 2.

Text of the Lesson, Acts vii, 54 to viii, 2—Memory Verses, 59, 60—Golden Text, Matt. v, 44—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

54, 55. "But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven." With great power and boldness, being filled with the Spirit, Stephen had spoken the truth and, like Peter, had accused the council of being the murderers of Jesus Christ. They were so cut to the heart that they were filled with fury and gnashed their teeth at him. How suggestive was their conduct of the place to which they were journeying, where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth not against others so much as because of their own torment! (Matt. xiii, 42, 50; xxii, 13.)

56. "And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God." This is one of the seven times that we find the phrase in Scripture "heaven opened." The passages are Ezek. i, 1; Matt. iii, 16; John i, 51; Acts vii, 56; x, 11; Rev. iv, 1; xix, 11, and they well repay a careful study, for the Lord Jesus is always the central person, and the more we look into heaven the more heavenly we become, and there is so much room for improvement in that direction.

57, 58. "Then they cried out with a loud voice and stopped their ears and ran upon him with one accord." This is the first of the four "one accords" of the devil's followers in this book of the Acts, the others being xii, 20; xviii, 12; xix, 29. The number four suggests the four corners of the earth (Rev. vii, 1), or the whole earth, and reminds us that the whole world lieth in the wicked one (I John v, 19, R. V.), and the wicked one will never cease his hatred of God or of the people of God. We are wise when we stop our ears as David did and refuse to hear the mischievous things that evil people speak (Ps. xxxviii, 12, 13), but to stop one's ears from hearing the things of God is truly the devil's work. Refusing the truth, they were believing a lie (II Thess. ii, 10, 11), and, believing that Jesus of Nazareth was an impostor, they judged Stephen to be guilty of blasphemy, and in stoning him thought they were obeying their law (Lev. xxiv, 16), while they themselves were, before God, the blasphemers and the guilty ones, but they were blinded by the god of this world (II Cor. iv, 3, 4). This is our first introduction to the young man named Saul, unless, as some think, he is the same young man who went away from Jesus one day sorrowfully because he loved his possessions.

59. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Thus said Stephen as they were stoning him to death, for he knew whom he believed and saw Him even before he went out to be with Him. When our Lord Himself was dying, He said, "Father, into Thine hands I commend My spirit." And similar words came from David by the same spirit long before (Luke xxiii, 46; Ps. xxxi, 5), for he also could truly say: "I trusted in Thee, O Lord." "My times are in Thy hand" (Ps. xxxi, 14, 15). These dying words of Stephen and of the Lord Jesus give no encouragement to the belief that between death and resurrection the spirit is asleep and unconscious. If any are not fully persuaded concerning the life and bliss of the believer apart from the body, let them read and believe Luke xvi, 22; xxiii, 43; II Cor. v, 8; Phil. i, 21, 23; Rev. vi, 9-11.

60. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Like his adorable Lord and Master he prayed for his murderers (Luke xxiii, 34). Our instructions are, "Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you" (Matt. v, 44).

And while this is impossible to the natural man, if any man be in Christ he is a new creature, born from above, a temple of the Holy Spirit, a mansion in which the Father and the Son have come to dwell (II Cor. v, 17; I Cor. vi, 19, 20; John xiv, 23), and Christ in us can do what He did when here on earth in the body prepared for Him. It is our privilege to yield fully to Him and take as our motto, "Not I, but Christ" (Gal. ii, 20).

viii, 1. "And Saul was consenting unto his death." Hear his own account of what he said to the Lord Jesus long afterward. "And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on Thee, and when the blood of Thy martyr Stephen was shed I also was standing by and consenting unto his death and kept the raiment of them that slew him" (Acts xxii, 19, 20). Before Agrippa he said, "I verily thought with myself that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, which thing I also did in Jerusalem" (Acts xxvi, 9, 10). And then he went on to tell how not only in Jerusalem, but in other cities, being exceedingly mad against the saints, he was the means of their imprisonment, punishment and death. Our lesson tells of the greatness of the persecution in Jerusalem after the death of Stephen and how all the believers except the apostles were scattered through Judea and Gamaria. The Lord's command was to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." "To be His witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth" (Mark xvi, 15; Acts i, 8), but up to this time they seem to have confined their testimony to Jerusalem, and it required a persecution to scatter them that they might obey His command. Thus He maketh the wrath of man to praise Him and restrains what He does not see fit to use (Ps. lxxvi, 10).

2. "And devout men carried Stephen to his burial and made great lamentation over him." Well, they did not bury Stephen, but they buried all that was left of him on the earth, the house in which he had sojourned. Stephen himself was "absent from the body, present with the Lord," but his body was asleep, even as Jesus had said of Lazarus when speaking of his death, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth" (John xi, 11-14). There was no occasion to lament for Stephen, for to him it was a great gain, but it seemed that the church could ill afford to lose such a witness. We still think when the faithful witnesses are called home that it is strange when there seems to be such great need of them here and there are seemingly so few, but we must remember that the work is His who, in undisturbed majesty, is at God's right hand.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 2, "The Joy of Service." Text, Ps. cxvii, 5, 6; Matt. xxv, 19-23.

"Enter thou into the joy of thy lord." The gladness spoken of is the joy of accomplishment, for surely

No ill can fret the soul with discontent
Like consciousness of powers unused.

To see all efforts end in failure is misery indeed. To be ever rolling the load up hill and yet to never gain a foot advance is death to all courage and interest.

In active use of our powers we find life's deepest pleasure. We must be doing. Thought must reappear in things. We must form and shape things to correspond to ideas within. We must compel things to unite, to increase, to do our bidding. We not only discover what is; we invent and create what never before was. We received talents—one, two, five. We return with added capital. We have discovered the secret of the Lord's riches. We have shared in His power. Unconsciously to ourselves we have grown into His way of doing and being. In our intentness to be faithful to His interests and be able to give Him on his return His own goods with rightful increase we have developed and expanded our own natures and become capable of companionship and partnership.

It requires "nerve" to do this—something more than nerves. It is the feeling power held firmly by will power to the course approved by reason power. There may be weeping at planting time, sorrow at loss of good seed buried in the earth when we may be pinched with hunger and crave it for food, but whatever the call of appetite we go forth with that precious seed and sow it instead of eating it. Is there any joy in that? Perhaps there is a kind of grim satisfaction in the self mastery. We pull the belt a hole tighter in the buckle to still the gnawings of hunger and swing the hands in wider circle as we scatter the grain. We can sing, we will sing in hope of harvest, in triumph of right doing, in consciousness of right use of the Master's goods.

"Come again, rejoicing, bringing sheaves." Harvest is the singing time. Not yet can we swell the full chorus of redemption because some is in the blade only, some is earing, and we must patiently wait the filled out corn, ripe and beautiful.

We catch glimpses of what the future joy will be as we see some specimens of the work advancing. But, oh, what glory will it be when, soul and body purified, glorified, we see the Christ face to face and find ourselves appearing like Him! What rapture too deep for words if He shall say to us, "Well done!"

These are days of tollsome planting and tending, times of careful investing and accumulating treasure. Keep up good heart; we are increasing just as truly and more valuably than the corn or the cash.

The future joy will not be so much because we bring added talents and gathered sheaves as because we are admitted to Christ's companionship.

A Substitute For Trouble.

The Christian has, of all men, abundant reason for trusting. Surely God is to be trusted. If He had cared nothing about us, He would not have redeemed us at such a great cost. If He had been indifferent to our fate, He would not have sent Christ as the pledge of His love. If He had care enough and love enough and power enough to open a way to our salvation, we may certainly trust Him with all we have. And what kind of a trust is it that is always doubtful? If we ask Him to forgive our sins and blot them out of His book of remembrance, why worry about it and wonder if He has done it? If we commit our ways to Him, why disturb ourselves with fear lest He forget His charge? He says to us, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Why load ourselves down with anxiety about the possible evils of tomorrow? If He has power over the future and we have not, why waste our time, strength and courage in fretfulness?—Independent.

The Scriptural Idea.

Any unperverted mind will conceive of the Scriptural idea of prayer as that of one of the most downright, sturdy realities in the universe. Right in the heart of God's plan of government it is lodged as a power. Amid the conflicts which are going on in the evolution of that plan it stands as a power. Into all the intricacies of divine working and the mysteries of divine decree it reaches out silently as a power. In the mind of God, we may be assured, the conception of prayer is no fiction, whatever man may think of it. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."—Austin Phelps.

By Praise We Give.

By prayer we ask, by faith we take, but by praise we give. In heaven blessing God will be our constant employment, and if we would have a portion of the happiness of heaven upon earth, in the enjoyment of divine peace, while seeking to be free from all undue care, while committing all anxieties to Him in prayer and supplication, we must also cultivate the important grace of continual thanksgiving.—Freeman.

In His Keeping.

Softly, softly in the dawning
Came God's message unto me,
"Serve Me, child, from early morning;
I each day thy strength will be."

Now that sunset hours are nearing,
When night dew falls chillingly,
Comes the whisper, "Leave all, fearing Child, and simply trust in Me."
So I lay me down a-sleeping,
Night of life or night of death;
I am ever in His keeping,
And He knoweth what He saith.

What is nature but the grandest and most inspiring of all God's temples? What are its works but the truest revelations of God to man, ay, the only ones ever revealed?—Rev. Dr. Joseph Krauskopf, Hebrew, Philadelphia.

Dead Indeed.

That man must be far gone in hardness indeed, indifferent to all that is noble, dead to the sublimest exhibition of self sacrifice and devotion the world has ever seen, if he can think of Calvary without the tribute of a tear.—Rev. R. F. Coyle, Presbyterian, Denver.

Man's Highest Privilege.

The highest privilege of man is liberty. God gave him this and implanted the spirit of freedom in his nature. When man once fully realizes this, he is willing to suffer persecution, exile, death, rather than yield this God given privilege.—S. E. Bateman, Lutheran, Philadelphia.

Value of Thoughts and Deeds.

It is well enough to have good thoughts, but indispensable to have a good tongue. Generous sentiments are useless unless they provoke generous deeds. Kind thoughts for the widow and orphan are in vain unless their distresses are relieved.—Rev. George C. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston.

Cowardice.

One of the great troubles of the age in which we live is that we have not the moral force to make men "settle." The very best people in the community permit all sorts of vandalism to be perpetrated with nothing more than a little feeble whisper of remonstrance.—Rev. Dr. Charles Frederic Goss, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

Wasted Forces.

Business has turned the waters of Niagara to practical uses without destroying the beauty of its leaping waters. When will the prophet arise with enthusiasm and genius enough to concentrate and lead the wasting intellectual and moral forces of this age into channels of highest usefulness?—Rev. R. A. White, Universalist, Chicago.

How to Live.

Be aristocratic in thought, to think the best things; be aristocratic in manner, to do the best things; be aristocratic in speech, to speak the best things; but be democratic in sympathies, love every fellow man, no matter how humble, and be democratic in your services. Grasp every opportunity to assist your fellows.—Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant, Episcopalian, New York.

No Rest Without Peace.

There is more to rest than mere physical rebuilding. There is no rest without peace of soul. Every luxury that wealth can bring, every pleasure that amusements can bestow, cannot bring rest without peace. Nature herself is powerless to bring strength to tired souls without peace. There is no rest where conscience is not at peace.—Rev. R. D. P. Bennett, Presbyterian, Germantown, Pa.

The Highest Love.

The true Christian spirit is founded on love. The fundamental motive of the new dispensation is love of God and love of man. Outside of that to the holy eucharist there is no devotion more life giving than the devotion to the sacred heart—that heart which is the source of the precious blood which redeemed us on the cross, the blood of the Saviour.—Rev. J. J. Sullivan, Catholic, San Francisco.

A Crowning and Redeeming Grace.

It is no exaggeration to say that obedience is the crowning grace of a follower of Jesus Christ. It is the essence, the very core, of personal holiness. To learn the will of our divine Master is the chief purpose of Bible study and of true prayer. To do the will of that Master is the loftiest attainment to which any child of redeeming grace can aspire this side of heaven.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

I can hardly understand how any great imaginative man, who has deeply lived, suffered, thought and wrought, can doubt of the soul's continual progress in the after life.—Alfred Tennyson.

AN OPEN LETTER.

tracts from the report of the committee:

"If these denials of the existence of a contract had not been made to the Senate from a source which was entitled to entire credit the bill would not have been passed by the Senate, unless it had been so amended as to protect the beneficiaries from what many senators regard as a waste and improper use of the fund by the payment of an excessive and unreasonable fee. Such an amendment was within the power of the Senate, and one would have been adopted in the nature of a condition that the United States would recognize and pay this claim, provided that the fruits of it were to actually go to the beneficiaries of the fund that had suffered by the taking of the property by the United States during the war. The book agents could have accepted or rejected the settlement with this condition attached, and they would have doubtless had the opportunity to do so but for the misleading replies sent to senators who made inquiry about the contract."

"The book agents and Mr. Stahlman insist that it was the duty of the Senate to consider the claim on its merits, and that the Senate had no right to inquire as to the amount of fees to be paid, and therefore they might properly refuse to give the facts concerning the contract with Mr. Stahlman. If they had taken that position and declined to say whether there was a contract or not, the case would have been a very different one from that presented. A refusal on their part to say what the contract was, on the ground that the Senate had no right to inquire, would have put the Senate on notice that a contract of some sort was in existence, and if the Senate had not then taken steps to secure a proper application of the money to be appropriated, the fault would have been with the Senate; but the Senate was misled, and, believing that there was no contract for fees or paying for securing the passage of the bill, made no provision for securing the entire fund to the supposed beneficiaries."

"Your committee have not felt it incumbent on it to consider whether the Book Committee or the book agents were justified in making the contract with Stahlman, but do not hesitate to say that had it been known that more than one-third of the amount appropriated was to go as attorney fees, the passage of the bill without some restriction as to the amount of fees was hardly possible."

"If there was any mistake or omission on the part of the Senate, it was in failing to protect the beneficiaries against the book agents, Messrs. Barbee and Smith, whose duty it was to guard their interests, and this would have been done if information that properly belonged to them had not been withheld."

It is clear from these quotations that the purpose of the Senate was defeated by Barbee and Smith, our agents. The Senate was willing to pass the bill giving all the money but $5,000 to the Church, but it was not willing to pass it giving $100,000 to Stahlman. Our agents prevented the Senate from doing what it intended, and kept $95,000 from going where the Senate intended it should go. We are responsible in the eyes of the law for the acts of our agents. It is our duty, therefore, to see to it that the purpose of the Senate which was thwarted by the deception of our agents be carried out, and that the amount of money intended by the Senate to go into the treasury of the Publishing House be placed there. Stahlman will not do it, our agents will not do it, the Book Committee will not do it. There is but one other way. All these are our agents, our representatives. If they will not do it, then the issue comes to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in General Conference assembled. Will the General Conference, of which the agents and the Book Committee are creatures, condemn the conduct of its creatures? Assuredly it must. Will it stop there? Or will it assume responsibility for the acts of its creatures, and while condemning their acts make proper reparation? Will the Conference see that the purpose of the Senate is carried out, and the bill having been passed with the understanding that $288,000, less a small amount for fees, should go into the Publishing House treasury, will the General Conference see that $95,000 be put in the treasury in place of the $95,000 kept out by its agents? In short, will the General Conference condemn the conduct of the agents and the Book Committee but assume responsibility for the result of the deception and pledge the Church to make a vicarious offering of $95,000 to take the place of the amount which was diverted by the deception of the agents from the uses to which it was appropriated by the Senate? The Church has not sinned, but its agents have sinned, and while the Church ought to repudiate the sin of the agents, it ought also to accept its responsibility and make reparation for the result of their sin. There is no more common principle in law than the relation of agent and principal. Business men are often obliged to condemn the conduct of their agents, but they cannot escape the responsibility for the result of their conduct, and if they are just and honorable, they will not try to escape it. Our General Conference cannot escape this responsibility without falling below all the standards of the business world and all civil and moral law. Our agents, by their deception, prevented the purposes of the Senate from being carried out. They ought to bear the consequences of their own conduct and pay into the treasury $95,000. But if they will not do so, then the General Conference ought to pledge the Church to do so.

After discussing the matter with Brother Lipscomb, as indicated above, the writer determined to talk with those who were fully acquainted with the views of the Senate, and so he went to Washington and secured an interview with two senators whom he thought to be able to tell him what he desired to know. He first saw Senator Clay, of Georgia, a member of our Church and a steward for over twenty years, and a member of the Committee on Claims, the committee which investigated the whole subject. It was desirable to see him first because, being a Southern Methodist, he would understand the case fully and appreciate the interest in it. He expressed his opinion freely, emphasizing the views expressed by him before the Committee on Claims, as found in the printed report. He thought that the conduct of the agents should be condemned and new men elected, but he did not believe that the money should be offered to the government. He said the claim was a just one, that the government owed the money, and that the Senate did not desire it to be returned. The writer then made special inquiry as to the situation at the time of the passage of the bill, and Senator Clay said that the issue was made on the amendment of Senator Lodge. The writer asked why he opposed the amendment of Senator Lodge—why he did not allow it to be adopted? He replied that if the amendment had been adopted the bill would have been sent to conference or sent back to the House, and the friends of the bill feared some trouble might arise and desired to press it to its passage unamended. He said that it could not have passed without amendment had it been known that Stahlman was to get 40 per cent. He expressed great surprise and regret that the representatives of our Church should have behaved as they did in the matter of the telegrams and before the investigating committee. The writer then asked him if he thought the condemnation of the agents and election of new men would set the Church right in the eyes of other churches and of the unbelieving world; would not men say that we had condemned the conduct of the agents, but we had done nothing to repair the wrong committed. The writer then asked him if he would be opposed to a pledge by the General Conference to raise $95,000 to take the place of the amount paid to Stahlman, and thus carry out the purpose of the Senate? He said that he was opposed to the return of the money to the government, for the claim was just, and the Senate did not desire to have the money returned, but that if the plan suggested could be carried out, he thought it would be a good plan. He was then asked if he thought such a course taken by our General Conference would remove all reproach which might come upon the Church from the conduct of the agents, and would it carry out the purpose of the Senate? He said that in his opinion such a course would be an honor to the Church and would not be open to any of the objections involved in the proposition to return the money to the government. He expressed regret, however, that Mr. Stahlman could not be compelled to refund the money.

After a full discussion of the subject, Senator Clay managed to secure an interview for the writer with Senator Lodge, whom, as a senator from the North and the author of the amendment, it was especially desirable to see. He was very busy, owing to his connection with the Philippine bill, then pending in the Senate, and could not give a long interview, but was clear and explicit in his statements and in his answers to questions. His views were the same as those expressed by Senator Clay, except that he did not say that he was opposed to the return of the money on the ground that the claim was a just claim. He expressed no opinion as to the justice of the claim, but said that there was no desire for the return of the money, and that it was impracticable to return it. He thought that no blame rested upon the Church up to the present time, but only upon the agents, but that the General Conference should condemn their conduct and retire them. In reference to the amendment which he had offered, he said that he had offered it because of the report of the large amount to be paid an agent, and he desired the superannuated preachers to get it all. His amendment was defeated because of the telegrams of the agents; otherwise it would almost certainly have been adopted. The agents had defeated the purpose of the Senate by their telegrams. The writer then asked him what he thought would be the effect if the General Conference would condemn the agents and retire them but assume the responsibility for the result of their conduct and pledge the Church to raise a vicarious offering of $95,000 to take the place of the amount paid to the agents contrary to the wish of the Senate, and thus carry out the desire of the Senate which had been thwarted by the conduct of the agents? Did he think that the Senate would feel that the Church had cleared herself of any complicity in the conduct of the agents, and had fully vindicated her honor? He said, without a moment's hesitation, that he thought such a course would vindicate the honor of the Church and entirely relieve her of all reproach.

These expressions of opinion from these two distinguished gentlemen, one from Georgia and a member of our Church, and the other from Massachusetts and not a member, were remarkable because of their practical agreement at every point. It is not possible to spurn their views as the views of Northern men who have no sympathy with us. They were present in the Senate, and informed as to everything that went on, and they practically agreed in everything, and I conversed with each one separately. I also discussed the matter with Representative Swanson, from Virginia, who is also a member of our Church, and he agreed with Senator Clay. The conduct of our agents is not only condemned by our Southern men in Congress, but it is a source of mortification to them, and they will hail with joy the repudiation of it by our General Conference.

After careful and long consideration with brethren, therefore, after hearing this matter discussed; after hearing many letters, and after consultation with the distinguished gentlemen above named, the writer has come to the conclusion that the memorial offered at the last session of the Virginia Conference by B. F. Lipscomb, W. J. Young, and James Cannon, Jr., and which was adopted without discussion or division, can best be carried out by the following steps:

(1) Condemn the conduct of both of the book agents and retire them both from office.

(2) Condemn the management of the Book Committee, and elect an entirely new committee.

(3) Pledge the Church to make a vicarious offering of $95,000 to take the place of the amount which was diverted, by the deception of the agents, from the uses to which it was the purpose of the Senate to appropriate it, and elect a Book Committee and book agents which will see to it that the offering is raised, unless, indeed, the members of the General Conference agree, as individuals, to give it or to raise it.

It seems to the writer that there can be practical agreement on this plan by all those opposed to the conduct of the agents. He is aware that objection will be urged against it, but objections will be against any plan presented. He presents it to his brethren, soon to meet in General Conference, and asks them to give it a reading, and their thoughtful consideration.

JAMES CANNON, JR.

Blackstone, Va.

N. B.—Since the writer reached the above conclusions, he has received for publication from Rev. John C. Shackelford, of Missouri, an open letter to Mr. Stahlman, in which there is still a third method suggested by which the money can be restored to the treasury. Brother Shackelford calls upon Mr. Stahlman to repent and refund the money. We should all be glad to see Mr. Stahlman repent and refund the money, but it is to be feared that the appeal will fall upon deaf ears. Bro. Shackelford's communication was received on Saturday, only a few days after the discussion with Brother Lipscomb, and the title of it led the writer to change the title of his article. He had called his article "A Plea for a Union of Forces on Essential Points," but Brother Shackelford's article suggested a change to "An Open Letter to the Delegates to the General Conference," and thanks are hereby tendered to him for the suggestive title.

J. C., JR.

The will of God respecting us is that we shall live by each other's happiness and life; not by each other's misery or death. A child may have to die for its parents; but the purpose of heaven is that it should rather live for them—that, not by its sacrifice, but by its strength, its joy, its force of being, it shall be to them renewal of strength and as the arrow in the hand of a giant. So it is in all other right relations. Men help each other by their joy, not by their sorrow. They are not intended to slay themselves for each other, but to strengthen themselves for each other.—Ruskin.

What we need is not a new compass every year, but a new determination to steer straight by the old compass, which is the Word of God in Christ.—Henry Van Dyke, D. D.

To become like Christ is the only thing in the world worth caring for, the thing before which every ambition of man is folly and all lower achievements vain.—Drummond.

Christ leaves all power with those who are willing to leave their possessions for Him.

The last day lies hid; therefore watch every day.—Augustine.

Religious News.

Bishop John M. Walden argued before the preachers' meeting in Cincinnati recently for the union of North and South publishing concerns and theological schools in Mexico, Japan, and elsewhere. The Bishop said: "All along the line there is now a cry for unity, where we are now pulling helter-skelter in opposite directions."

Dr. J. D. Hammond, secretary of the Board of Education, reports a steady growth in our colleges and academies since the beginning of the present educational movement. In many cases debts have been paid, and in others buildings erected and endowment increased. In 1897-'98 the total attendance was 7,315, which, in 1900-'01, had increased to 18,517.

SUCCESSFUL MEETING.

Twenty-two thousand dollars was raised at one meeting of the congregation of Epworth Methodist church last week to go toward relieving the church of a debt of $55,000. This was at a meeting of the male members of the congregation, at which Rev. R. H. Bennett, associate pastor of the church, presided.

A meeting of the ladies of the congregation has been called for 4 o'clock this afternoon for the purpose of interesting them in the movement of removing the debt from the church, and it is expected that plans will be devised whereby the debt will be materially reduced.

At the beginning of the present Conference year there was an entire indebtedness of $55,000 on the church edifice, $48,000 on the building and the remaining $7,000 on other enterprises of the church. Rev. R. H. Bennett, associate pastor, who has been eminently successful in clearing the debt on other churches he has served, conceived and carried into execution a plan for lifting the entire debt on this church.

He conducted a great canvass among the members and succeeded in interesting them in the movement. Having reached a point in this canvass when he believed the church was ready to take hold of the matter and bring it to a successful issue, he held a meeting of the male members, when there was a general review of the situation, and after making an estimate of subscriptions it was found that $22,000 had been raised toward liquidating the debt.

Mr. Bennett is confident of wiping out the entire debt by Easter Sunday. The paying off of this indebtedness will be in the form of a Twentieth Century thank-offering.—Virginian-Pilot.

RATHER A SOCIAL SESSION.

There was a small attendance at the regular weekly meeting of Methodist preachers which was held in the parlors of Epworth church yesterday morning. The meeting was more in the form of a social than a business session. During the meeting reports from the pastors present were read as follows:

Cumberland Street—The Rev. C. L. Bane conducted the usual services. The

WASHINGTON. —In this discourse Dr. Talmage demonstrates that we are affected by forces that we seldom recognize and enlarges upon human accountability. The text is Job xxxviii, 31, "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades?"

What is the meaning of that question which God put to Job? Have we all our lives been reading it, and are most of us ignorant of its beauty and power and practical suggestiveness? A meaningless passage of Scripture many thought it to be, but the telescopes were busy age after age, and astronomical observations kept on questioning the skies until the meaning of my text comes out lustroously. The Pleiades is a constellation of seven stars appearing to the naked eye, but scientific instruments reveal more than 400 properly belonging to the group. Alcyone is the name of the brightest star of that group called the Pleiades. A Russian astronomer observed that Alcyone is the center of gravitation of our solar system. Hugh Macmillan says that the sun and its planets wheel around that center at the rate of 422,000 miles a day in an orbit which it will take 19,000,000 years to complete. The Pleiades appear in the springtime and are associated with flowers and genial warmth and good weather. The navigation of the Mediterranean was from May to November, the rising and the setting of the Pleiades. The priests of Belus noticed that rising and setting 2,000 years before Christ.

Now, the glorious meaning of my text is plain as well as radiant. To give Job the beautiful grace of humility God asked him, "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades?" Have you any power over the laws of gravitation? Can you modify or change an influence wielded by a star more than 400,000 miles away? Can you control the winds of the springtime? Can you call out the flowers? How little you know compared with omniscience? How little you can do compared with omnipotence!

Power of Interrogation.

The probability is that Job had been tempted to arrogance by his vast attainments. He was a metallurgist, a zoologist, a poet, and shows by his writings he had knowledge of hunting, of music, of husbandry, of medicine, of mining, of astronomy and perhaps was so far ahead of the scholars and scientists of his time that he may have been somewhat puffed up; hence this interrogation of my text. And there is nothing that so soon takes down human pride as an interrogation point rightly thrust. Christ used it mightily. Paul mounted the parapet of his great arguments with such a battery. Men of the world understand it. Demosthenes began his speech to the crown and Cicero his oration against Catiline and Lord Chatham his most famous orations with a question. The empire of ignorance is so much vaster than the empire of knowledge that after the most learned and elaborate disquisition upon any subject of sociology or theology the plainest man may ask a question that will make the wisest speechless. After the profoundest assault upon Christianity the humblest disciple may make an inquiry that would silence a Voltaire.

Called upon, as we all are at times, to defend our holy religion, instead of argument that can always be answered by argument let us try the power of interrogation. We ought to be loaded with at least half a dozen questions and always ready, and when Christianity is assailed, and we are told there is nothing in it and there is no God and there never was a miracle and that the Scriptures are unreasonable and cruel and that there never will be a judgment day take out of your portable armory of interrogation something like this: "What makes the condition of woman in Christian lands better than in heathen lands? Do you think it would be kind in God to turn the human race into a world without any written revelation to explain and encourage and elevate and save? And if a revelation was made, which do you prefer—the Zenda-Vesta of the Persian or the Confucian writings of the Chinese or the Koran of Mohammed or our Bible? If Christ is not a divine being, what did he mean when he said, 'Before Abram was, I am?' If the Bible is a bad book, what are the evil results of reading it? Did you see any degrading influence of the book in your father or mother or sister who used to read it? Do you not think that a judgment day is necessary in order to explain and fix up things that were never explained or fixed up? If our religion is illogical and an imposition upon human credulity, why were Herschel and Washington and Gladstone and William McKinley its advocates? How did it happen that our religion furnished the theme for the greatest poem ever written, 'Paradise Lost,' and to the painters their greatest themes in the 'Adoration of the Magi,' 'The Transfiguration,' 'The Last Supper,' 'The Crucifixion,' 'The Entombment,' 'The Last Judgment,' and that all the schools of painting put forth their utmost genius in presenting 'The Madonna?'"

Farreaching Influences.

Why was it that William Shakespeare after amazing the world as he will amaze the centuries with the splendor and power of "The Merchant of Venice," and "Coriolanus," and "Richard III.," and "King Lear," and "Othello," and "Macbeth," and "Hamlet" wrote with his own hand his last will and testament, beginning it with the words: "In the name of God, amen! I, William Shakespeare, of Stratford-on-Avon, in the county of Warwick, in perfect health and memory (God be praised!) do make and ordain this my last will and testament through the only merits of Jesus Christ, my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting and my body to the earth whereof it is made?" Had Shakespeare lost his reason when he wrote his faith in Christ and the great atonement? Put your antagonist a few questions like that, and you will find him excusing himself for an engagement he must meet immediately.

These words also recognize farreaching influences. Job probably had no adequate idea of the distance of the worlds mentioned from our world, but he knew them to be far off, and we, who have had the advantage of modern sidereal investigation, ought to be still more impressed than was Job with the question of the text, as it puts before us the fact that worlds hundreds of thousands of miles distant have a grip on our world. There are sweet influences which hold us from afar. There may have been in our ancestral line perhaps 200 years ago some consecrated man or woman who has held over all the generations since an influence for good which we have no power to realize, and we in turn by our virtue or vice may influence those who shall live 200 years from now. Moral gravitation is as powerful as material gravitation, and if, as my text teaches and science confirms, the Pleiades, which are millions of miles from our earth, influence the earth we ought to be impressed with how we may be influenced by others far away back and how we may influence others far down the future. That rill away up among the Alleghenies, so thin you think it will hardly find its way down the rocks, becomes the mighty Ohio, rolling into the Mississippi and rolling into the sea. That word you utter, that deed you do, may augment itself as the years go by until rivers cease to roll and the ocean itself shall be dried up in the burning of the world. Paul, who was all the time saying important things, said nothing more startlingly suggestive than when he declared, "None of us liveth or dieth to himself." Words, thoughts, actions, have an eternity of flight. As Job could not bind the sweet influences of the Seven Stars, as they were called, so we cannot arrest or turn aside the good projected long ago. Those influences were started centuries before our cradle was rocked and will reign centuries after our graves are dug. Oh, it is a tremendous thing to live! God help us to live aright.

Importance of Good Actions.

Astronomers can easily locate the Pleiades. They will take you into their observatories on a clear night and aim their revealing instrument toward the part in the heavens where those seven stars have their habitude, and they will point to the constellation Taurus, and you can see for yourself. But it is impossible to point to influences far back that have affected our character and will affect our destiny. We know the influences near by—paternal, maternal, conjugal—but by the time we have gone back two generations, or, at most, three, our investigations falter and fail. Through the modern interesting habit of searching back to find the ancestral tree we may find a long list of names, but they are only names. The consecration or abandonment of some one 200 years ago was not recorded. It would not be so important if you and I, by our good or bad behavior, blessed or blasted only those immediately around us, but our goodness or our badness will reach as far as the strongest ray of Alcyone—yea, across the eternities. Under this consideration, what do you think of those who give themselves up to frivolity or idleness and throw away fifty years of their existence as though they were shells or pebbles or pods instead of embryo eternities?

I suppose one of the greatest surprises of the next world will be to see what wide, farreaching influence for good or evil we have all exerted. I am speaking of ourselves, who are only ordinary people. But who can fully appreciate the farreaching good done by men of wealth in Great Britain for the working classes—Mr. Lister of Bradford, Edward Akroyd of Halifax, Thomas Sikes of Huddersfield, Joseph Wentworth and Josiah Mason and Sir Titus Salt? This last great soul, with his vast wealth, provided 756 houses at cheap rent for 3,000 working people and chapel and cricket ground and croquet lawn and concert hall and savings bank, where they might deposit some of their earnings, and life insurance for those who looked further ahead and bathhouses and parks and museums and lecture halls with philosophical apparatus, the generous example of those men of a previous generation being copied in many places in Canada and the United States, making life, which would otherwise be a prolonged drudgery, an inspiration and a joy.

Two Mighty Worlds.

At Dunfermline, Scotland, is a stone house, the roof on the second floor twelve feet by fourteen in size. The annual rent of that room years ago was $7.50. That was the one room in which the father and mother of Andrew Carnegie lived with the whole family. Influences were started there which made Andrew Carnegie the most distinguished philanthropist of all time, and what his gifts of great libraries on both sides the sea will do for the coming generations I do not think any angel of God would have enough capacity to calculate. Who could bind the sweet influences of that Pleiades?

After awhile there will be a man who will do for churches and missionary societies and Bible distribution what Andrew Carnegie has done for libraries, and then the millennium will be here. The millennium is here! The shower of uncounted millions of dollars for all good purposes I think is the first step of that golden thousand years of peace and holiness which have been predicted and for which the world has so long waited. As the snowdrops belong to January, and the violet to March, and the honeysuckle to June, and the chrysanthemum to November, so this bloom and fragrance of generosity on the part of the world's wealth mean the advancing summer of the world's release, of Eden restored, of paradise regained. You say there are things to discourage. I know it. But I am not now exploring sepulchers full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness. I am watching the daybreak. I am studying the light that streams into the darkness. I am considering the sweet influences of the Pleiades.

Notice also in my text the influence of other worlds upon this world. We all regard the effect which our continent has upon other continents or one hemisphere upon the other hemisphere. Great harvest or drought on one side of our world affects the other side of our world. A panic in Wall street, New York, has its echo in Lombard street and the bourse. The nations of the earth cablegrammed together all feel the same thrill of delight or shock of woe. But we do not appreciate the influence of other worlds upon our world. The author of my text rouses us to the consideration. It takes all the worlds of known and unknown astronomy to keep our world in its orbit. Every world dependent on other worlds. The stellar existence is felt all through the heavens. Every constellation is a sisterhood. Our planet feels the benediction of Alcyone and all the other stars of the Pleiades. Yea, there are two other worlds that decide the fate of our world—its redemption or its demolition. Those two worlds are the headquarters of angelology and demonology. From the one world came Christ, come ministering spirits, come all gracious influences. From the other world rise all satanic and diabolic influences. From that world of moral night rose the power that wrecked our poor world six thousand years ago, and all the good work done since then has not been able to get our world out of the breakers. But the signals of distress have been hoisted and the life lines are out, and our world's release is certain. The good influences of the consecrated people in our world will be centupled by the help from the heavenly world, and the divine power will overcome the demoniac. O man, O woman, expand your idea and know the magnitude of a contest in which three worlds are specially interested! From all the seven worlds which my text calls the

THE ONE WHO FINDS.

"He thinks he's a genius," said Aunt Hannah, accounting for the low estate of her neighbor. "He spends all his time trying to invent things—wheels, pulleys, and all sorts of contrivances to improve everything under the canopy—and expecting all the time to strike something that will be a universal labor-saver, and bring him no end of money. But in the meanwhile his wife has nothing to save her labor, or make her comfortable, and she has a hard time to take care of the family. The best discovery he could make would be some kind of good, steady work, and industry enough to stick to it."

And it is along the line of good, steady work that most other discoveries come—the most valuable inventions that so far have blessed the world. Not to the amateur or dilettante, not to restless eyes seeking here and there for something to be turned into gold, but to the skilled and intelligent workman steadily pursuing his calling, have the great revelations been given. The story of useful inventions is, for the most part, a story of work, bridging the streams or throwing down the mountains that barred its way—the story of those who, seeing the hindrances and needs in their chosen craft, have patiently studied out a remedy. The uplifting of labor, like the uplifting of the race, has come from within rather than from without.—The Wellspring.

"SAYING" AND "PRAYING."

Mr. Moody once related this pretty incident concerning his own little son:

"My wife came down one evening and said she had had some trouble with one of the children. He was not willing to obey, and he had gone off to bed without asking her forgiveness. I went up and sat down by the side of the little child, and said: 'Did you pray to-night?' 'I said my prayers.' 'Did you pray?' 'Did you pray?' 'Well, papa, I told you that I said my prayers.' 'Yes, I heard you; but did you pray?'"

"The little fellow was struck; he knew he hadn't prayed. How was he going to pray when there was something wrong in his heart? He could not do it."

"Well, now," said I, "are you going to go off to sleep without praying?" After a struggle he said: 'I wish you would call mamma.' She came up and was glad to forgive him, and then he wanted to get out of bed and pray. He had 'said his prayers,' but now he wanted to 'pray.' Lots of people say their prayers, just as a salve to their conscience, and go out and do some mean, contemptible thing after they have said their prayers. But they hadn't prayed, and that's the difference."—United Presbyterian.

HAVE CHARITY.

Have charity for others' views,
And do not think you're always right
And everybody else is wrong.
If they see things not in your light,
God gave us all our different views.
To best develop each one's soul,
And, though we tread not the same path,
We still may reach the same blest goal.

Forbearance with each other try,
Have charity for other's views;
Forbearance, love and charity,
A wondrous power will infuse
Into the heart, and make the world
Seem like a much more joyous place,
They'll scatter sunshine all around,
And brighten every happy face.

It was Christ's lessons here on earth—
Have charity for all mankind,
And not unjustly to condemn,
But help the weak, the poor, and blind.
And try to teach Christ's better ways,
With purest thoughts e'er fill the mind.
By thus developing the soul,
Life's greatest blessings we shall find.

HOW LONGFELLOW WROTE HIS BEST-KNOWN POEMS.

I once wrote to the poet Longfellow asking him to give me some account of the circumstances under which he wrote "The Bridge"—"I stood on the bridge at mid-night"—a poem which an eminent English critic has called "the most sympathetic in this language." I received in return a cordial note from the poet, in which he said: "If you will come over and pass an evening with me, it will give me pleasure to tell you the history of the poem, and also of any of my poems that may interest you."

A few evenings later found me at the poet's door at his Cambridge home. He was then verging on seventy years, in the fulness of his experience and the ripeness of his fame. I paused at the door before ringing the bell. I rang, and was shown into a long hall-like room, dimly lighted, in which was a broad table, antique furniture, and a tall colonial clock. The poet was there alone. He arose to meet me, and formed a striking and statuesque figure, with his kindly smile and long white hair and beard.

"And so you would like to know something about the first inspiration of some of my poems—what led me to write them?" he said when we were seated. "Well, you are very kind."

"I will tell you first how I came to write the 'Psalm of Life.' I was a young man then. I well recall the time. It was a bright day and the trees were blooming, and I felt an impulse to write out my aim and purpose in the world; I wrote the poem and put it into my pocket. I wrote it for myself. I did not intend it for publication. Some months afterwards I was asked for a poem by a popular magazine. I recalled my 'Psalm of Life.' I copied it, sent it to the periodical. It saw the light, took wings and flew over the world. There you may see it, written on a Japanese screen!"

He pointed to a high, richly ornamented screen that stood before a great fireplace. He added an anecdote that I have always regarded as a true picture of his soul.

"When I was in England I was honored by receiving an invitation from the Queen. As I was leaving the palace yard, my carriage was hindered by the crowd of vehicles. There came to the door of the coach a noble-looking English workingman.

"'Are you Professor Longfellow?' he said.

"I bowed.

"May I ask, sir, if you wrote the 'Psalm of Life?'"

"I answered that I did.

"Would you be willing, sir, to take a workingman by the hand?"

"I extended my hand to him; he clasped it, and never in my life have I received a compliment that gave me so much satisfaction."

"I wrote 'Excelsior,'" he continued, "after receiving a letter full of lofty sentiment from Charles Sumner, at Washington. In one of the sentences occurred the word, 'Excelsior.' As I dropped the letter, that word again caught my eye. I turned over the letter and wrote my poem. I wrote the 'Wreck of the Hesperus' because, after reading an account of the loss of a part of the Gloucester fishing fleet in an autumn storm, I met the words, 'Norman's woe.' I retired for the night after reading the report of the disaster, but the scene haunted me. I arose to write, and the poem came to me in whole stanzas."

"The clock in the corner of the room," he went on, "is not the one to which I refer in my 'Old Clock on the Stairs.' That clock stood in the country house of my father-in-law at Pittsfield, among the Berkshire Hills."

The great clock in the room was beating the air in the shadows as he spoke. I could seem to hear it say:

"Toujours—jamais!

Jamais—toujours!"

It was these words by a French author that had suggested to him the solemn refrain:

"Forever—never!

Never—forever!"

"Excelsior" had been set to popular music by the Hutchinsons, when the poet met one evening the minstrel family after a concert in Boston Music Hall. "I have," he said, "another poem which I will send to you." He did so. It was the first copy of the "Old Clock on the Stairs." One of the family set the words to music.

"My poem entitled 'The Bridge,'" he said, in effect, "was written in sorrow, which made me feel for the loneliness of others. I was a widower at the time, and I used sometimes to go over the bridge to Boston evenings to meet friends, and to return near midnight by the same way. The way was silent, save here and there a belated footstep. The sea rose and fell among the wooden piers, and there was a great furnace on the Brighton hills, whose red light was reflected by the waves. It was on such a late, solitary walk that the spirit of the poem came upon me. The bridge has been greatly altered, but the place of it is the same.—Hezekiah Butterworth.

WASHINGTON RELIGIOUS LETTER.

self, and the laws of the State from which the originator of the bill is elected do not prohibit the sale of intoxicants. It is another example of how easy it is to point out the straight and narrow path to others, and still continue in the "primrose paths of dalliance" ourselves. It is a noteworthy fact that the anti-canteen law substituted the words "United States military reservations" instead of "government reservations," because the latter would have prohibited the drink traffic in the House and Senate restaurants in the Capitol building.

The second Annual Conference of the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers has just concluded its meetings. Every ecclesiastical denomination was represented, and it was gratifying to those who are working for harmony in the religious world to see the interest and enthusiasm displayed in the discussion of plans for more methodical and effective work by the various churches. Perhaps the most interesting address, one bearing directly on the question of Church federation, was that delivered by J. C. Barnes, D. D., of Pittsburg, who is president of the federation in that city. His subject was, "The Possible and Impossible in Church Federation," and his argument was that an actual ecclesiastical union was impossible on account of the different beliefs that individuals are bound to hold, but co-operation among the different bodies was not only possible, but was the only method that would procure the desired good results. He could not defend the principle that the division of the churches into sects and sub-sects strengthened each body, though he believed in church individualities. The community of interest principle, so widely spoken of in the business world at present, seemed to him to form the best solution. For are not all churches working toward the same interest, the ethical and religious life of mankind? Too much competition he believed to be a wasteful principle, therefore co-operation would redound to the common advantage. Another address of significance, as refuting the pessimistic tendency in sociological criticism of the present day, was that given by Mr. J. Cleveland Cady, of New York, president of the National Federation, who spoke enthusiastically and optimistically of the future of church work, and of the fact that sin was decreasing with each generation.

After the first, or morning, session on the last day of the Conference, a large delegation of the clerical visitors called at the White House on the urgent invitation of President Roosevelt, where they were received cordially by the Chief Executive, who showed great interest in their work. He asked many questions as to the Federation's plans and prospects, his interest being largely due to his recollections of a meeting he had himself attended in Syracuse two years ago in the interest of the federation that has since been accomplished. At that meeting the President made a speech advocating such an organization. He says now that he thinks the largest field for its work is in the small towns, and in this branch of the work he is particularly interested.

General O. O. Howard and ex-Senator Thurston were the principal speakers at a meeting held in the First Congregational church and presided over by Rev. S. M. Newman, pastor of that church, to protest against the proposed re-enactment of the Chinese exclusion law. General Howard said: "A religious experience with the Chinese soul is precisely the same as a religious experience with any other soul. The Scripture tells us, and illustrates it from Moses to Revelation, that the spirit of the commandments of our Heavenly Father is, first, to love God, and second, to love our neighbor. A religious experience, as I understand it, enables an individual of any name or nation, by God's help, to lift up his heart in sincere love. This sincere love strengthen him to keep the Commandments, not as a slave, but as a son of God and a brother of man. Men sneer and say that the Chinese all deceive, and that there is no truth or sincerity in them. My experience of twenty-five years is quite the opposite. It is this: That some men deceive, and there appears to be no truth in them, but that in Christian experience the Chinamen rather excel in their exhibition of the power to love God and their fellow-men; and it is only the very few that are hypocritical. Some Chinamen, of course, are frightened into denials, and some, like Judas, sell themselves for money to betray, degrade, and injure those with whom they come in contact. Their reward is naturally a temporary gain, but in reality a loss which no man can measure. I have noticed that the Chinese Christians have made more gifts, freely offered, for charity and for Christian and benevolent purposes than any others. I mean, judging by what their churches and missions in this country and elsewhere have given. We had in our Howard University, of which I was president for about five years, three Chinamen—Fung Ah Foo, Leong Sing, and Choy Awah. During their term in the university no officer or instructor had any fault to find with them. Fung Ah Foo was a coolie, and came here from Cuba before it was a crime to cross the border. His hair had been cut short, a reformation which, I understand, has been lately proposed for some other humble people. He did not mind that; but soon led everybody about him in scholarship. He rose into that love of God and of his fellows which we call becoming a Christian. After he left us he went to the Pacific coast, and was placed in charge of one of the Chinese missions at Oakland, Cal., that had more than a hundred members. With such an example in your mind, are you wholly willing to discriminate against men because they are born in China? Fortunately for us as a nation, we can make an immigration law aimed against contagious diseases, improper tenements, low dens of vice, anarchists, whose profession is murder, and pauperism, which belongs to other states, whose burden it is for them to carry. We can do this because it can be done without favoritism, without unjust partiality, and without rank injustice; and, to tell you the plain truth, it would be a wonderfully good thing if we could pull out some of the beams from our own eyes. I do not know any other way for this than to persistently educate in a proper manner from generation to generation all our children and to do what we can also to lift up the minds and hearts of grown men and women."

It is very complimentary, of course, to this country as a nation that the other nations of the world are sending some of their brainiest men to the United States to study our people and their methods for the purpose of enabling their own people to profit by the knowledge thus acquired, but it behooves us as a people to impress upon these scholars who are and will be studying us for some time, that our great progress has not been confined to material things—that our Christianity, morality, and temperance have been important factors in placing us ahead of the world in industry and commerce, and making us probably the most contented people on earth. If we can succeed in doing that we shall put some new and powerful missionary elements at work, which cannot fail to produce the most gratifying results. Professor Leopold Mabilleau, one of the most distinguished social economists of France, has been sent to the United States by the French government to establish an institution for the study of American systems of trade, industry, social economy, and commercial education. M. de Margerie, counsellor of the French Embassy in Washington, said of this proposed institution: "Such a project has been under consideration for some time, and it has been finally decided to establish such an institution. The details, however, have not yet been decided on, nor has the city in which it will be located. Properly speaking, it will be neither a school, a college, nor a university. Young Frenchmen will come here to study America and Americans under the direction of some eminent man. The headquarters will be in some large city, and the students will go forth on tours of investigation. For instance, a man may be sent to the West to investigate mines and your systems of mining; your trusts and great corporations will be studied, and your industrial, social, economic, and commercial systems will be investigated." It may be readily seen that an opportunity will be given our people to teach these young Frenchmen, by example, if not by precept, something higher, greater, and better concerning spiritual things while they are studying our economic methods, and it should not be neglected.

Members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Washington are congratulating themselves upon the acquisition of a prominent and active worker in the person of Mrs. Shaw, wife of the new Secretary of the Treasury, whose work in the Iowa W. C. T. U. was known long before her husband became Governor of the State, and was kept up while he was Governor, as it doubtless will be in Washington.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

congregations were not as large as usual on account of the stormy weather. He also attended the Sunday school and conducted a funeral in the afternoon.

Trinity—The Rev. George Wesley Jones conducted short services.

Centenary—The Rev. E. T. Dadmun preached morning and evening. The congregation in the morning was unusually good for the day.

Epworth—The associate pastor, the Rev. R. H. Bennett, preached morning and evening to very good congregations for the day. In the morning he laid before the congregation the plan reported by the Board of Stewards for the liquidation of the debt on the church. His subject was "Loyalty to Zion." Twenty-two thousand dollars of the indebtedness have been secured. It is expected that the balance will be wiped out on Easter Sunday.

Owens' Memorial—The pastor, the Rev. Ernest Stevens, preached in the morning. A service was also held at night.

Port Norfolk—The Rev. D. T. Merritt was present at five services. The Sunday schools were well attended, and the Junior and Senior Epworth Leagues in the afternoon were crowded. The Rev. Ernest Stevens conducted the services at night in accordance with the plan inaugurated by the preachers' meeting for union revival services. The meeting has been postponed for a week because of the bad weather.

Wright Memorial—The Rev. G. H. McFaden preached morning and night. The Sunday school was largely attended for the day. One was received by certificate.

Memorial—The Rev. W. Asbury Christian reported six services. He preached in the morning and evening. The Rev. Mr. Ramsay, of the Baptist church, addressed the Epworth League in the afternoon. The Young Men's Missionary meeting was also held in the afternoon.

Lambert's Point—The Rev. C. H. McGhee conducted the Sunday school and preached in the morning. No services were held at night.

LeKies' Memorial—The Rev. G. H. Lambeth preached twice to large congregations both times. The revival meetings have been in progress during the past week, the conversions to date numbering thirty-five. Four were converted at the Sunday services. Ten were received on profession of faith and one by certificate. The meetings will be conducted this week. The Rev. George Wesley Jones, who has been preaching with great spiritual power, will continue to help.

McKendree—The Rev. W. R. Proctor reported good congregations for the day. The union revival services began Sunday night, and will be continued each night this week. The Rev. J. N. Latham, of Park View church, Portsmouth, will conduct the meeting this week.

On motion, a committee, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Bane, Lambeth, and McGhee, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions on the death of the daughter of the Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins, and also on the death of the sister of the Rev. W. T. Green, which will report at the meeting on next Monday.

The committee in charge of the arrangements for the union revival meetings was requested to change the time of the meeting at Lambert's Point from the first Sunday in March to the first Sunday in April, which was done.

No other business being presented, the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Ernest Stevens.—Landmark.

Holiness excludes selfishness. Its possessor loses himself in his mission; so loses sight of self, that ease and honor and position and riches and everything of earth is as the small dust in the balance compared with the fulfilling of His mission, to serve God and to save souls. Holiness is a spirit of sacrifice.

A holy church is one that gives up all to God—reputation, influence, position, life itself—and with a calm dignity, determined to know nothing save Jesus and Him crucified, says—

"Here, on this altar, Lord, I lay
My life, my soul, my all."

And more and more is this spirit coming up in the church. The fires are being kindled, our sons and our daughters are receiving a baptism of power and having their lips touched with a live coal from off the altar.—Selected.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

On motion, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the members of Dinwiddie Quarterly Conference, assembled in our first session, February 8, 1902, in Gravelly Run church, have heard of the recent death of our brother, A. A. Hardy, who was long an honored member of our body; and

Whereas, he was a most exemplary Christian, and a most useful member and efficient officer of the Church:

Resolved, 1. That we are greatly grieved at the loss we sustain in the death of our dear brother, and that we deeply sympathize with his family in their great sorrow and loss.

Resolved, 2. That we praise God for His grace that enabled our ascended brother to live such a life of faith, humility, and usefulness.

Resolved, 3. That we will ever cherish his memory, emulate his example, and follow him as he followed his Lord.

Resolved, 4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Quarterly Conference, a copy of them be sent to his family, and a copy forwarded to the Southern Methodist Recorder for publication.

B. H. BARROW,
Recording Secretary.

Whereas, at God's behest our loved associate and League member, Lee Eggleston, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Beverly P. Eggleston, of Smithville, Va., hath changed earthly life for the life beyond: therefore Resolved, That, banded together as we are in Christian fellowship and work for the Master, with "Look up" for our motto, we do tender our united sympathy that they may "look up" unto the hills from whence cometh divine consolation.

Resolved, That we find comfort in the assurance that in the day when the veil shall be folded back from over the mysteries not yet revealed, we shall know God's choice was best.

Resolved, That we endeavor to impress the lesson his early death teaches upon the hearts of his young companions, that youth is the safe time to begin God's service.

Resolved, Though left awhile amid the shadows, we find solace in the hope of meeting the dear one again. We doubt not the whispered prayer of the dying child reached the listening ear and touched the great heart of the God of compassion and love. That He led him through the valley into the light of an endless day.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, adopted by the members of the Epworth League of Smithville, Va., be presented to the parents of the deceased, entered upon the Society's records, and be sent to the Southern Methodist Recorder for publication.

"A drinking man," said Mr. Carnegie, addressing a company of Y. M. C. A. railway men a few days ago, "should have no place in a railway system; indeed, he should have no place anywhere."

Pleasures there come no such powerful influences as from the two worlds that I am now mentioning. My only hope for this world is in the re-enforcement that is to come from another world. But that is promised, and so I feel as sure of the rectification of all evil as though looking out of my window to-day I saw the parks and the gardens flowering into another paradise and the apocalyptic angel flying through the midst of heaven with the news that the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord.

Home's Sweet Influences.

My text called Job and calls us to consider "the sweet influences." We put too much emphasis upon the acidities of life, upon the irritations of life, upon the disappointments of life. Ammianus Marcellinus said that Chaldea was in older times overrun with lions, but many of them lost their power because the great swamps produced many gnats that would get into the eyes of the lions, and the lions, to free themselves of the gnats, would claw their own eyes out and then starve. And in our time many a lion has been overcome by a gnat. The little, stinging annoyances of life keep us from appreciating the sweet influences. And how many of these last there are! Sweet influences of home, however plain it may be! That is the harbor into which we sail; that is the goal for which we run; that is the place where we rest; there abide all confidence and affections; there we lay out our plans; there we extend our sympathies; there we talk over our successes; there we unload our griefs. Its four walls shut out a prying and inquisitive world. Thank God for the home in which we were born, the home in which we now live, the home in which we expect to die!

Not sufficiently do we recognize the sweet influences of the wife. We men are of a rougher mold, and our voice is loud, and our manners need to be tamed, and gentleness is not as much of a characteristic as it ought to be, and we often say things we ought to take back. It is to change this that the good wife comes in. The interests of the twain are identical. That which from outsiders would be considered criticism and to be resented becomes kindly suggestion. Sweet influences that make us better men than we otherwise would have been or could have been!

The last chapter of Proverbs recognizes the good wife's influence when it says, "Her husband is known in the gates when he sitteth among the elders of the land"—that is, his apparel indicates that he has some one to look after his wardrobe, and his manners show that he is under refining influences at home. But no one fully appreciates the sweet influences of the wife until the dark day comes and the slight symptoms become serious and the serious phases of the disorder pass into the fatal and the temperature is 106 and medical ingenuity is exhausted and you are told for your consolation that "while there is life there is hope," which means that there is no hope at all, and the precious life flutters and is gone, and you must put out of sight the one who from the day she took the vow amid the orange blossoms under the marriage bell had been to you more than all the world besides. Then you realize as never before what had been the sweet influences.

Refining Power of the Gospel.

Sweet influences of friendship! If we have behaved ourselves tolerably well, we have friends. In our days of mirth they come with their congratulations. In times of sorrow they come with expressions of solace. In times of perplexity they come with their advice. They are with us at weddings and at burials. If there is anything good in us, they find it out, and our frailties they overlook or excuse. If something appears against us, they say, "Wait till I hear the other side." If disaster shall befall us, we know from whom would come the first condolence. Family friends; church friends; business friends; lifelong friends. In our heart of hearts we cherish them.

Sweet influences of our holy religion, surrounded as we are by all the amenities of Christian society—men and women who have felt the refining and elevating power of the gospel! Sweet influences of the Sabbath, fifty-two of them chiming their joy into every year! Sweet influences of the Scriptures, with their balm for all wounds and their light for every darkness! When the heirs of a vast estate in England wished to establish their claim to property worth $100,000,000, they offered a reward of $500 for the recovery of an old Bible, the family record of which contained the evidence requisite. But any Bible, new or old, can help us to a vaster inheritance than the one spoken of, one that never fades away.

The sweet influences of the heavenly world, which many wise men thought for a long while was Alcyone, the center of the constellation of the Pleiades—world of our future residence, as we hope; world of chorus and illumination; world of reunion; world where we shall be everlastingly complete; world where our old faculties will be intensified and quickened and new faculties implanted; world of high association with Christ, through whose grace we got there at all, and apostles and poets, Habakkuk, and St. John of Patmos, and Edward Young, his "Night Thoughts" turned into eternal day; and Horatius Bonar of modern hymnology, and Hannah More, and Mrs. Hemans, and Mrs. Sigourney, who struck their harps till nations listened; and David, the victor over Goliath with what seemed insufficient weapons; and Joshua of the prolonged day in Gibeon, and Havelock, the evangelist hero, and those thousands of men of the sword who fought on the right side. What company to move in! What guests to entertain! What personages to visit! What choirs to chant! What banquets with lifted chalices filled with "the new wine of the kingdom!" What victories to celebrate!

The Star of Hope.

The stories of that world and its holy hilarities come in upon our souls sometimes in song, sometimes in sermon, sometimes in hours of solitary reflection, and they are, to use the words of my text, sweet influences. But there is one star that affects us more with its sweet influences than the center star, the Alcyone of the Pleiades, and that is what one Bible author calls the Star of Jacob and another Bible author calls the Morning Star. Of all the sweet influences that have ever touched our earth those that radiate from Christ are the sweetest.

There is a good old prayer in the Bible, "to be kept from presumptuous sins." It is well for men in business to repeat it when temptations to run hazardous risks are so abundant. Venturing on God may be a noble act of faith; venturing on self is often an act of fatal folly. A good rule is never to do what we cannot conscientiously ask God to prosper, and never to go where we cannot ask our Master to go with us.—The Evangelist.

The place of worship may be that of work.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach: Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

DIVIDEND OF $50,000.

"The Book Committee of the Northern Methodist Church, at the recent meeting, declared a dividend of $50,000 out of the net profits of the Publishing House, to be distributed among the Annual Conferences."

The above announcement stirs the memory, and we wonder where we ever heard anything like that before. It has a faintly familiar sound, as if years ago some such notice had come to our ears. Ah! yes; before we ever heard of the "war claim" scandal we heard such reports read in our Annual Conference, and our superannuated preachers had that much additional money to help them out. But since the Book Committee and the Book Agents put $188,000 in the Publishing House treasury we have declared no dividends. When the editor was a boy at school, there was a favorite maxim used by the school boys. It said: "Cheating never thrives," and in baseball, football, marbles, etc., it was accepted as a truth by the boys. The truth of the maxim has had a striking illustration in the case of our Publishing House. Deception was practiced by the agents, and we have declared no dividends from that day. All kinds of excuses have been given, but the maxim of the school boys ought to be hung as a sign of warning over our Publishing House doors: "Cheating never thrives."

THE DEACONESS QUESTION.

W. A. Christian, W. J. Young, and this writer, at our last Conference session, offered a memorial to the General Conference asking that body "to take such steps as may be necessary to establish an order of deaconesses in our Church." A similar memorial was offered by some of the other Conferences, and it has provoked considerable discussion as to the method to be employed. The most of the discussion seems to be on the question of setting apart to the office. Shall they be ordained, or set apart by any special formula?

The idea in the mind of this writer at the time he signed the memorial offered in our Conference was not to establish a new department of Church work among us. He believes that we have at the present departments enough; indeed, the pastors, who are expected to bear upon their hearts all these various causes, feel that there are too many divisions already. For the present, at least, it looks as if this work could be managed by the missionary societies of the women. By very slight changes in their constitution both the foreign and the home missionary societies could provide for the deaconess work in their respective fields. The Foreign Missionary Society does its work through the "agency of female missionaries, teachers, physicians, and Bible readers," and all of these are "subject to the appointing power of the Bishop." Simply add the word "deaconess" to the above agencies, and the work is authorized in the foreign field. The Home Mission Society has a very broad platform in its second article. The latter part of the paragraph reads, "In providing religious instruction for the neglected and the destitute; and in otherwise aiding the cause of Christ." There will be no difficulty in amending this paragraph so as to include the work of the deaconess. All questions as to a special dress, special methods, special field, etc., could be left to these two societies to decide. No question of ordination need be agitated, but women can be secured to give their time to this special work.

DEFEAT OF BARBOUR RESOLUTION.

Was it cowardice, or ignorance, or wickedness, or partly all three, or what was it, that brought about the above result? The honorable gentlemen who spoke against the article informed us that it was their great love for the welfare of the State, their great fear that the Constitution would be loaded down with legislative enactments, that such a law would cause strife and bitterness among neighbors, that it was an untried experiment, full of disaster to the State, that it would damage the cause of temperance, that it was the movement of fanatics. Not one of the honorable gentlemen opposed the resolution because he was friendly to the saloon, or thought that it would damage the liquor traffic. No voice was raised to defend the saloon in debate. But when the time came to vote they voted in favor of the saloon, which no man had the courage to defend on the floor of the convention. They did not even have the courage to defeat the clause directly, but they inserted the following:

"The Legislature shall have full power of enacting local option or dispensary laws, or any other laws controlling, regulating, or prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors."

And this was done by a vote of 28 to 24, barely a quorum of the convention voting.

It is to be hoped that the gentlemen will have a roll-call on the question when the measure comes up in the convention, so that everybody may know just where everybody stood. Further comment is reserved until the final action is taken. Of course, the question is not settled. The flood-tide of public sentiment is rising, and the dam which protects the drunkard-makers will be swept away, and the saloon and their supporters along with it.

In every age the best and most welcome word that a poor humanity can hear is the glad command, "In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise."

NOTHING BUT NEWS.

"Here comes a religious paper of the guerrilla class that takes presiding elders' appointments from the 'organ' without giving credit. The reader would infer that the presiding elders had sent original copy to the 'guerrilla.' But investigation shows that only three or four out of ten have sent such copy, and that some of the others have specifically forbidden the copying of such appointments without proper credit. And yet the offending paper disregards even such a request! What sort of mania would you call that?"—Midland Methodist.

Such stuff as the above is puerile and disgusting to every genuine Methodist. The editor of this paper about two years ago, in order to show the absurdity of this sort of talk, sent a circular letter to the presiding elders of the Virginia Conference on this point, and some rare letters were received and published in the Recorder. To memory of them continueth among us even unto this day. But nothing in those letters approached the above paragraph in its offensive narrowness and high-churchism.

"Here comes a religious paper of the guerrilla class." What a choice utterance that is! It sounds like an echo of the speech made at our last Conference by Dr. Hoss. (The Midland often seems to be but an echo of the Nashville Advocate since Dr. R. N. Price resigned.) This paper of the "guerrilla class" and the "organ"! The Publican and the Pharisee! "I am so thankful that I am not the editor of that paper of the guerrilla class, but that I edit the 'organ,' duly indorsed and qualified to point out the awful sin of publishing presiding elders' appointments against their specific orders to the contrary, and duly guaranteed to keep silent, concerning the shameful and damaging deception of the book agents in the matter of the 'War Claim.' I am so thankful that I have learned how to 'strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.' I am so thankful that I know how to give tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and know how to forget the weightier matters of judgment, mercy, and faith. I know how to raise a stir about the all-important matter of publishing the great event of the quarterly appearance of the great presiding elder at the First church, without giving credit for so doing to the 'organ' over which I preside. The audacity of giving such publicity to the notice merits rebuke. It might become known to the people that the

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELTON,

THE PRESIDENT ROYCE soon discovered that the silent, undemonstrative young man from the farm, who was working his way through Hope college, possessed qualities that would perhaps develop into very great usefulness before his college course was ended, and he rapidly took him more and more into his confidence. This meant that by the end of June Edward was doing all the copying at the president's office, which was in one corner of the library building, and also beginning to assist a little in the president's correspondence during the vacation absence of the regular secretary.

It was this latter fact which led to a knowledge on Edward's part of certain facts connected with the college administration which ordinarily the students would know nothing about.

To understand this we must also enter into the relationship which had so quickly and yet not at all strangely sprung up between the president and the student. It was a remarkable characteristic of President Royce that he was openly frank in matters where a great many other men considered it necessary to be uncommunicative and mysteriously silent. He saw at once that Edward belonged to a not too common class of men who can be trusted to keep what is given them in confidence. And seeing that quality in him he not only respected it, but trusted it and even in time gave the young student a proof of his confidence by asking his opinion, a thing that a smaller mind would never have done. But President Royce had learned even in the comparatively short time he had been at the head of the college that the students had opinions on a great many matters and that even the president of a college might sometimes profit for himself and the college by trying to find out what their opinions were.

Coming up to his room in Rankin hall at this time in his summer's experience, Edward found a letter in his letter box from Mrs. Preston. It was dated at the southern camp and contained news that made Edward's thoughtful face grow even more serious as he read on.

After stating in a few lines that Edward's letter to her inclosing Willis' had led to her trip south to learn how her son was doing, Mrs. Preston went on:

It gives me much pain, much more than I can tell you, Mr. Blake, to say that Willis has fallen into evil ways down here. He was in the habit of drinking a little when in college. I knew that at the time, and I did all in my power to get him to give up his secret society suppers and leave all the drink alone. I knew I failed, for when he was home last holiday season he told me he had been drinking some. It seemed very strange to you, I have no doubt, that Willis should leave me alone on Christmas day last year. He came as an excuse his private theatrical entertainment, arranged by the society men. In reality I knew at the time that he was restless to be away from my restraint, so that he could more freely indulge in his growing habit. But all that is as nothing compared with the horror I feel growing on me as I see into what his habit has grown since he came down into the camp. The army canteen is a constant net to the soldiers, and it has been the one great source of temptation to my son here. I have asked myself a thousand times why our government sanctioned this destructive force. I am only a poor, weak woman, and I do not know all about the nice technicalities of the law, but the plain fact that I do know is that the United States, through its national laws, allows the army canteen to sell liquor to its own soldiers within their own camp and actually tempts hundreds of boys like mine by maintaining and defending by law an institution that is killing more bodies and souls than are ever slain on the battlefields of all the nations of the world put together.

I came down here two weeks ago. The second day after I came I found Willis intoxicated. He was not on duty, and the offense was not punished. Three days ago he was put in the guardhouse for insulting an officer while under the influence of liquor. Yesterday he was taken from the guardhouse to the camp hospital, and he lies there now, raging with a fever, the camp fever, that has already proved fatal to several of the regiment.

And I am sitting here in the tent, by this son of mine, telling you of his shame and of my anguish. I do not know how this fever will terminate. I will nurse him back to life, if it be God's will and he give me strength. But if he allows me to save his body, what hope have I for his soul? The report now comes that the regiment may be ordered to active service in the Philippines in the fall. If Willis recovers, I do not think any pleading on my part can prevent his going. He will re-enlist and go there for the sake of the excitement and chance of real fighting. And from what I learn of conditions in Manila the rum and the whisky and the beer flow like water in the streets and all through the camps. Great God! I cannot help crying as I think of what it will mean to my only boy. Is there no spot on earth under our flag where our so-called Christian civilization can prohibit this evil? Even the papers printed in our own country, the magazines that are published by men of culture and education, by men who sit in cushioned pews on Sunday and complacently pay so much a year to support the gospel, print great advertisements in which the liquor dealer boasts of the carloads of liquor that have been shipped into the Philippines since those islands, inhabited by so-called heathen, became our property. And these liquor advertisements, which pay such a fat revenue to the publishers of these so-called journals of civilization, face our Christian preachers and our church members and our inner home circles, and what do we do about it? But, oh, worst of all is this army canteen! How shall my boy resist this hourly temptation thrust so hideously and persistently in his face?

Mr. Blake, I say this to you, knowing that you have come to love my son and knowing also that your influence over him has been greater than even my own, at times. I almost wish he could die here, if only he died sober and repentant, rather than rise from this illness and go out into the world to fall, as I am sure he will fall, into this hell. And if he falls, at whose door shall we put part of the blame? In God's great judgment shall the head of this nation be counted guiltless? Shall the government go unpunished?

Willis has a little volume of poems in his hand. He asked for it as soon as he was brought here from the guardhouse. In his delirium I have tried to take the book out of his hand, but he clings to it so that I cannot remove it. He has repeatedly mentioned your name and also your sister's. If there was any hope of your doing anything for Willis by coming here, I should beg you to come, but I do not see how it would do any good. If you pray, pray for me. The good God help me! For all else seems mockery. LUCILE PRESTON.

Probably in all his life Edward had never felt more deeply moved than by this remarkable letter from his chum's mother.

He read it again, and for the first time in his young life a horror grew up in him toward the liquor business, an indignation that was destined to burn in his soul all his life, started from the fuel cast into it by that mother's bleeding heart.

It was the very next day that his new experience with the new president came to him.

He was in the office answering a few letters at the president's dictation. The president was going away for a little vacation in July, and several items of college business were being dispatched before he went.

About 10 o'clock in the forenoon some one rang the bell, and Edward, whose table was nearest the door, opened it.

"Is the president in?" the man standing there abruptly asked, and without waiting for an answer the man, seeing President Royce at his desk, stepped into the office.

"Mr. Rankin!" the president exclaimed as he rose.

"Yes, sir," replied the other stiffly. "I thought I would come and see you personally on the matter we have been corresponding about."

The president looked at his visitor with a light in his eye that was new to Edward. He was calm and dignified, but there was the look on his face of those who face battle.

"Yes, sir. Shall I ask Mr. Blake, my secretary, to retire?"

"No, sir. On the contrary, I have nothing to conceal as to the object of my visit. In fact, the sooner it is made public to the trustees and to the world all the better."

"No doubt," replied the president, and he looked directly at Mr. Rankin. "Are you willing that Mr. Blake take down a report of our interview for publication?"

Mr. Rankin hesitated a moment. He had come in evidently under great ex-

"Yes, sir, I'm willing to have the interview reported."

He was a florid man, with a tendency to corpulence, and looked as if he might some time be in danger of apoplexy.

"Yes, sir, I'm willing to have the interview reported. I have nothing to conceal. In fact, I have spoken to more than one of the trustees about the matter. And as far as I am concerned I am willing to have it go out to all the world."

"You may take a report of the conversation, then, Blake," said the president, as he motioned Mr. Rankin to a seat. And during the next half hour Edward Blake, college student, put down on paper one of the most astonishing interviews that the educational world of modern times in America has ever known.

CHAPTER V.

"You understand my views perfectly well on the matter of Professor Clark's teaching," began Mr. Rankin, after a pause, during which he made a somewhat successful attempt to calm himself.

"Yes, I think I do, if your last letter to me expresses exactly your views."

"It expresses them just as I want. Your answer to that letter is my excuse for this personal visit. I understand from your reply that probably nothing will be done to modify or restrict Professor Clark's teaching in his department. Do I understand you correctly?"

"You do, sir," replied the president quietly.

"Then of course you understand what I shall do."

"Wait a minute!" exclaimed the president, while the light in his eye flashed in that same way that Edward had noted before. "Let us face the situation just as it really is. Professor Clark has been teaching in Hope college now for five years. His department of political economy and history has attracted students from other states. He has, to the best of my knowledge, been teaching in his department the very truths that young men and women in a Christian college ought to know. Of late he has begun a series of lectures on the moral aspect of economic questions. He has begun to apply the principles of the sermon on the mount and the golden rule to business methods, and he has cited certain specific kinds of business that do not square with the teachings of the Bible. Now, sir, as I understand your objection, one of the kinds of business cited by Professor Clark happens to be the kind that you are engaged in, and unfortunately it does not happen to square with the golden rule in every particular, and you want the college through its president and board of trustees to advise Professor Clark to modify his lectures or even cease them altogether because they are offensive to certain men who have been financial friends of the college. You have even gone so far in your correspondence with me as to threaten to withhold a bequest to the college unless these lectures of Professor Clark are discontinued or modified. Am I right in my statement of the facts?"

"It is your way of putting it!" exclaimed Mr. Rankin, with growing excitement. "Professor Clark is teaching partisan doctrines in the classroom. They are the same doctrines that are being advocated by the—"

"But, sir," interrupted the president, "Professor Clark has done nothing but apply the teachings of the Bible to modern business life. If the result happens to tally with one or two of the party doctrines you mention, is that his fault?"

"I say he has no right to be teaching such stuff in college. That is not what he was appointed to do. It is none of his business to pry into the methods of my business. Shall I allow my son to sit in a classroom and listen to a professor who calls me in so many words a liar and a thief in my business methods?"

"I didn't know that Professor Clark had ever mentioned your name in the classroom," remarked the president mildly. The angrier Mr. Rankin grew the calmer the head of the college continued to be.

"He might as well. The teaching is an insult to every student that does any thinking. The department of political economy is not the place for partisan or religious instruction. There are a good many others who feel just as I do. President Royce, you are provoking a storm of protest from all quarters that will prove disastrous to the welfare of the college. I am not alone in this matter. There are a good many men who have heretofore helped the college financially who will not give it a cent in the future until the teaching in the department of political economy is different from what it now is."

"Will you answer me one question, Mr. Rankin?" the president asked after a pause, while Edward, as much excited in his way as Mr. Rankin was in his, turned over a leaf and waited for the next word.

"Do you candidly think that Professor Clark has been right in his conclusions as to the moral aspect of certain business methods? Entirely aside from the question as to his right to advocate such teachings in his department, is the teaching itself true? Do the methods of the business firms that he mentions in his lecture square with the sermon on the mount and the golden rule or not?"

"That has nothing to do with the question!" retorted Mr. Rankin, as his face grew redder than ever under the excitement of the moment. "The chair of political economy and history is not the place for the discussion of religious questions. The economic questions of the mercantile world are separate and apart from religion. You cannot mix the two."

"I know they very often are not mixed in any great quantity," replied the president calmly, "but I was of the opinion that the world is just waking up to the tremendous fact that all economic questions are in reality moral questions and that to leave morality and religion out of the discussion of them is really to fail to discuss them at all. If Professor Clark in his lectures has shown, as I think he has, that certain transactions in the mercantile world are contrary to the moral laws of God's universe, then it seems to me that he is teaching in the department of political economy just the truth that has always needed to be taught, and if it had been taught by professors of political economy years ago we might have a different business world from the one we have now."

"I do not understand the matter as you do at all, sir," replied Mr. Rankin, "and it is no use to discuss it. Our failure to agree in our correspondence shows me plainly that we never can agree in this interview. I understand plainly that it is your intention to do nothing in the matter, or the board of trustees?"

"I do not know what action the board of trustees may take," replied the president slowly, "but I, for my part, shall never attempt to interfere with Professor Clark as long as he teaches what he is teaching now. I may say, in fact, that I rejoice in the work he is doing, and I shall uphold him in it for the good of the students and the college generally."

"Then the college can look to some one else for funds to build up its endowment," replied Mr. Rankin stiffly. "I do not give a cent to the institution as long as the present method of instruction is employed by the professor of political economy. As I said before"—Mr. Rankin rose and moved across the study—"I am not the only man who feels this way. Hope college will lose thousands of dollars as long as Clark is allowed to teach his doctrines."

The president rose and stood calmly by his desk. He looked thoughtfully at Rankin, but did not speak.

"I shall inform the trustees of my determination, sir. It is possible they may have different views from yours, sir."

"It is altogether possible they may," said the president quietly.

Mr. Rankin had reached the door.

"I bid you good day, sir," he said coldly and went out.

The president remained standing for a minute with a look on his face that Edward understood in part at least

In the intense stiffness that followed Mr. Rankin's departure a good deal of thinking was going on in that little room.

Finally the president broke the silence by saying:

"The time will come, Blake, when it will not be believed that such a scene as we have just witnessed could occur in America. It is simply one manifestation out of a good many that you and I may live to witness of the anger and opposition roused by the greed of wealth and acquisition when brought face to face with the teachings of Jesus. It is the same spirit that he faced and rebuked in his own age when he said, 'How hardly shall they that trust in riches enter into the kingdom of heaven.'"

Edward hesitated to ask any questions, but from his experience with the president he had come to love him more than he feared him. "What effect will this have on you, sir?" he ventured to ask.

The president did not answer for a little while. His face was very thoughtful.

"It depends on the attitude of the trustees. I do not know how a majority of them feel. I know that some of them will urge the need of the money at just this time in our history. Of course it is public knowledge that the college is very much embarrassed just at present for funds. But what shall we do, my boy, in the face of such a situation as confronts us now? Shall we yield to the demands of men of means who do not wish certain things taught in college when that teaching conflicts with the very methods which have made possible the great wealth of the men who object? There is a great principle at stake here. It is the sacred right of free and unrestrained speech when that speech is perfectly right and proper and imperatively needed for the good of an educated man. Professor Clark is giving his class in political economy exactly the ethical truths they need to train them up in ways of Christian integrity in business affairs. That is one of the things this college was founded to do. Hope college was started by devout Christian men, who put in the charter the words, 'We desire to found a Christian college, where the foundation principles of the Christian religion shall be inculcated no less than the humanities, and, indeed, made foremost in the training of the youth who shall receive instruction there.' If this purpose of the founders of the college is to be carried out, it can only be done by making all our instruction vitally Christian. There is nothing in the subject of political economy that bars it out of the Christian education. Indeed, as I told Mr. Rankin, the very foundation of any true political economy must be its moral account of the relations between man and man. And that is just what Professor Clark has begun to do. If the actual result is a necessary criticism of the business that Mr. Rankin makes his money by, it is, of course, unfortunate for him personally, but it does not disprove the truth of Clark's teaching, and it certainly ought not to put a stop to it." (To be continued.)

JOINTS LIKE RUSTY HINGES are among the consequences of rheumatism. The sufferer can move knees and elbows, but the effort makes him wince. He rejoices when a good rubbing with Perry Davis' Painkiller drives the stiffness out and brings the freedom of motion back. No wonder our grandfathers believed heartily in this beneficent liniment. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

"I am personally acquainted with some of your former students, all of whom are now holding lucrative positions, and they attribute their success to the thorough training obtained at your college, and speak in most glowing terms of you and your college."

PETERSBURG LETTER.

Dear Editor,—At this writing, February 22d, mother earth is under the fleecy mantle of "the beautiful snow," which, no doubt, is a great blessing to the soil and growing crops. The biting cold has made the generous persons of our community think about and respond to the needs of God's poor, who are ever with us. In our churches (the same spirit may be in other churches here, too) in this city, especially in the Epworth League, we observe a cheerful willingness to aid the needy and poor. If this isn't a good indication of the presence and spirit of Jesus among our people, then I don't know what would prove that such is the case.

I am glad to note that the revival spirit is in our city. Last Sunday our indefatigable brother, L. W. Guyer, in the Sunday school at West Street, and also at night, had a number of conversions. Despite the unfavorable weather, the meetings at West Street have continued, and this harvesting noted, I trust, will be followed by other ingatherings.

Rev. J. A. Thomas, pastor of Wesley, is reported to have done some excellent preaching in the West Street services. Other meetings will follow in due time. I trust Petersburg will get a great spiritual shaking up the like of which has not been experienced for years.

Rev. J. T. Mastin, agent of the Virginia Conference Orphanage, spent the month of January in this city in the interest of the important work he represents. He had the cordial co-operation of our preachers here, but the weather was not favorable for the most part, and the fact that we have in the city a Methodist female orphanage, may have had somewhat to do with his success not being greater. Still, under the circumstances, our genial, zealous brother did very well indeed. The orphanage movement is a popular one, and our Conference is fortunate in having such a man as Bro. Mastin to work it up. The orphanage has the advantage of an excellent location, which is a big thing in its favor. What a pity it is that Randolph-Macon College is not in Richmond, too.

The recently completed electric railway from Richmond to Petersburg is another bond that binds the two cities together, as it were. The day can't be very distant when the two cities will feel that they have a great deal in common, and a most neighborly and friendly feeling for each other will characterize both.

After residing here for a brief period I am convinced that Petersburg is decidedly modest in publishing to the world her resources, her industries, and her enterprises. I am glad to know that the Southern Female College, located here, is doing well. This institution has a good past history. Its present patronage, I learn, is very good.

The State Association of Sunday Schools of all denominations will be held here in March. Arrangements have been made to give the delegates a cordial reception.

The Rev. C. H. Crawford, representing the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia, has been in our midst, and preached in a great many of our churches. The battle against the saloon is certainly on. A live, burning question is temperance, and every year it is growing. The education of our children as to the evils of alcoholism, and the fact that business corporations are demanding sober employees, I regard as great aids in putting a stop to the accursed traffic. But so much remains to be done to put down the monster evil.

Some days ago the figure of an aged resident of Halifax county might have been seen on a prominent street of this city who was in trouble from this accursed trifle, which makes often the innocent suffer as well as the guilty. The son of this venerable man is here in jail under indictments for manufacturing illicit or "moonshine" whiskey, and he wired the old man to come down and give a bond, that he might be free again, but this proved to be a bigger thing than he could manage probably by mortgaging his farm, and the sight of the old man under these sad circumstances was pathetic indeed. I don't know whether he has arranged to help his son out of his trouble or not, but this is an illustration of how the drink curse makes hearts ache wherever its terrible blight falls. In this case trouble is brought to father, a mother, wife and children, who must suffer in consequence. The inspired writer says: "The way of the transgressor is hard." True; but alas! the "hard" sometimes is not confined to the one sinning. Wife and children, too, not infrequently suffer.

A DEBT OF HONOR AND A NOBLE PEOPLE.

More than two decades have passed since the old Brunswick Circuit was divided. The four churches taken from the Brunswick charge were organized into the West Brunswick Circuit. Soon after this division, the Quarterly Conference of West Brunswick appointed a committee to adjust and secure its interests in the parsonage at Lawrenceville. But an effectual check to a division or sale of the parsonage property at that time came from two sources. First, an appeal to West Brunswick against pressing its claims, made by the pastor of Brunswick, Rev. D. M. Wallace, who had been the pastor of the old circuit when it was divided, and whose appeal had great weight with his former parishioners. He pointed out that the amounts contributed by all the churches for ministerial support before the division had barely amounted to a support for the pastor and his family. Now that four churches had been taken from him, and with those left him dissatisfied because of the division, the question of a support was doubtful, and they would jeopardize his support still more if they insisted at this time on the payment of the amount due them from his circuit. With his appeal came a most strenuous protest from the leading Methodist of Brunswick, Bro. Sharpe, of Lawrenceville. He was indignant over the division. He hoped to have the four churches restored at the next session of the Annual Conference. He urged that to divide the parsonage property would help to fix the division and interfere with the movement to restore the bounds of the old circuit. So, under the urgency of both the appeal and the protest, West Brunswick did not press its claims for immediate adjustment. Meanwhile it had secured a parsonage, and managed to meet its payments, selling a part of the parsonage land to meet the last payment. Year after year went by, and the question remained unsettled. But last year, when West Brunswick decided to repair its parsonage, it was found necessary to dispose of the matter, as it obstructed responses from our own people. To all appeals for contributions for repairing the parsonage would come the reply: "Find out first what Brunswick intends doing in connection with our claims!" To dispose of the question became a necessity. A committee was appointed to lay the matter before the Quarterly Conference of the Brunswick Circuit. The simple facts were stated to that Conference, the whole question submitted on moral grounds solely, and the assurance given that if Brunswick, after due inquiry and consideration, decided that it owed West Brunswick nothing, such a decision would be accepted without hard feelings and as a finality. Of course, it was urged by West Brunswick that as it had received nothing—neither interest, principal, nor rent—something was morally due it. As I was present, and assisted in first presenting the claim of West Brunswick, I wish to bear personal testimony to the noble spirit in which our statements were received. The matter was an overwhelming surprise to that Quarterly Conference. At that very session it was burdened with the question of improving its own parsonage, so as to make it meet the needs of their pastor. But the only question they raised was, has not the money been paid? And this question they were willing to leave to the statements of such older men of West Brunswick as Capt. J. R. Manson, Dr. J. M. Jones, Mr. Sydney Kennedy and others. They never raised, much less urged, the question of applying the statute of limitation. Speaker after speaker stated that if no money had been paid something was still due. They did not wish to use the property of another circuit without paying for it, even if that circuit had neglected to press its claims when it ought to have done so. They appointed a committee of arbitration to meet with one from our circuit. This joint committee agreed upon two hundred and fifty dollars as the amount that Brunswick ought to pay. The Quarterly Conferences ratified this agreement. The pastor, Rev. W. G. Boggs, put aside his own parsonage claims, and went forward in collecting the amount to be paid us. Last month, by the time agreed upon, a check was sent us for the full amount of $250.

As pastor of West Brunswick Circuit I feel unwilling to let this nobility of view and action on the part of the Brunswick people pass into the silence and darkness of oblivion without recording this statement for others to know of their good works. It was really a debt due in the main by the fathers of the present generation. It was like the vindication of a father's honor and the meeting of a father's obligation by children to whom the inheritance had passed. It expressed unselfishness. It cost self-sacrifice. It is worthy of the highest, "Well done!"

A MODEST REQUEST.

My dear brethren who have received the Virginia Conference Annual for 1901 will please take the book and turn to the opening sermon, on page 90, recently credited by Bro. Lipscomb to "Rev. D. G. C. Butts," and make the following corrections—that is if you are interested:

1. Do me the kindness to put my name under the title of the sermon, and tell your children.

I am justly proud of having my honest effort to preach the truth appreciated by my brethren in the way indicated by the adoption of the resolution asking that that sermon be printed in the Annual. I seek no higher commendation among men than the confidence of my Conference.

2. On page 90, sixth line from the bottom, the plural form, "sins," should take the place of the singular.

At the 4th line from the bottom, same page, insert a (3) between "5" and "The," so that it shall read, "(3) The power of choice is overthrown."

In the 3rd paragraph, page 92, 5th line, insert the two omitted words, "of times," and let the last clause read, "'That we who first trusted in Christ' should illustrate in our redeemed moral nature the righteousness of God."

In the 4th paragraph the Scripture cited is Isaiah 53, and not "Isaiah 3," as printed.

I am certainly very much obliged to Bro. Lipscomb for his note in the Recorder of the 13th.

Yours very truly,

D. G. C. BUTTS.

THE DANISH WEST INDIES.

[As these islands are likely to become the property of the United States, our readers are given some facts about them.—Editor Recorder.]

"The Danish West Indies" is the title of a monograph by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, which will appear as a part of the forthcoming issue of the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance. It describes the islands included in the recently ratified treaty of the United States and Denmark, by which the islands of St. Thomas, St. John, and St. Croix are to be transferred to the United States. These islands, it shows, lie off the eastern coast of Porto Rico, and are, in fact, a mere extension of the marine elevation of which Cuba, Jamaica, Haiti and Porto Rico are the principal representatives, while they also form a connecting link between the Greater and Lesser Antilles. St. Thomas, the best known of the group, lies 38 miles due east of the northeastern extremity of Porto Rico; St. John lies 12 miles east of St. Thomas; while St. Croix lies about 50 miles south of St. John and St. Thomas, and 60 miles southeast of the southeastern point of Porto Rico. Two small islands already belonging to the United States, Vieques and Culebra, which were obtained through the cession of Porto Rico, lie directly between Porto Rico and this newly added group.

The islands are small, with a comparatively small producing capacity, their chief importance being by reason of the harbors which they offer and their value as a strategic as well as general commercial standpoint. St. Croix, the largest of them, is about 20 miles long, and from one to five miles wide, with an area of about 80 square miles, and a population of about 20,000. It is also the most productive of the islands, a considerable area being devoted to the production of sugar cane and tropical fruits, and agriculture being the occupation of a large proportion of the population. There are two towns on the island, Fredriksted, with a population of 3,700, and Christiansted, with a population of 5,500. The latter is located upon the chief harbor of the island, which, however, is choked with mud, and of less importance than the harbors of either of the other islands. St. John, the smallest of the islands, has an area of but about 21 square miles, and a population of only about 1,000, and a comparatively small cultivable area; its chief value being in its possibilities for harbor purposes, the natural harbor of Coral Bay being described as one of the best protected natural harbors in the West Indies, but at present little used. St. Thomas, which lies nearest to Porto Rico, is by far the most important in its present availability for harbor purposes, the harbor of Charlotte Amalia having been for more than a century recognized as one of the best, if not the best, natural harbors in the entire West Indian group, and having been during all that time a central point as a harbor of refuge and point of exchange for merchandise and a coaling station for vessels from all parts of the world. With passages through which it is easily reached, a good depth of water, and excellent protection from the hurricanes to which that region is subject, it has long been regarded as an extremely valuable harbor, and when Denmark, in the early part of the nineteenth century, made it a free port, it became the distributing point for the commerce of the entire West Indian group. As a consequence, nearly the entire population of the island is clustered around the port of Charlotte Amalia, fully 10,000 of the 12,500 population living in this city, and less than 2,000 being engaged in agriculture.

The introduction of steam and electricity within the past few years have reduced greatly the importance of St. Thomas as a point for the distribution of commerce, since now all of the islands in the group are visited by regularly plying steamships, and the trade supplied by this process, instead of being compelled to rely upon the supplies formerly drawn from St. Thomas as a distributing point. The importance of the harbor, however, as a supply, repair, coaling and naval station has not been reduced, but rather increased; and with proper development, it will, it is believed, prove of great value, while the productive possibilities of the islands, especially St. Croix, in the class of articles so largely imported by the United States, tropical productions, will not be inconsiderable.

The population is chiefly colored, descendants of former slaves, who were liberated in 1848; English being the chief language spoken, especially in the island of St. Thomas, which has been for many years a resort for vessels from English-speaking countries.

The imports into St. Thomas alone in 1900 amounted to $733,000, and those of St. Croix about $420,000. They consist chiefly of food stuffs and manufactures. The exports of St. Thomas in 1900 amounted to about $25,000, and those of St. Croix $275,000. The exports of St. Thomas were of a miscellaneous character, largely manufactures destined for neighboring islands; while those from St. Croix were chiefly sugar and other tropical products for the United States markets. Of the $733,000 worth of imports into St. Thomas in 1900, $363,266 were from the United States, $148,002 from Great Britain, $98,044 from other West Indies, $53,058 from Germany, $25,372 from Belgium, $20,742 from British North America, and $14,402 from Denmark. Of the imports, the most important were flour, $53,770; cotton goods, $60,343; hardware, $11,114; rum, $13,872; cigars, $19,007; butter and margarine, $16,497; cheese, $7,204; lard, $7,254, and other provisions, $21,128.

HIS MEMBERSHIP.

Some brethren down in Texas seem very much agitated as to the church membership of the Rev. H. C. Morrison. I did not know, and am surprised to learn, that they are so much interested in him. That these brethren may not be stirred up any longer over this matter, allow me, Mr. Editor, to state through your columns that I was in charge of the M. E. church, South, in Harrodsburg, Ky., and received Bro. Morrison by letter from the Lexington High Street church into our Church at the above mentioned place. I gave him a Church letter, which, when he received, he stated would not be given into any other denomination. This statement he also published. In six weeks after receiving this letter he replaced it in the church at Harrodsburg, Ky. He was recognized as a member of the Quarterly Conference and a local preacher among us. He met all his obligations as any other member by paying his quarterage, etc. Rev. H. C. Morrison was never a member of any other than the Southern Methodist Church, and has been legally since the day he was first received into her communion one of her best members. They undertook once to turn him out, but when the proceedings against him were put to the test it was found they were without law, and therefore null and void, hence all his religious life he has been a member of the M. E. Church, South.

WASHINGTON RELIGIOUS LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Senator Hansbrough has introduced a bill that ought to become a law. It is short, but comprehensive. It prohibits the sale of intoxicants in any building owned by the United States, or upon any government grounds. It is not conceivable that any considerable number of men in either branch of Congress would be willing to put themselves on record against this bill if it were to be voted upon, but there's the rub. It can be pigeon-holed and never voted upon, as numerous similar bills have been before, which kills it just as effectively as though a majority had voted against it, and no individual can be held responsible. Perhaps there will come a time when the moral element of the country will be sufficiently aroused to demand the legislation it wants from Congress. When that time comes Congress will pass the legislation.

Governor Taft's statements to the Senate committee on the Philippines have been notable for frankness. For instance, he said this week: "I did not favor our going to the Philippines. I was sorry at the time that we got them. But we are there. I see no other possible means of discharging that duty which chance has put upon us than to carry out the plan which I suggest. Any other plan would carry us back to where we now are. I am not disposed to concede, as yet, that, because there are dangers of corruption and a possibility of failure in the agents who are to be sent out there, we are not equal to the task. I believe that the American Government and the American people are exceedingly adaptable. We have had the experiments of other nations in dealing with people like these, and, with no other course before us that I conceive possible, I think we should not be justified in throwing these people back into absolutism."

Prof. Daniel C. Gilman, president of the board of trustees of the Carnegie Institution, has made a statement correcting the general impression that the institution would acquire real estate and erect buildings in Washington. In that statement he said, "We have no idea either to acquire real estate or erect buildings in Washington. The house at the corner of Fifteenth and K streets, which has been leased for the transaction of routine business, will be the principal site and headquarters of the Carnegie Institution. The yearly income from the $10,000,000 which was given by Mr. Carnegie will be devoted to original investigation in fields where it is considered that investigation is most necessary. If a scientist, for instance, is stationed at Harvard, or any other university, for that matter, and has reached a point in his particular branch whence he is unable to proceed for lack of funds, we shall supply him with the money necessary to the continuance of his work. During the approaching spring and summer I intend to make an extended trip through Europe to consult investigators abroad, and find out what will be the first work necessary to be accomplished. After obtaining their views, I shall return to this country and consider the question of scope and outline of our work."

The Jewish Missionary Conference, which opened to-day in Washington, is both interesting and important. Justice Harlan, of the United States Supreme Court, participated in the open parliament, conducted by Rev. S. E. Braun, of Easton, Pa., which was the feature of the opening session, and delegates to the Conference are all Christians connected with missionary work among the Hebrews in various sections of the country.

"If you asked Hon. Galusha A. Grow, sometimes called the Father of the House of Representatives, of which he was once Speaker, because of his long service there," said a friend of the veteran statesman, "what single thing he got the most pleasure out of, I feel sure that he would say the little Sunday school of about 100 scholars that he conducts, when at home, at the Grow homestead, Glenwood, Susquehanna county, Penn. The school was organized forty years ago by Mrs. F. P. Grow, the Congressman's sister-in-law. Its membership includes almost everybody in the immediate neighborhood, and it has sent its scholars all over the world, some of them to do missionary work in far-away China. Those who have seen Mr. Grow conducting the little school do not need to be told that it is a pleasure to him."

Dr. Easton, of the Eastern Presbyterian church, preached an interesting and scholarly sermon this week on "The Immortality of Society Beyond Death," taking his text from St. Luke 20: 38: "For He is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto Him." He summed up his belief thusly: "1. We shall be ourselves. There is nothing in death to destroy consciousness of personal identity. We shall begin life there in spirit as we end life here. There is nothing in death to change character for better or worse. Character is the eternal robe or garment of the soul. 2. We shall exist associately. Social relations will be maintained, but we are distinctly taught that all the relations of this world will not exist in the other life. They neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God. 3. The wider the relations of the greater social order beyond—The thought is no less than this, that all who have ever lived or died in this world are still alive, and alive in their conscious personality. And thus the thought of the immortality of society carries ourselves and the scenes of this world over into the life to come. But how changed will be the scene in many respects!"

Dr. J. M. Schick, pastor of the "President's church," preached his second anniversary sermon Sunday to a congregation which included the President and his son Archibald. His theme was the parable of the sower,

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON X, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 9.

Text of the Lesson, Acts viii, 3-17.
Memory Verses, 3-5—Golden Text, Acts viii, 4—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

3. "As for Saul, he made havoc of the church." The Revised Version says that he had waste the church, but our Lord had said, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matt. xvi, 18). So that this imprisonment of Christians and power of Saul and the authorities over them did not really hurt the church any more than the fiery furnace or the lions hurt Daniel and his friends.

4. "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." So the disciples could say to Saul and his company as Joseph said to his brethren, "Ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good to save much people alive" (Gen. i, 20). When we are persecuted and in the midst of trial, it seems very difficult to see any good in it, and not to see our persecutors, but faith sees only God and is quiet because He controls all people and all events. These scattered preachers of good tidings were not the apostles, but all except the apostles (verse 1), and they were just the Lord's messengers with the Lord's message (Hag. i, 13). If all believers now were ready to tell to others the love and grace of God, telling His salvation from day to day (Ps. lxxi, 15, 24), how soon the gospel might be preached to every creature!

5-8. "Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them." Philip was the second of the seven who had been appointed to minister to the needy in things temporal, and now that Stephen had been so honored and promoted he is also honored as the Lord's messenger. If we are content to do the ordinary work of the daily life, the Lord will in His own time lead us into greater service. Very helpful words on this are found in II Sam. xv, 15; I Chron. xxviii, 21. In verses 4, 12, 25 we get a good idea of the preaching of those days. They preached Christ; they preached the word of the Lord and the things concerning the kingdom of God. As Philip preached the Lord wrought with and through him, confirming the word with signs following (Mark xvi, 20), and, seeing the miracles and hearing the message, the people with one accord gave heed, and there was great joy in that city. Whether the messenger be the woman of Samaria or Philip the evangelist, if Christ is preached the Spirit works, and whenever Christ is truly received there follows joy and peace (Ps. xv, 13).

9, 10. The adversary who opposes God and exalts himself is always to the front ever since he slandered God to Eve in Eden. He is seen in the willfulness and self assertion of Cain, in the endeavor of the Babel builders to make themselves a name and in all who oppose themselves to God and His truth from Cain to the one who shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every god, so that he, as God, shall sit in the temple of God showing himself that he is God (Dan. xi, 36; II Thess. ii, 4). This Simon, like Theudas of chapter v, 36, was just one of the great host who magnify themselves and always find a following. As I write a man in Chicago, whom many follow and who seems to preach the gospel, has just given out that he is Elijah. And so it goes and will till Jesus comes.

11, 12. Bewitching people with sorcery might possibly describe many of the teachings of today which captivate such multitudes. A great following is not sufficient proof that the leader is right, nor are few followers necessarily an evidence that the leader is wrong.

13. "Simon himself believed also, was baptized, continued with Philip and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs." The power of God is able to break the hardest heart, and the fact that Simon was baptized and continued with Philip after he believed would seem to indicate a real conversion. The sequel in verses 18 to 24 may indicate, however, that Simon had not truly received the Lord Jesus, or they may mean that he was not right in the matter of the gift of the Spirit. If he had no part in Christ, he certainly was not saved, but if Peter meant that he had no part in this gift of the Holy Spirit he was just in the condition in which most church members are, and it may have been in reference to serving God that his heart was not right. Simon the sorcerer is not a comfortable study. There is much of himself from first to last and little, if any, of Christ even after he believed.

14. "Now, when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John." These two who are so prominent in the early chapters are still evidently the foremost among the apostles and specially honored by the others. Notice what it was the people of Samaria had received. They had received the word of God, and, like the Thessalonians, they doubtless received it, not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh in those who believe (I Thess. ii, 13). Our Lord Himself said to His Father on the night before His crucifixion, "I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest Me, and they have received them" (John xvii, 8). We give our Lord pleasure when we receive His word. It is to be received with meekness and then held fast and held forth (Jas. i, 21; Tit. i, 9; Phil. ii, 16).

15, 16. "Who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost." They were somewhat like the apostles and other believers before Pentecost. They had believed, were baptized and had become children of God and temples of the Holy Ghost, but they had not been endued with the power which all believers need to enable them to serve the living and true God. All who truly receive Christ are saved and have become children of God (John i, 12) and temples of the Holy Spirit, who dwells in every believer, but it is possible for such to be only babes and carnal (I Cor. vi, 19, 20; iii, 1, 2), and therefore the necessity of being filled with the Spirit and endued with power to live the life of faithful testimony.

17. "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." Having prayed (verse 15), they now with expectation lay hands on them, and the special gift of the Spirit is received. So also did Paul at Ephesus (chapter xix, 5, 6). Our Lord's words, "Ask, and it shall be given you," are in connection with these others, "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him" (Luke xi, 9, 13).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 9, "The Secret of Endurance"—Text, Heb. xi, 24-27; Ex. xxxiii, 9-23.

"As seeing Him who is invisible."

Moses had a great work in hand. He had been the chief actor in the insurrection of the Hebrew slaves against their Egyptian masters. After a series of marvelous natural disasters to the land a great horde had assembled in the vicinity of Mount Horeb, in the peninsula of Sinai. The skill shown in management of affairs thus far was of high order, but also small in comparison with that needed for the task ahead. This undisciplined mass of humanity must be fed, and that in a wilderness, while they had come from the most fertile land in the world. They must fight their way through hostile tribes trained to incessant war, and they had never wielded a more soldierly weapon than a shepherd's staff. They must be taught self government and formed into a nation that had never been trained to exercise authority, but only to obey.

Other men have had great tasks to perform, but who ever had one so stupendous (and apparently hopeless) as this?

Moses' success is due almost wholly to his grasp of a truth which few men have ever acquired so fully as he did. He undoubtedly was endowed with unusual ability in many particulars and had unusual opportunities of culture, but the secret of his greatness was his intimacy with God.

He had in some manner come to a consciousness that Yahveh, whose name he had first learned among the Kenites, was the sole existent God. He had in forty years with Jeshio and in the Sinai wilderness come to views of His nature such as no one before had ever known. He believes that God regards him personally with favor and has charged him with the work of delivering the Hebrews from slavery. He believes God has far-reaching plans for him linked with moral purposes. He realizes his own incompetency to rule and develop such a crude mass of men.

He earnestly craves to know the way of Jehovah. He wants to know His nature and plan. If this people are to go into Canaan, this God, whose abode had been in Horeb, must go with them or they could not go up from that place. The assurance comes to Moses, "My presence shall go, and I will give thee rest." This abiding presence of God with them would distinguish and separate Israel from all other people.

What wonder that Moses wished to see some form of God! The people could not or would not grasp the idea of Jehovah without some visible form. Hence the golden calf and the age long struggle with idol shapes of varied kinds until after the Babylonish captivity and the fulfillment of all desires in the appearance of Jesus Christ.

The secret of Moses' power and patient endurance was his attitude toward God as if he could and did see Him. God was to him the most real existence in all the world. He endured as if he saw Him, he acted as if he talked with Him face to face.

The secret is open for us also. Does Jesus seem to you as if you could see and talk openly with Him? It can be so.

The Cycle of Truth.

What a marvelous completeness there is in a Scripture record! It rounds the cycle of truth, opening with a paradise in which there was neither mourning nor crying nor travail; narrating in pages stained with blood and tears man's bitter heritage, self caused, of weariness and woe, and ending with the new heavens and earth, on the air of which no stifled groan or sigh or dirge can ever break. The pain of misunderstanding will be no more, since we shall see eye to eye and know as we are known. The pain of suspense will be no more, because we shall behold the purposes of God in their ultimate and beneficent outworking. The pain of waning love will be no more, because in that happy land, as the children sing, love is kept by a Father's hand and cannot die. The pain of bereavement will be no more, because death cannot intrude into that glad city of life. No cypress tree grows there, no mourning garb is ever seen in those streets, no funeral cortege ever winds its slow length along them.—F. B. Meyer.

The Evanescent and Abiding.

Rightly to estimate the value of the evanescent and the abiding is to choose that which is not limited to time nor affected by misfortunes nor stifled by untoward and uncontrollable circumstances. It is possible to those who have thus chosen in the midst of suffering from the worst afflictions known to men to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, for they look not at the things which are seen but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.—Independent.

Give Away the Truth.

Do not die disgraced. If you are rich in the truth of the gospel, give it away. Do not hoard it; use it. If you have felt its gracious influence upon your own life, if it has made your past more endurable, your future more hopeful, let others share in your wealth. Give it away in the words of your lips, in the acts of your hands, the expression of your face, the spirit of your life.—Universalist Leader.

Weekday Piety.

A Sunday religion is not enough. It must be followed up with a weekday piety. Life in all its relations must be devoted to God's service. Christianity affects the entire man and must appear constantly in what one says and does.—Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Christianity means a subordination of rights to love.—Rev. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York.

High and Noble Destiny.

Faith in God as revealed in Christ means faith in a high and noble human destiny.—Rev. Dr. Ruen Thomas, Boston.

Foundation of Christian Love.

Christian love is founded in a good conscience and a pure heart.—Bishop Edward G. Andrews, Methodist, Pittsburg.

The Greatest Work.

No man ever did a greater thing than that of leading a soul to Christ.—Rev. Dr. William J. Holtzclaw, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Ten Commandments Practical.

The Ten Commandments are the most practical things under the sun.—Rev. T. E. Monroe, Congregationalist, Akron, O.

The Broadening of Life.

Nothing broadens life so much as working for the woes of mankind.—Rev. Dr. John F. Carson, Presbyterian, New York.

Carrying the Truth.

God gives men a knowledge of the truth in order that it may be carried to the world in need of it.—Rev. McLeod M. Pearce, Presbyterian, St. Louis.

True Self Culture.

Self culture by a Christian must be along the line of inwrought tendency. Work out what God works in.—Rev. Dr. Landrum, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Harmony of Nature and Revelation.

The more perfectly men understand the teachings of nature the more completely they harmonize with the Bible.—Rev. Dr. Croft, Methodist, Detroit, Mich.

Be More Charitable.

The gospel would be more efficacious if among Christian people there were more charity to men, even sinful men.—Rev. Dr. John T. Christian, Baptist, Chicago.

The Starting Point.

The cross of Christ is the starting point, the constraining force in the Christian's strenuous effort for attainment.—Rev. W. G. Woodbridge, Presbyterian, Atlanta, Ga.

Leaning on the Divine Arm.

The more of a Christian a man is the less confidence he has in himself. He puts his constant trust in a strength that is above that of any human arm.—Rev. Frank Goodchild, Baptist, New York.

Uplifting the Fallen.

Do not be afraid of soiling your hands or character in an effort to lead a soul to Christ, even though that soul be in the slums of vice and shame.—Rev. Dr. William J. Holtzclaw, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Carry a Blessing With You.

Jesus Christ wherever he went took a blessing with him. Wherever the Christian goes he, too, should take a blessing with him, going in the spirit of Christ.—Rev. F. M. Larkin, Methodist, San Francisco.

Exaltation Through Humility.

Get the real vision of God and in the light of his face see yourself, and you will be humble, and humility, instead of degrading, will exalt and crown you.—Rev. Thornton Whiting, Presbyterian, Lexington, Ky.

Religion Is Natural.

Religion is a natural thing. Christ and the Bible meet the inner nature as bread meets hunger, as the light meets the eye, as the air meets the bird's wing.—Rev. Frank Crane, People's Church, Chicago.

The Glad Tidings.

Religion does not make sorrow; it finds sorrow. Religion has come to cure sorrow, and the gospel is still the glad tidings. Religion does not deepen the gloom on earth; it finds gloom and seeks to dispel it.—Rev. Dr. George Lorimer, Baptist, New York.

The Work of Christ.

Wherever we see honest labor held in high repute, wherever we see arrangements for the care of the poor and the helpless, wherever we see liberty loved and man's rights respected, there we see the work of Christ.—Rev. William W. Hamilton, Baptist, Louisville, Ky.

Nothing to Prevent Salvation.

Any sinner, anywhere, any hour, can step toward heaven, assured there is nothing in heaven, nothing in the law, nothing in the universe, nothing in hell, nothing outside his own heart, that can hinder him being saved.—Dr. Herick Johnson, McCormack's Theological Seminary, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Unending Love.

There are some things that will never end. One of these is Christ himself. Our life in him will go on forever. The same is true of our love. The poet has said, "There is no union here of hearts that finds not here an end." There is not a word of truth in this. We shall never cease to love.—Rev. P. S. Hanson, Baptist, Brooklyn.

The Soldier in the Ranks.

Honor to the man who leads the charge, who stands forth in the great white light that beats upon heroic action, but the more honor to the men who follow on and by their co-operation, subordination and unity of action make possible the high endeavor and win the great success.—Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Wandering After Strange Gods.

Some women in this country and Europe have become fascinated with Buddhism. I fail to understand that, as it teaches that women have no souls and, as women, cannot enter paradise. It erects magnificent temples, but has it any hospitals or asylums? What has it done with its millions of dollars? Buddhism is a soulless atheism whose chief end is annihilation.—Right Rev. John McKim, Episcopal Bishop of Tokyo.

Let it be our happiness this day to add to the happiness of those around us, to comfort some sorrow, to relieve some want, to add some strength to our neighbor's virtue.

NOTHING BUT NEWS.

elder would preach there, and they might go elsewhere—for fear of a crowd. (Indeed, some elders do not publish their city appointments at all.) Such is the spirit of this clipping. What Pharisaic narrowness in Christ's disciples! "Master, we saw one casting out devils in Thy name and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us. And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not, for he that is not against us is for us."

What harm is done by the publication of such notices in any paper? Does such publications give the indorsement of the elder to the paper? Certainly not. It simply gives the readers of the paper information on matters pertaining to the services of the church, and unless the church has reached the point that it wants nobody to go to hear the elder preach except the readers of the "organ," or is afraid to publish the notice lest outsiders will not come to hear the elder, then it should be glad to have the notice as widely circulated as possible. If the Midland Methodist rightly represents any presiding elders as having "specifically forbidden the copying of such appointments without proper credit" the said presiding elders are but one additional demonstration of the necessity for such reform in the office as will prevent its being occupied by men of such narrowness and bigotry.

What are Quarterly Conferences rounds anyway? Are they the secret orders of generals? Are they royal proclamations? No! They are nothing but news! They are simply notices that John Smith will be present at Crab Bottom or High Steeple at a certain time, and usually John Smith announces his appointments for three months all together, and signs his name to them, as a proof that John Smith himself made the appointments. Immediately these notices become "news," and until this narrow, high-church folly started among us it was thought desirable that these appointments should be given the widest possible publicity. But now it is wicked for them to be published in the columns of a "guerrilla" paper without credit being given to the "organ" in which they first appeared. The daily and weekly secular press announce that the elders will preach at various places, and they would laugh at the idea that they must give credit for such a notice.
Such announcements are treated as public property, and no papers, either secular or religious, gives credit for such news items. The Midland Methodist publishes news items continually for which it does not think of giving credit, because they are matters of common information; and yet it gravely informs us that a "guerrilla" newspaper has published the fact that John Smith has announced that he is going to preach at a number of places at certain times, and that because it was not stated that John Smith had made this announcement in the "organ," that John Smith had written to the "guerrilla" paper and had specifically for-bidden the copying of such appointments without proper credit. And, wonderful to relate! the offending guerrilla has disregarded even such a request! What shall be done? The ark is in danger! The presiding elder has given an order, and it has been disregarded! Put the offender in irons, turn on the thumb-screws of discipline, and send him to Quicksand Circuit, where he will speedily be swallowed up!

What a pity it cannot be done. Unfortunately he is the editor of a "guerrilla" paper, and the presiding elder cannot get at him.

There is evidently only one thing to be done to prevent unholy guerrilla hands from stealing the sacred writings of the elders. The "organ" cannot protect them. Anathemas are of no avail. The editor of the Midland must have the presiding elders' appointments copyrighted.

By the way, one of the editors of the Midland is a presiding elder. The "guerrilla" brings him double sorrow.

Seriously, it is time to stop this petty narrowness. The editor of this paper would not hesitate for one moment to publish the appointments of presiding elders, if he desired to do so. If any presiding elder objected to his doing so without giving credit to the "organ" in which they appeared, he certainly would not reverse the custom followed in the publication of news items of that nature. He would not publish them without the elder's name, for the name of the elder is part of the news item, but he would probably say,
"Rev. John Smith, presiding elder of Blank District, has announced the following appointments," and then the list would follow.

The note of the Midland is a symptom of the disease of high-churchism which is prevalent in that quarter. It is a manifestation of the same idea of loyalty to the organization rather than of loyalty to the truth, of bowing down to persons in position, even if they do wrong, of minimizing and cloaking an offence, if it has been committed by certain loyal ones, and of denouncing anything, even trifles in those who are independent and stand by the truth rather than by the diction of certain men. The symptom is bad, but the disease is worse.

WELL-DESERVED COMPLIMENT.

It has been the pleasure of the editor on two occasions to be for some time with Dr. A. C. Millar, the president of Hendrix College. He was greatly pleased with him, and enjoyed very much the hours they were together.
Recently Dr. Millar has issued a volume on "Educational Problems," which shows that he has not only had much experience in the field of education, but that he has been a close observer and a thinker. The book gives the thought of a practical and successful worker in the great cause. Dr. Millar has recently tendered his resignation as president of this college, and this has called forth universal expression of regret. The following tribute to his work is given by Rev. J. M. Hawley in the Arkansas Methodist

"Wofford College and James H. Carlisle are almost interchangeable terms.
And it can be said as an evidence of his forceful personality, his pure motive, his lofty character, and his unselfish devotion to the cause of Methodist education in Arkansas that the name of

A. C. Millar is nearly synonymous with Hendrix College already. I sincerely trust that he will withdraw his resignation, or that the board will refuse to accept it. We cannot afford to give up such a man. No person in the State has done more to develop integrity in young men. Those who have remained with him long enough to come really under his influence have learned to hate sham and hypocrisy, and to love genuineness and uprightness. He is one of the foremost educators of the Southern Methodist Church, and his recently published book on "Educational Problems" shows that he ranks as an authority on pedagogy."

THE POLISH SPIRIT.

A new patriotism, not for the impossible independence, but for educational and industrial advance is springing up in Poland. Mr. E. A. Steiner writes in The Outlook:

If Poland is hopelessly dead politically, which it seems to me to be, it is very much alive in every other way, and that, after all, is the true life of a nation.

The ancient fire is burning in her poets and authors, and the books, which crowd the book-stalls are almost bewildering in number. The new life manifests itself in her arts and crafts, and the loyal, noble Pole adorns his palace with the products of native skill. In the Slovyansky bazaar, fabrics, potteries, and carvings are displayed, often the work of peasants, which astonish the beholder by their artistic merit. The national awakening has done much harm and much good; for the Polish peasant, brutal and ignorant, the marks of centuries of oppression have vanished, and in the region of Cracow at least he has become a new creature, conscious of his strength, walking erect, and wearing with pride his peasant garb, once so depised. Long oppressed by the nobles, never conscious of himself or of his strength, he has at last been awakened from his lethargy, and has become conscious of himself as a Pole. The Polish language has become to him sacred, and to maintain it as a living speech and to leave it as an heritage to his children he suffers and sacrifices much.

This may be inconvenient to Germany, which is now hard at work trying to crush the Polish spirit; it does not fit into the plan of Russia, the ancient foe of the Pole; but to the common man in Poland the nationalistic spirit has been a blessing, for it has given him an ideal to strive for, and in striving to be a Pole he begins to be a man. It is not long since eighty-five per cent. of the Poles were illiterates, but now that in Germany and Russia they are not permitted to study their own language in the schools, even those grown up in ignorance study it, and their children are taught it secretly by the priests, so that the percentage of illiterates is diminishing in proportion to the rigor of the authorities.

Much may be done toward improving the condition of the poor sociologically, but the greatest need of the poor is still the Gospel.

THE INSTITUTE.

The Friday night free entertainment at the Methodist Institute has been changed to Saturday night, and is in the hands of Lee Cook Ys. On last Saturday night the large room was well filled, and a most enjoyable entertainment was given by the Misses Walford, Miss Bailey, Miss Parle Bodeker, Miss Curtis and Mrs. Mayo. Each filled a number on the programme. The effect of these temperance entertainments is to keep men and boys from vicious places of amusement and the bar-rooms.

For ten days past Rev. G. H. Wiley has been holding revival services at the Institute. He has been assisted by Rev. James E. Cook, of Hoge Memorial church. There has been much interest. Last night there were six persons who came forward and professed to be converted.

The Board of Visitors of all the Methodist churches of Richmond meet at the institute on Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, Mrs. R. E. Michaels, chairman. Mr. Wiley is making improvements in and about the mission. —Times.

The Methodist preachers' meeting held at Epworth yesterday was of unusual interest. Some enlivening talks were made, and business out of the routine was transacted. Several visitors were present, among them being the Rev. Dr. J. J. Hall, of Park Avenue Baptist church; the Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett, of the Christian Memorial Temple; the Rev. Dr. J. H. Moss, of Smithfield; the Rev. S. C. Hatcher, formerly pastor of Queen Street church, this city, now of Market Street church, Petersburg, and the Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins, presiding elder of this district.

The meeting was called to order by the president, the Rev. W. R. Proctor. After prayer by the Rev. Dr. Barrett, the following reports were made:

Seamen's Bethel—The Rev. J. B. Merritt, chaplain, held interesting services and had a good time. The attendance was the largest he has ever known.

Cumberland Street—The pastor, the Rev. C. L. Bane, preached in the morning, a very fine congregation being present, and a very helpful service was conducted. The presence of the Spirit was manifest and deep feeling prevailed. There were eight conversions. Three members were received by certificate. At the evening service the Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins preached to one of the largest audiences ever assembled in the church.

LeKies Memorial—The Rev. G. H. Lambeth conducted the usual services and had fine congregations. Six were received on profession of faith.

Christian Memorial Temple—The Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett had a good day, preaching at both the morning and evening hours. He also preached at the almshouse in the afternoon.

Epworth—The assistant pastor, the Rev. R. H. Bennett, preached at both services and had a fine day. At the morning service he reviewed the life of the Rev. Edgerton R. Young, a missionary to the Canadian Indians. Four thousand dollars were secured during the week on the church debt, making $26,000 to date. At the Junior Epworth League in the afternoon fifteen decided to become Christians, and some of them were converted.

Queen Street—The Rev. J. K. Jolliff, who has recently had such a severe operation performed, was present and stated that his pulpit was occupied at the two services by the Rev. S. C. Hatcher, the former beloved pastor of this flock. Mr. Hatcher spoke in the morning in the interest of the Virginia Conference Orphanage, and secured about $500 for this cause. At the evening service there were five or six requests for prayer. Mr. Jolliff was thankful that he had been sick, because he had an experience of the grace of God abounding toward him. Five were received by certificate.

Wright Memorial—The Rev. G. H. McFaden preached morning and night to large congregations. The Sunday school was full and the Junior Epworth League was well attended. One was received by certificate.

Trinity—The Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins preached at the morning hour, and the pastor, the Rev. George Wesley Jones, at night. In the afternoon the Rev. C. L. Bane addressed a rally of the Sunday school, and secured $101 for the organ fund. One member was received by certificate.

The Rev. S. C. Hatcher, of Market Street church, Petersburg, said the preachers there were well placed and pleased and progressive, and the work is prospering. In his own church the work is going along smoothly.

Owens' Memorial—The Rev. Ernest Stevens preached at the usual services. He will assist in the meeting at Port Norfolk this week.

Park View—The Rev. J. N. Latham had a good day and good congregations. He assisted in the meeting at McKendree the past week.

Centenary—The Rev. E. T. Dadmun has been in a revival meeting at this church all the week, and considerable interest has been manifested. There have been several penitents. The meetings will continue this week, and the Rev. R. H. Bennett will continue to assist. The people have been greatly encouraged by the services.

Port Norfolk—The Rev. D. T. Merritt reported the services as being largely attended. Meetings have been held each night since Wednesday, and will be continued during this week. The people are serious, and are looking for a gracious time.

Huntersville—The Rev. H. C. Cheatham said all the services were held on Sunday, he preaching at the usual hours. The Sunday school continues to improve.

Memorial—The Rev. W. A. Christian had a good Sunday school and large congregations. At night he preached to the Jr. O. U. A. M. The signs of revival influence are beginning to appear.

Lambert's Point—The Rev. C. H. McGhee reported a good Sunday school and a good congregation in the morning. The service usually held at night was held in the afternoon because of the very bad condition of the streets and sidewalks. The sermon was preached by the Rev. R. E. Steele, of the Presbyterian Church, and a former chaplain of the United States navy. A Sunday School Teachers' Institute was also organized in the afternoon.

Monumental—The Rev. E. H. Rawlings reported that special meetings had been held during the week that had resulted in five conversions. There have been many requests for prayer. The church is in good condition and the outlook seems to be fine. The Rev. C. L. Bane preached during the past week, and will continue to help this week.

The Rev. Dr. J. H. Moss, of Smithfield, stated that the presiding elder, the Rev. Dr. J. P. Garland, created a fine impression by his sermon on Sunday morning. The Epworth League meeting in the afternoon was fine. The pastor preached at night. The work is moving along smoothly.

McKendree—The pastor, the Rev. W. R. Proctor, gave an account of the protracted services held during the past week. The preaching was done principally by the Rev. J. N. Latham. The attendance has been excellent, the church being crowded at both services on Sunday. At the evening service on Sunday the Rev. C. H. McGhee preached. He will continue to assist during the week. The prospect is good and the interest is deepening.

The routine business having been transacted, the Rev. W. A. Christian offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

THE QUARLES-BARBOUR BILL.

Whereas, the Constitutional Convention, by a vote of 28 to 24, has refused to incorporate into the Constitution that eminently just and democratic measure, the Quarles-Barbour bill, which requires every saloon-keeper to have a majority of the voters of his precinct or county to say whether he shall conduct his nefarious business, thus turning from the oligarchy of the saloon to the democracy of the people; and

Whereas, the tremendous influence of the liquor traffic around places of legislation, which seems to prevail over the requests of thousands of our best citizens; and

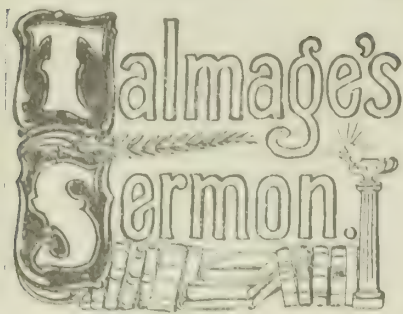

Whereas, we recognize the saloon as the continuous and unremitting promoter of evil, the incendiary of the home, the anarchist of society, the adversary of the Church, of God, and of all other influences for good: therefore,

Resolved, That we exhort our people to stand firm and abate not their interest in the great cause, nor in any way relax their efforts, reminding them of the fact that no Constitution can be made which cannot be amended, and that there is always left to us the right of appeal from the legislative bodies to the sovereign people, who have and will always hold dear that Jeffersonian doctrine of government of the people, for the people, and by the people, thus emphasizing the fact that the foundation of our Republic is the will of the majority.

Resolved, 2. That we further exhort our people to organize in every county, town, and city of the State, invincibly

WASHINGTON. —In this discourse Dr. Talmage shows that the good or evil we do returns to bless or blast us; text, Isaiah xl, 22, "It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth."

While yet people thought that the world was flat and thousands of years before they found out that it was round Isaiah, in my text, intimated the shape of it—God sitting upon the circle of the earth. The most beautiful figure in all geometry is the circle. God made the universe on a plan of the circle.

There are in the natural world straight lines, angles, parallelograms, diagonals, quadrangles, but these evidently are not God's favorites. Almost everywhere where you find him geometrizing you find the circle dominant, and if not the circle then the curve, which is a circle that died young. If it had lived long enough it would have been a full orb, a periphery. An ellipse is a circle pressed only a little too hard at the sides.

Giant's causeway in Ireland shows what God thinks of mathematics. There are over 35,000 columns of rocks—octagonal, hexagonal, pentagonal. These rocks seem to have been made by rule and compass. Every artist has his molding room where he may make fifty shapes, but he chooses one shape as preferable to all others. I will not say that the Giant's causeway was the world's molding room, but I do say out of a great many figures God seems to have selected the circle as the best. "It is he that sitteth on the circle of the earth." The stars in a circle, the moon in a circle, the sun in a circle, the universe in a circle and the throne of God the center of that circle.

Appreciation of this would correct the architecture of churches, whose shape is often a defiance of divine suggestion. When men build churches, they ought to imitate the idea of the Great Architect and put the audience in a circle, knowing that the tides of emotion roll more easily that way than in straight lines. Six thousand years ago God flung this world out of his right hand. But he did not throw it out in a straight line, but curvilinear, with a leash of love holding it so as to bring it back again. The world started from his hand pure and Edenic. It has been rolling on through regions of moral ice and distemper. How long it will roll God only knows, but it will in due time make complete circuit and come back to the place where it started—the hand of God—pure and Edenic.

The Circle of History.

The history of the world goes in a circle. Why is it that the shipping in our day is improving so rapidly? A scientific shipbuilder says it is because men are imitating in some respects what the small wits deride, the old model of Noah's ark, not as we see it in old time pictures, but as it really was according to the account given. Great ships have we now, but where is the ship on the sea today that could outride a deluge in which the heaven and the earth were wrecked, landing all the passengers in safety, two of each kind of living creatures, hundreds of thousands of species?

Pomology will go on with its achievements until after many centuries the world will have plums and pears equal to the paradisaical. The art of gardening will grow for centuries, and after the Downings and Mitchells of the world have done their best in the far future the art of gardening will come up to the arborescence of the year 1. If the makers of colored glass go on improving, they may in some centuries be able to make something equal to the east window of York minster, which was built in the year 1290. We are six centuries behind those artists. But the world must keep on tolling until it shall make the complete circuit and come up to the skill of those very men.

If the world continues to improve in masonry, we shall have after awhile, perhaps after the advance of centuries, mortar equal to that which I saw in the wall of an exhumed English city built in the time of the Romans 1,600 years ago, that mortar today as good as the day in which it was made, having outlasted the brick and the stone. I say, after hundreds of years masonry may advance to that point.

If the world stands long enough, we may have a city as large as they had in old times—Babylon, five times the size of London. You go into the potteries of England, and you find them making cups and vases after the style of the cups and vases exhumed from Pompeii. The world is not going back. Oh, no! But it is swinging in a circle and will come around to the styles of pottery known so long ago as the days of Pompeii. The world must keep on progressing until it makes the complete circuit. The curve is in the right direction; the curve will keep on until it becomes the circle.

Bad Deeds Come Back.

Well, now, what is true in the material universe is true in God's moral government and spiritual arrangement. That is the meaning of Ezekiel's wheel. All commentators agree in saying that the wheel means God's providence. But a wheel is of no use unless it turns, and if it turns it turns around, and if it turns around it moves in a circle. What then? Are the parts of a great iron machine whirled around and around whether we will or not, the victims of inexorable fate? No! So far from that I shall show you that we ourselves start the circle of good or bad actions and that it will surely come around again to us unless by divine intervention it be hindered. Those bad or good actions may make the circuit of many years, but come back to us they will as certainly as that God sits on the circle of the earth.

Jezebel, the worst woman of the Bible—Shakespeare copying his Lady Macbeth from her picture—slew Naboth because she wanted his vineyard. While the dogs were eating the body of Naboth Elijah the prophet put down his compass and marked a circle from those dogs clear around to the dogs that should eat the body of Jezebel, the murderess. "Impossible!" the people said. "That will never happen." Who is that being flung out of the palace window? Jezebel. A few hours after they came around, hoping to bury her. They find only the palms of the hands and the skull. The dogs that devoured Jezebel and the dogs that devoured Naboth. Oh, what a swift, what an awful circuit!

But it is sometimes the case that this circle sweeps through a century or through many centuries. The world started with a theocracy for government—that is, God was the president and emperor of the world. People got tired of a theocracy. They said: "We don't want God directly interfering with the affairs of the world. Give us a monarchy." The world had a monarchy. From a monarchy it is going to have a limited monarchy. After awhile the limited monarchy will be given up and the republican form of government will be everywhere dominant and recognized. Then the world will get tired of the republican form of government, and it will have an anarchy, which is no government at all. And then all nations, finding out that man is not capable of righteously governing man, will cry out again for theocracy and say, "Let God come back and conduct the affairs of the world." Every step—monarchy, limited monarchy, republicanism, anarchy—only different steps between the first theocracy and the last theocracy or segments of the great circle of the earth on which God sits.

Resolve to Do Good.

But do not become impatient because you cannot see the curve of events and therefore conclude that God's government is going to break down. History tells us that in the making of the pyramids it took 2,000 men two years to drag one great stone from the quarry and put it into the pyramids. If men short lived can afford to work so slowly as that, cannot God in the building of eternities afford to wait?

What though God should take 10,000 years to draw a circle? Shall we take our little watch which we have to wind up every night lest it run down and hold it up beside the clock of eternal ages? If, according to the Bible, a thousand years are in God's sight as one day, then, according to that calculation the 6,000 years of the world's existence has been only to God as from Monday to Saturday.

But it is often the case that the rebound is quicker, the return is much quicker, than that. The circle is sooner completed. You resolve that you will do what good you can. In one week you put a word of counsel in the heart of a Sabbath school child. During that same week you give a letter of introduction to a young man struggling in business. During the same week you make an exhortation in a prayer meeting. It is all gone. You will never hear of it perhaps, you think. A few years after a man comes up to you and says, "You don't know me, do you?" You say, "No; I don't remember ever to have seen you." "Why," he says, "I was in the Sabbath school class over which you were the teacher. One Sunday you invited me to Christ; I accepted the offer. You see that church with two towers yonder?" "Yes," you say. He says, "That is where I preach," or: "Do you see that governor's house? That is where I live."

Slander's Foul Poison.

One day a man comes to you and says, "Good morning." You look at him and say, "Why, you have the advantage of me; I cannot place you." He says, "Don't you remember thirty years ago giving a letter of introduction to a young man—a letter of introduction to William E. Dodge?" "Yes, yes, I do." He says: "I am the man. That was my first step toward a fortune. But I have retired from business now and am giving my time to philanthropies and public interests. Come up to my house and see me."

Or a man comes to you and says: "I want to introduce myself to you. I went into a prayer meeting some years ago. I sat back by the door. You arose to make an exhortation. That talk changed the course of my life, and if I ever get to heaven under God I will owe my salvation to you." In only ten, twenty or thirty years the circle swept out and swept back again to your own grateful heart.

But sometimes it is a wider circle and does not return for a great while. I saw a bill of expenses for burning Latimer and Ridley. The bill of expenses has these items among others:

	Shillings.	Pence.
One load of fire fagots.....	3	4
Cartage for four loads of wood.....	2	—
Item, a post.....	1	4
Item, two chains.....	3	4
Item, two staples.....	—	8
Item, four laborers.....	2	8 making in all 25s. 8d. That was cheap fire, considering all the circumstances, but it kindled a light which shone all around the world and aroused the martyr spirit, and out from that burning of Latimer and Ridley rolled the circle wider and wider, starting other circles, convoluting, overrunning, circumscribing, overarching all heaven—a circle.

But what is true of the good is just as true of the bad. You utter a slander against your neighbor. It has gone forth from your teeth. It will never come back, you think. You have done the man all the mischief you can. You rejoice to see him wince. You say, "Didn't I give it to him?" That word has gone out, that slanderous word, on its poisonous and blasted way. You think it will never do you any harm. But I am watching that word, and I see it beginning to curve, and it curves around, and it is aiming at your heart. You had better dodge it. You cannot dodge it. It rolls into your bosom, and after it rolls in a word of an old book rolls in after it, saying, "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

Filial Ingratitude.

You maltreated an aged parent. You begrudge him the room in your house. You are impatient of his whimsicalities and garrulity. It makes you mad to hear him tell the same story twice. You give him food he cannot masticate. You wish he was away. You wonder if he is going to live forever. He will be gone very soon. His steps are shorter and shorter. He is going to stop. But God has an account to settle with you on that subject. After awhile your eye will be dim, and your gait will halt, and the sound of the grinding will be low, and you will tell the same story twice, and your children will wonder if you will never be taken away. They called you "father" once. Now they call you the "old man." If you live a few years longer, they will call you the "old chap." What are those rough words with which your children are accosting you? They are the echo of the very words you used in the ear of your old father forty years ago. What is that which you are trying to chew, but find it unmasterable and your jaws ache and you surrender the attempt? Perhaps it may be the gristle which you gave to your father for his breakfast forty years ago.

A gentleman passing along the avenue saw a son dragging his father into the street by the hair of the head. The gentleman, outraged at this brutal conduct, was about to punish the offender, when the old man arose and said: "Don't hurt him. It's all right. Forty years ago this morning I dragged out my father by the hair of his head!" It is a circle. Other sins may be adjourned to the next world, but maltreatment of parents is punished in this world. That circle is made quickly, very quickly. Oh, what a stupendous thought that the good and the evil we start come back to us! Do you know that the judgment day will be only the points at which the circles join, the good and the bad we have done coming back to us—unless divine intervention hinder—coming back to us with welcome of delight or curse of condemnation?

THE WORLD'S BIG ISLANDS.

Baffin Land Now Placed Second In Point of Area.

As recently as 1897 the "Taschen Atlas" of Justice Perthes makes no mention of Baffin Land in its enumeration of the large islands of the world. Baffin Land, near the east coast of this continent, north of Hudson strait, has long been represented on many maps as composed of a number of islands. It is still shown in this way on a number of maps now in use. One by one these supposed islands—Cumberland island, Fox Land, Meta Incognita, Sussex island and others—have been found to be part of the main island. Thus Baffin Land has been gradually increasing in size on the maps until today it is known to be inferior only to Greenland in size. The latest edition of the best map of the polar regions published in any American atlas, however, still shows Cockburn island, which is about as large as Iceland, as separated from Baffin Land by a wide channel, though a number of foreign maps show that it is a part of Baffin Land.

Dr. Robert Bell, the new director of the geological survey of Canada, who mapped a long stretch of the west coast in 1897, has just published in The Geographical Journal a report of his explorations. He says that it is "the third largest island in the world, being only exceeded by Australia and Greenland." As Australia is now ranked by nearly all geographers as the smallest of the continents, Baffin Land will undoubtedly take its place among the islands as the second in area.

All the best maps of Baffin Land now show a great lake region in the central part of the southern portion of the island. These lakes lie between mountain ranges. Dr. Bell says that the two greatest bodies of water are larger than any of the lakes in the whole peninsula of Labrador, and that they may almost be compared to Lake Ontario in extent. He visited the southernmost, Lake Amadjuak, which may be 120 miles in length by 40 in breadth in the middle. According to Eskimo accounts, Lake Amadjuak discharges northward into Lake Mettilling by a short river, without rapids, the natives passing from one lake to another in their kayaks. Lake Mettilling is perhaps 140 miles long and 60 miles wide, and its waters reach the sea through a large and rapid river 50 or 60 miles long that has a descent of about five feet to the mile.

The conspicuous honor of being the largest island in the world has been held by quite a number of islands at various stages of geographical knowledge. School children were taught for many years that Australia was the largest island. Then Australia came properly to be regarded as one of the continental masses, and Borneo took its place as the largest island. Less than 20 years ago it was discovered that New Guinea was larger than Borneo, and so the latter island took second place. When Perry practically outlined the northern coast of Greenland early in the last decade, geographers began to think that they had overlooked an important section of the earth's surface, and so they placed Greenland at the head of the list of islands. At last Baffin Land looms up as an island 1,005 statute miles in length, with a breadth varying from 200 to 500 miles, the average being 305 miles. Its area is, therefore, about 300,000 square miles. In other words, the island is larger than the state of Texas by about 40,000 square miles, or about ten times as large as either Scotland or Ireland.

The Home Circle.

HE FEARED THE GATE.

Late one stormy evening the old doctor was summoned to see a man who had been attacked with sudden illness. The patient proved to be 'Squire Joyce, whom the doctor slightly knew. He examined him carefully, and gave him medicines. Then he arose to go, smiling cheerfully down at the anxious face of the sufferer.

"You will find yourself better in the morning, I hope," he said.

"Yes. Stay a minute, doctor. I want you to be honest with me. I have had seizures like this before. Shall I have them again?"

"It is probable."

"I want the truth—all of it."

"Yes, they will return."

"I may die in one of them—to-morrow?"

"Yes. Or, may be, not for years. It is uncertain. Do not waste your life in anticipating them. We all must go through the same gate some day."

"The gate—yes! But beyond the gate—what is there?"

His eyes were on the doctor's face, full of doubt, almost of pain.

The two men were silent a moment. "What is there?" Joyce repeated, harshly. "You are a member of a church—a Christian. I have no religious belief. Tell me, for the love of God, what is there beyond? If I may go to-morrow, what shall I find?"

"I do not know."

Joyce did not speak for a while, and then gave a forced laugh. "I need your help more for this than for my disease. I'd rather talk to you than to a clergyman. You are a shrewd man of the world, and a good man. Sometimes I am greatly depressed, thinking of this darkness into which I am going. For thousands of years men have gone out into it, leaving loved ones behind, and not one has sent back a word to say how it fares with him—not one."

In the silence that followed the rain beat against the windows. There came a slight whimpering cry from without.

"You are an old man, doctor," said Joyce, turning to him. "You are not far from the gate yourself. Are you not afraid of what may be beyond?"

"No," said the doctor. "No, I am not afraid. Look here." He rose and opened the door. Outside, in the dark hall, lay a little fox-terrier, drenched with rain. He was crouched on the floor, his eyes fixed on the closed door.

"This is my dog. He has followed me through the storm, and has been lying outside the door, knowing that I was in this chamber. He never was here before. He did not know what was in this room. He did not care to know. I was in it, his master, whom he loves. He was not afraid."

Joyce looked at the doctor keenly a moment before he spoke.

"You mean—"

"I mean that I am like poor Punch. I am not afraid of the dark room to which I am going. I do not ask to know what is there. My Lord and Master is there. All these years He cared for me. I have been assured that in my hours of trial He has never failed me here. I sincerely believe He will not fail me yonder."

"But I—I do not know Him."

"He knows you. I am authorized by the declarations of the Bible to say that His hand is stretched out to you. I reverently ask you to take it. You can accept Him as your Guide and Teacher if you will. That done in sincerity, you will not fear the gate nor all that lies beyond."—Youth's Companion.

A FEARFUL EPIDEMIC

Of Long Standing and Wide Prevalence—Diagnosis Reached and Brand Affixed.

This remarkable disease has not yet been treated in books of pathology.

1. This disease is of the intermitting kind, attacking the patient by violent paroxysms, which return every seventh day.

2. It partakes somewhat of the nature of ague, especially as it is attended with a great degree of coldness. This coldness is first apparent early in the morning of the Lord's day, and, in many cases, seizing the patient before he has left his bed. But it begins in the region of the heart, and is attended with dullness of the head, followed by yawning and lethargy.

3. These paroxysms and lighter developments return only on the Lord's day, and reach the acute stage when the church bells begin to ring. Any hurrying about in the house and talk about going to meeting provoke the symptoms.

4. The name of this disease is Sabbath Sickness, but by the faculty it is technically known by no other name than Dei Domini Morbus.

5. The patient is sometimes deprived of the use of his limbs, especially the legs and feet, so that he is indisposed to walk to the house of God.

6. In some cases this attack has come upon them after they have gone to the house of God, and has been attended with yawning and slumber.

7. In other cases there has been great uneasiness in the house of God, and a disposition to complain of the length of the sermon, though they have been known to sit very contentedly in a play-house hours at a time, or stand on the streets in the cold several hours to listen to a political harangue, or an auctioneer, or a vendor of patent medicines for corns, ingrowing nails and liver complaint; and to drink in the strains of a brass band heralding the coming circus.

8. Persons affected with this disease never mourn on account of their confinement from public worship.

9. These persons often surprise their neighbors with their great activity, agility and health on Monday, however unfavorable the weather may be, especially if it be a Monday immediately preceding sale day (Tuesday) and there are some "plums" to be picked up after a day's careful examination into titles, etc.

10. Most of the faculty agree that there is a low, feverish heat, technically called febris mundi, or fever of the world, which may be detected in these patients during the intervening days of the week.

11. There also seems to be loss of appetite for savory food, and a want of relish for panis vite (bread of life), which, in this case, is an indispensable remedy for this disease.

12. Persons affected with this disease generally have a disrelish for private religious exercises of the closet and the reading of the Scriptures.

13. It is also contagious—neighbors take it from neighbors, and children from parents.—Free Press.

TEN RULES OF POLITENESS FOR CHILDREN.

1. To be polite is to have a kind regard for the feelings and rights of others.

2. Be as polite to your parents, brothers, sisters, and schoolmates, as you are to strangers.

3. Look people fairly in the eyes when you speak to them, or they speak to you.

4. Do not bluntly contradict any one.

5. It is not discourteous to refuse to do wrong.

6. Whispering, laughing, chewing gum, or eating at lectures, in school, or at places of amusement, is rude and vulgar.

7. Be doubly careful to avoid any rudeness to strangers, such as calling out to them, laughing or making remarks about them. Do not stare at visitors.

8. In passing a pen, pencil, knife, or pointer, hand the blunt end toward the one who receives it.

9. When a classmate is reciting, do not raise your hand until after he has finished.

10. When you pass directly in front of any one or accidentally annoy him, say "excuse me," and never fail to say "thank you" for the smallest favor. On no account say "thanks."—School Rules for Santa Barbara, Cal.

Verbena, the colored cook, asked permission to bake a cake for the wedding breakfast of one of her friends. The next day her mistress said to her:

"Well, 'Bena, how did the wedding go off?"

"Law, Mrs. L——," Verbena replied, "it war a mos' pow'ful fine weddin'. De breckfus war mos' appetizin', 'specially de cake you done gib me; an' wid all de guests wearin' dere bes' clo's, an' behavin' mos' impressive. An' de bride sutainly did look beautiful in her white satin gownd wid de long white veil an' de orange blossoms."

"And how about the bridegroom, 'Bena?"

"Dar!" exclaimed Verbena, her eyes flashing, "de low-down, no-count niggah nevah come anigh!"—D. C. A., Jr., in "Harper's Magazine."

Dr. Parkhurst says: "Men grow surprisingly lovable as soon as we begin to love them, startlingly interesting as soon as we begin to be interested in them. And we shall find in people just as much heart as we have the heart to find in them. As soon as we begin in a Christ-like way to love people, we shall discover that they love to be loved. They are in our power, if our power is heart power."

WASHINGTON RELIGIOUS LETTER.

and it was well handled.

A very unique and unheralded event that had some bearing on the question of universal peace took place at the home of Mrs. Cushman K. Davis, widow of the late Senator Davis, of Minnesota. During his lifetime the Senator was a great friend of the Indians, and whenever there was a delegation of the Red Men in Washington to look after their land and reservation interests they made it a point to call on the Minnesota statesman. It happens that at this time there are two delegations in Washington, one of Pawnees and the other of Sioux. As a mark of esteem it was the desire of these tribal representatives to pay their respects to the Senator's widow. Now it happens that the two delegations selected the same night for their friendly call, neither knowing the other would be present. This was unfortunate, as the two tribes have a feud of many years' standing, which has resulted in many deaths on both sides. Consequently when they met in Mrs. Davis' drawing-room there were a few minutes that were strained, and the relations between the two tribes were very frigid. Finally one of the Sioux stepped forward and made a speech to his old enemies, the Pawnees. He told them that he was willing to forget the old enmity, and wanted to be a friend, forgetting the long-standing trouble between the tribes. As a proof of this he offered his hand to the leader of the Pawnees, who, equal to the occasion, replied in a similar strain, shook hands, and in a few moments the two tribes were mingled in evident pleasure over the unexpected turn that affairs had taken. The white people present had taken no part in the ceremonies, and could not understand what was said, as it was all in the Indian dialects, but those who saw it will never forget the dramatic situation, nor the intensely interesting features of this meeting of life-long enemies under such circumstances.

The New York Society for Ethical Culture deplores the prevalent and artificial make-shifts in the manner of living, and says that future historians will speak of the present generation as "flat dwellers" just as we now speak of the "cliff dwellers." The Arabs that fold their tents, according to Longfellow's poem, may be said to be outdone by the folding Bedouins of to-day.

standing by the motto: "The saloon must go."

The Rev. Dr. J. J. Hall, of Park Avenue Baptist church, was present, and invited the preachers and through them their members to hear the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London and Northfield Extension, who will give a series of addresses in his church March 16th-14th on the theme: "The Life of Prayer."

INTERDENOMINATIONAL MEETINGS

At the suggestion of Dr. Hall, and on motion of the Rev. W. A. Christian, a committee of one was appointed to co-operate with like committees to be appointed by the other denominational preachers' meetings to organize an interdenominational ministers' meeting. The Rev. Mr. Christian was appointed to represent the Methodists.

By request, the Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett, of the Christian Church, gave a very interesting account of his recent trip to Porto Rico in the interest of missions. His recital was greatly enjoyed by all present.

The Rev. C. H. McGhee, from the committee appointed to frame a suitable paper expressive of their sympathy with the Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins and the Rev. W. T. Green on account of recent affliction in their families, presented the following, which was adopted by a rising vote.

Having heard with deep regret of the death of Mrs. James F. Lee, the daughter of our brother, the Rev. Dr. William E. Judkins, and of the death of Mrs. Christopher White, the sister of our brother, the Rev. William T. Green, we hereby express to these brethren our sincere sympathy in their bereavement, and the assurance of our prayers in their behalf.

We beseech for them the presence of the Comforter, with a holy confidence in His power to help and to sustain under all the trying exigencies of life. They enjoyed the affection and companionship of their loved ones a little while here; the Gospel brings the assurance that that affection and companionship may be renewed in the world to come, never again to be disturbed. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

We desire the secretary to furnish a copy of this paper to each of these brethren.

Respectfully submitted,

C. H. MCGHEE,

C. L. BANE,

G. H. LAMBETH,

Committee.

Dr. Judkins feelingly responded, and assured the preachers of his warm appreciation.—Landmark.

In my younger days, when a student, I frequently asked my mother to awake me at a certain hour, and she invariably did so. I could depend on her, and in the time of examination stress I could lay me down and sleep assured of being awakened. So I can lay me down and sleep, being certain that in the morning I shall awake in His likeness, for Christ is our redemption. We have the sure promise of His Word that those who suffer with Him shall also reign with Him.—John Robertson.

During a course of lectures on "Scotland and the Scots" an Oxford professor delivered a feeling tribute to the intrepidity and endurance of the sons of the north.

"These hardy men," remarked the professor, "think nothing of swimming across the Tay three times before breakfast."

The respectful silence which followed this announcement was broken by a loud guffaw from the middle of the room.

"Sir," said the professor, angrily, addressing the culprit, "perhaps you will explain what you mean by this outburst!"

"I was just thinking, sir," replied the offender, "that if your story is true, the poor Scotch chaps would find themselves on the wrong side for their clothes."—Youth's Companion.

A certain naval officer was very pompous and conceited when on duty. One day when he was officer of the watch and he could not, as usual, find anything of consequence to grumble about, he attempted to vent his spite on one of the stokers of the vessel who was in the engine room on duty.

Going to the speaking-tube, the officer yelled, "Is there a blithering idiot at the end of this tube?"

The reply came quick and startling, "Not at this end, sir!"

The feelings of the officer as he turned away with a black frown can be better imagined than described.

AFTER ALL.

We take our share of fretting,
Of grieving and forgetting;
The paths are often rough and steep and heedless feet may fall.
But yet the days are cheery
And night brings rest when weary
And somehow this old planet is a good world, after all.

Though sharp may be our trouble,
The joys are more than double.
The brave outrank the cowards and the leal are like a wall
To guard their dearest ever,
To fail the feeblest never;
And somehow this old earth remains a bright world, after all.

There's always love that's caring
And shielding and forbearing,
Dear woman's love to hold us close and keep our hearts in thrall;
There's home to share together
In calm or stormy weather,
And while the hearth-flame burns it is a good world, after all.

The lisp of children's voices,
The chance of happy choices,
The bugle sounds of hope and faith through fogs and mists that call;
The heaven that stretches o'er us,
The better days before us,
They all combine to make this earth a good world, after all.

Margaret E. Sangster.

through Cyprus, through Lystra, through Corinth, through Athens, through Asia, through Europe, through America, through the first century, through five centuries, through twenty centuries, through earth, through heaven, and at last the wave of influence, having made full circuit, strikes his soul. Oh, then I would like to see him! No one can tell the wide sweep of the circle of Paul's influence save the one who is seated on the circle of the earth.

I should not like to see the countenance of Voltaire when his influence comes to full orb. When the fatal hemorrhage seized him at eighty-three years of age, his influence did not cease. The most brilliant man of his century, he had used all his faculties for assaulting Christianity, his bad influence widening through France, widening out through Germany, widening through all Europe, widening through America, widening through the 123 years that have gone since he died, widening through earth, widening through the great future, until at last the accumulated influence of his baleful teachings and dissolute life will beat against his dismayed spirit, and at that moment it will be enough to make the black hair of eternal darkness turn white with horror. No one can tell how that bad man's influence girdled the earth save the one who is seated on the circle of the earth—the Lord Almighty.

"Well, now," say some, "this, in some respects, is a very glad theory and in others a very sad one. We would like to have the good we have done come back to us, but the thought that all the sins we have ever committed will come back to us fills us with affright." My brother, I have to tell you God can break that circle and will do so at your call. I can bring twenty passages of Scripture to prove that when God, for Christ's sake, forgives a man the sins of his past life never come back. The wheel may roll on and on, but you take your position behind the cross, and the wheel strikes the cross and is shattered forever. The sins fly off from the circle and fall at right angles with complete oblivion. Forgiven! Forgiven! The meanest thing a man can do is after some difficulty has been settled to bring it up again, and God will not do anything like that. God's memory is mighty enough to hold all the events of the ages, but there is one thing that is sure to slip his memory, one thing he is sure to forget, and that is pardoned transgression. How do I know it? I will prove it. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven."

The Eternal Circle.

But do not make the mistake of thinking that this doctrine of the circle stops with this life. It rolls on through heaven. You might quote in opposition to me what St. John says about the city of heaven. He says it "lieth four square." That does seem to militate against this idea of a circle. But do you not know there is many a square house that has a family circle facing each other and in a circle moving, and I can prove that this is so in regard to heaven. St. John says, "I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders." And again he says, "I saw round about the throne four and twenty seats." And again he says, "There was a rainbow round about the throne."

The two former imply a circle; the last, either a circle or a semicircle. The seats facing each other, the angels facing each other, the men facing each other. Heaven an amphitheater of glory. Circumference of patriarch and prophet and apostle. Circumference of Scotch Covenanters and Theban legion and Albigeuses. Circumference of the good of all ages. Periphery of splendor unimagined and indescribable. A circle! A circle!

But every circumference must have a center, and what is the center of this heavenly circumference? Christ. His all the glory; his all the praise; his all the crowns. All heaven wreathed into a garland round about him. Take off the imperial sandal from his foot and behold the scar of the spike. Lift the coronet of dominion from his brow and see where was the laceration of the briars. Come closer, all heaven. Narrow the circle around his great heart. O Christ, the Saviour! O Christ, the man! O Christ, the God! Keep thy throne forever, seated on the circle of the earth, seated on the circle of heaven.

On Christ, the solid rock, I stand;
All other ground is shifting sand.

Bible Publication Statistics.

Heavier than the entire population of Liverpool are the 165,000,000 copies of the Scriptures distributed during the nineteenth century by the British and Foreign Bible society. They weighed about 30,700 tons. To transport this mountain of Bibles a train 16 miles long, drawn by 150 locomotives, would be necessary. The area of the printed pages would furnish standing room for twice as many persons as are now living throughout the world. If all the Bibles were made into a single volume, the book would be 202 feet high (as high as the London monument), 140 feet wide and 41 feet thick, each page would weigh 60 tons, and to turn one of them over would take the strength of 1,200 men or 40 horses. Further, the Bibles would make 197 1-3 columns, each as high as Mount Everest (29,000 feet).—Pittsburg Bulletin.

His Nerve Saved Him.

James J. Hill, the present railway magnate, when a poor clerk on a Mississippi levee had frequently to make trips into the woods with pay for men at a distant station. Once he woke in the night while camping on the way to that station and found the Indian servant who accompanied him about to rob him. He drew a revolver and kept the man covered until he had gone from sight. While the scene was in the acting he found the revolver was empty, but he never moved a muscle. "If I had," he says in repeating the story, "I should certainly never have been here to tell the tale."

DO NOT EXPECT MIRACLES.—If a cold, long neglected, or improperly treated, has clutched you by the throat, you cannot shake it loose in a day, but you can stop its progress, and in a reasonable time get rid of it altogether, if you use Allen's Lung Balsam. There is nothing like this honest remedy for bronchitis, asthma, and other affections of the air passages.

"Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Surely it means that every sorrow carries in itself a clue to blessedness, and that there is no sorrow for which there is no healing and help in the Gospel of Christ.—Rev. F. B. Meyers.

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Editorial.

DR. BUCKLEY TO LECTURE.

The editor is greatly pleased to announce that after several efforts to find a convenient season, an arrangement has been made by which Dr. J. M. Buckley, the editor of the New York Advocate, will lecture at Petersburg on Tuesday evening, April 15th, and at the Blackstone Institute on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the 16th and 17th. Dr. Buckley will receive a warm welcome, and those who hear him will doubtless be both profited and entertained.

WHAT THE BIBLE HAS TO SAY TO FATHERS.

(The following article is one of the last things written by Dr. Newman Hall, the great English Congregational preacher, who died on February 18th at the ripe age of eighty-five. It is one of the vital questions of the day, and as the space of the Recorder was already largely filled, it is assigned a part of the editorial columns. The article is clipped from the St. Louis Advocate.—Ed. Recorder.)

Men on earth are to learn their duty as fathers from the great and first model of Fatherhood. He provided for His children, and this is a father's first and incumbent duty. Provision implies protection, provision, instruction. Some fathers ignorantly excuse themselves from teaching by the plea that teaching cannot begin before the capacity to learn, not thinking that the capacity commences even at birth. As soon as the eye opens it begins to observe. It distinguishes between light and darkness, and soon knows the difference between looks of love and anger. Smiles attract, while frowns repel. A mother often draws to her embrace the babe whose father's frown repels it. Children learn much before they utter words. Let fathers teach their tiny children the sweetness of love by their treatment of the mother. Rudeness, anger, neglect by the husband teach similar conduct by the children to the mother. Some parents seem to think that their whole responsibility is met when they send the children to the infant school, without inquiring about the efficiency of the teachers.

How deeply impressed I was, when quite a little child, not only by being taken into a quiet room with my mother every day when she prayed for me, but by standing outside at her room door and hearing her pray, and wondering at her thus talking with an unseen God and asking His blessing. A parent not known by a child to pray is really a lesson on not praying. Can I ever forget entering unexpectedly early in the morning into my father's room and finding him on his knees before God? Did not we children, while still young enough for an infant school, thus receive lessons in early piety, sermons without words, but indelibly impressive? I could never think of my parents in after years apart from their habitual communion with God. If parents are prayerless, can they expect their children to grow up otherwise? Such prayer should not be that of mere stated form, but language of the heart, and suited to the circumstances of every day. Thus teach young children to ask for what they need, and seek help both for themselves and for their parents with them.

Let them be early acquainted with the Scriptures, not by long, laborious reciting of many chapters, but by wise selections which they can easily understand, with lessons suited to their years. Let them be familiar with such histories as of Jacob and Joseph, and parts of David and Samuel. When I was quite a little child I used to visit my father when he was in bed, my mother being away usually, and I used to ask him to tell me about Joseph in Egypt. This he related with deep emotion and weeping eyes. Morning after morning I asked him to tell me about Joseph. I was deeply convinced of my father's love for the Bible. In after years I frequently found him in his retirement, diligently reading a Bible with a commentary. In family prayer, which was never neglected, we children were seated round father and mother to hear a short passage of the Bible, sing a hymn together, and kneel in prayer to our Father in heaven. Are not children thus trained to pray together likely to gather their own families in after years, and is not such worship calculated to influence religiously the whole of the day, both its business and its enjoyments? The whole day should be somewhat under the father's oversight. He should know what other children are met, for walking or play, or either, or whether their guardians and companions are trustworthy morally.

Fathers should not devolve on the mother the entire cultivation and appreciation of beauty in their children. The great Father has covered the earth with beautiful things for the enjoyment of His children, who often disregard such lessons. How lovely are the heavens above us—the silvery clouds, their exquisite and changed forms. The glowing tints of sunrise and sunset. The myriad stars, the moon in its majesty, the sun in its splendor, the loveliness of the landscape, its fields and valleys, its streams and rivers, its hills and mountains; or its smaller beauties—the flowers with their varied tints and forms and fragrance, the changes from spring to autumn; the trees in their endless majesty and gracefulness; beauty not alone in the wild commons and broad country paths, but in narrow lanes also, and even in window flower-pots, where a simple primrose or even a tiny daisy contains a treasury of beauty, if carefully examined or even casually glanced at; or, if seldom able to behold natural beauty in flowers, the very shop windows are sometimes, and to beauty-loving fathers, are constantly presenting pictures in which there are elements of beauty worth the while of children.

Care should be taken that pictures which children may see on the walls in houses should illustrate sweetness rather than ugliness, kindness rather than violence. How many pictures deface the walls of mansions and cottages which exhibit scenes not merely ugly, but which in themselves may be of little worth. I was lately in a house where a little girl was being carried down stairs, and called the nurse's attention to a pretty picture, and when told it was a picture of Jesus, she said: "Oh, let me stop and kiss the dear Lord Jesus." Some of His kind words and actions had been described to her.

Teaching at home should embrace much of the instruction which is often overlooked or only partially considered at school. The teaching at home should be more gentle, while more solemn; more confidential and familiar; more the utterance of love than of mere authority. Many subjects are omitted at the desk as if sufficiently explained and enforced in the home by the parents. The result frequently is the total omission of warnings, and encouragements, and explanations which are essential for the subsequent development of the youthful character. The duty of truthfulness in speech should be lovingly enforced. Children are often careless in their statements, apparently indifferent whether what they say is actually in harmony with facts. They tell falsehoods without knowing it. A lie is something which they have learned to hate and condemn, without consider-

WHAT A PITY!

If anything was needed to show the inconsistency of the Nashville Advocate, which calls itself the organ of the Church, and not the personal organ of the editor, Dr. Hoss, the article which we print below will show it. The brethren who have desired to bring to light before the whole Church the facts in reference to the Book Committee, the book agents, and the "War Claim" have not been allowed to do so in that paper. It is the organ of the Church, and this is a matter upon which the whole Church has a right to be informed, but it has not been informed through the columns of the Church organ. It would not be right to allow such matters to be discussed in that paper!!

But once or twice this paper has called attention to the fact that although the sin of Barbee and Smith and the Book Committee could not be laid bare in the columns of the "general" organ, yet the failings of Dr. W. B. Palmore, the editor of the St. Louis Advocate, which is considered by many to be the leading paper in our Church, were brought before the public in the columns of the Nashville Advocate, although said failings were not related in any way to the general welfare of the Church, but were largely a matter of local and personal interest. The conclusion could hardly be avoided that the columns of this "general" organ were being used as a vehicle for personal feeling of the editor toward Dr. Palmore. But in this last issue of the general organ, the editor gives up a part of the editorial columns to the Rev. C. H. Briggs, in order that he may make a bitter personal attack on Dr. Palmore. What a pity! What a pity!! What a pity!!! How can the editor now offer any defence of his refusal to publish articles on the subject of the "War Claim," the conduct of Barbee and Smith, and the Book Committee, a matter of general interest and of great importance to the whole Church, and at the same time justify the publication in the editorial columns, in double-leaded type, of this article on the conduct of the editor of the St. Louis Advocate, which the very article confesses to be a personal matter, and one which is of interest only to those communities in which the St. Louis Advocate circulates?

As to the merits of the discussion in Missouri, this writer has nothing to say at this time. Whether Dr. Palmore has done wrong to allow persons to discuss the utterances of Bishop Candler in the St. Louis Advocate, and

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

The president was silent again, and Edward began to understand something of the seriousness of the question that faced the president and the college. For the first time also in his own mind one of the phases of modern wealth getting became clear to him. He was not old enough to realize how much it meant. But his sturdy and generally clear sense of justice placed his sympathy at once with the president. Even to the young college sophomore the question, new as it was to his mind, seemed to have but one answer. It was a monstrous proposition to put before men that they were not to investigate or discuss the methods employed to acquire wealth if it was going to arouse the ill will of men who had money to give to the college. When that ill will took the form of a direct threat to withhold a possible bequest if the teaching was not discontinued or changed, it certainly looked to Edward as if the power of wealth was assuming to dictate terms to the college which it could not for a moment submit to without dishonor and the loss of those principles on which it was originally established. [Possibly some reader of this part of the story of Edward Blake will be inclined to think that the author has drawn entirely on his imagination for this scene between the president and Mr. Rankin. I may say that the president of a college recently showed me a letter written by a wealthy donor, in which a threat was made to withhold a large sum of money from the college unless a certain professor, who occupied the chair of political economy, were removed from the institution on account of the nature of his teaching, which, according to the best judgment of a majority of students and teachers, was not un-Christian teaching, but distinctly and positively Christian. The professor was not removed in this instance. I believe that the history of educational institutions in the United States would, if truly written, disclose very many similar attempts to dictate the nature of the teaching in college on the part of men who do not desire to have wrong methods of money making studied or discussed.—Charles M. Sheldon.]

Two weeks later the president finished his business and went away for a little vacation. The matter that had been discussed so frankly between him and Edward would come up for action before the board of trustees when the college opened again in the fall. Mr. Rankin had been as good as his word in talking with as many of the faculty and trustees as he could find in Raynor during the summer. And the subject would have created more excitement than it actually did if the college had been in session and the news of the war had not been so prominently uppermost.

July came on, and Edward was almost entirely alone in the hall. The stirring events of the battles of San Juan and Santiago and the destruction of Cervera's fleet, together with the surrender of General Toral and the departure of the fourth division of regulars from San Francisco to Manila, became history. Then followed the overtures of Spain for peace and the statement by the president of terms by which peace could be secured. With the beginning of August it seemed as if the brief war were almost ended. And yet out there across the Pacific the war cloud grew larger and the situation more serious. President Royce's words were prophetic when he returned in August, and in talking with Edward as they resumed their work in the library study he said: "There will be a long struggle in those islands, and it will take a very wise man to predict all the results. We have problems formed by this brief war with Spain that will require a good many years to solve. The best statesmanship and the best citizenship and the best missionary service will be demanded of the United States in the next quarter of a century if we would make the history we ought to make as a Christian nation."

These events and experiences made a memorable summer for Edward Blake. There was one week in July when he was sorely perplexed as to his exact duty to his old roommate. After a silence of several days regarding Willis' condition Mrs. Preston wrote that he was very low. The next word that came was merely a line saying that he had passed the crisis of his illness and would recover. Edward would have left Raynor at that time if his going to the camp would have been any help. But Mrs. Preston strongly dissuaded him from coming, knowing the great expense, and so Edward remained the whole summer in Raynor, as he had planned to do. Late in August Willis himself wrote a brief note, saying he had made up his mind to go with the state regiment to the Philippines. Mrs. Preston in the same mail also wrote a letter, in which she spoke of Willis' determination not to go back to college until he had actually done some fighting.

His illness has not tamed his spirit in the least—she wrote. He is as careless and indifferent to all things serious as he always was. The surgeon today pronounced him to be in a splendid condition for full recovery. If only I could look forward to his re-enlistment with any hope that the army discipline would make a man of him! But what hope can I have when I read that every wholesale liquor house in the United States is preparing to ship liquor by the train and steamship load to Manila as soon as the treaty is ratified and the islands are ours? I do not fear all the dangers and horrors of actual war for Willis a thousandth part as much as I fear the drink for him. Pray for us again. Willis says that he has written that he expects to be able to be in Raynor and out at the college in September, when the term opens. He says he is going to try to get you to go with him. As much as I might wish to have you with him I cannot beg it of you, knowing that the army life at its best is demoralizing to all the best impulses. Better far finish your college course and then go out into the world to fight the real enemies of the republic in the shape of greed and selfishness and this liquor traffic, which has both at the bottom of it. That is my prayer for you.

LUCILE PRESTON.

Edward read this letter like the first he had received from Willis' mother, and he was moved by it almost as deeply. He had anticipated Willis' coming with more or less anxiety on account of Freeda, although she had never shown by word or letter that she had any special interest in him.

September had come on, and the fall term had opened, and college was fairly under way again when Willis returned. Edward went down to the station to meet him, and quite a crowd was present there.

As they walked up the hill together Edward was surprised to note how well Willis looked. His enforced illness had apparently left no mark of weakness on him, and his bearing was even more jaunty and careless than ever. There was an additional mark of a soldierly bearing also, and, as he wore his uniform, Edward soon began to realize that Willis was a good deal of a hero to the students and especially to the girls, who clapped vigorously the first time Willis came into chapel.

"Shoulder straps are more popular than wings nowadays," said Willis, with a careless laugh. "Tell you, old man, you need to enlist in order to get popular. There's nothing like it. You don't have to be good looking nor know very much. Just put on a uniform, and that will do all the rest."

Edward had difficulty in picturing Willis as his mother had described him. He wondered if he had given up the drink and ventured to question him about it that evening. Willis was getting ready to go out to a little banquet that his old society had arranged in his honor.

"Are the boys going to serve wine at the banquet tonight?" asked Edward as Willis was arranging his toilet.

"I suppose so. Champagne and a little beer perhaps."

Edward was silent a moment. Then he went over to Willis' side of the room. Willis had put on his coat and had made a step toward the door.

"Promise me you won't drink any tonight, will you?" asked Edward, and as he spoke he had in mind Mrs. Preston's letter, written at the bedside of her son in that southern camp.

Willis paused, and a look of embarrassment, mingled with some vexation, appeared on his face.

"The fellows will think it very queer if I don't respond to the toast 'Our you promise not to touch the drink for the love you have for her?' Edward found himself for the first time pleading with Willis.

Willis hesitated. Then he said, with an abruptness that startled Edward: "I've promised mother several times and broken it. What's the use? The sight and smell of the stuff put the very devil into me."

"What makes you go where it is, then?"

"You tell," replied Willis carelessly. "Don't worry about me. I'll come out all right in the end."

"I'm afraid you won't," said Edward sorrowfully. "There's a verse somewhere in the Bible that says, 'At the end'—You know the rest as well as I do."

"I know. 'Biteb like a serpent'—Oh, pshaw! What's the use of borrowing trouble for the future? It's the last good time I'll have with the boys. When I get into active service in the Philippines, I'll settle down all right. So

"Landlord, fill the flowing bowl
Until it doth run over,
For tonight we'll merry, merry be;
Tomorrow we'll get sober!"

Willis began to sing as Edward irresolutely stood facing him, wondering if there was any influence strong enough to make Willis see his danger.

And yet Edward himself, with all his growing horror of the drink evil, did not have any convictions deep enough on any Christian basis to plead with Willis from any other standpoint than one of moral expediency. After he had, as he thought, done his duty in urging the love of Willis' mother upon him as a motive, no other argument or motive appealed to him, and he let Willis go his way without having said a word to him on the side of spiritual life. Edward could not speak any such word because he had no personal Christian faith. He guided his life so far by his sense of moral uprightness. The still higher plain of Christian discipleship was unknown to him. If he had known it, it is possible—but that thought came afterward, long after Willis had gone with his regiment and was fighting in the swamps and jungles of Luzon.

It was very late when Willis came in, and Edward, who was awakened by his entrance, felt sure he was more or less under the influence of liquor. He slept it off, however, and the next morning appeared as bright and confident as ever.

"Hear me come in this morning?" he asked as he began packing up his things preparatory to his departure. He was going home that day to spend a few days and then going direct from there to join his regiment in San Francisco.

"Yes," replied Edward shortly.

"I didn't make much disturbance, did I?" asked Willis gayly. "Didn't put my shoes in the stove and my collar in the coal bin, did I?"

Edward did not answer, and Willis went on packing his things. After quite a silence he said, with the abruptness that sometimes marked his usual careless indifference:

"I've got the same little volume of poems with me. Going to take it to Manila for good luck."

Edward was silent again, and Willis put the volume into his grip, and after a moment he said, "Ned, if I never come back, think of me at my best instead of my worst, will you, and I'll do the same by you?"

It was the only serious word that Edward heard from Willis before the train started with him aboard that afternoon. It touched him in spite of the other things that annoyed and even angered him. When the familiar fig-

Flag at Home and Abroad. What difference does it make to you? I'll promise not to get drunk if that's what you mean. I can control my appetite if I want to."

"It makes more difference to your mother than to any one else. Won't ure vanished from sight that afternoon down at the station, with the memory of a great crowd from the college present to see him off and shower ribbons and flowers on him, Edward carried back up the hill a kindly and even tearful remembrance of the handsome, smiling Willis. And as the distance between them daily widened and he pictured the dangers that awaited that regiment in those faroff islands Edward Blake, with thousands of others in America, wished godspeed to the ones who had gone, while still in his fast forming and developing mind he had his doubts concerning the righteousness of the struggle there and wondered if his increasing horror of bloodshed and his growing dislike for war were a morbid streak in him on account of the great majority of college opinions that were so different from his.

It was at this time in his college career, with all the excitement of these historical events adding to the interest he already felt in his life since leaving home, that Edward Blake began the practice of writing, which had so much to do with the shaping of his mind and the crystallizing of his thoughts.

The president suggested the idea to him, and Edward eagerly adopted it. The literary tone of the debating societies and the college journalism was at a low point. The editors of the monthly paper were elected every fall at a mass meeting of the students, and each class had a proportionate representation. Edward was elected with two others to represent the sophomore class. Talking over the matter with the president a day or two later, the president asked Edward if he had ever written very much.

"No, sir. I used to do a little scribbling at home on the farm winter evenings, but that's all."

"Ever had any of it printed in the papers or anywhere?"

"No, sir," replied Edward, smiling some to think of the impossibility of such a thing.

"Tell you what I would advise this new board of editors to do. Why don't you form a little circle among yourselves for the express purpose of raising the standard of composition in the college? Let each member of the board write at least one article a week for some well known paper or magazine and submit it for publication. After all, there is no test quite so severe for what you write as the test. 'Will any paper or magazine want it and pay for it?' I know that very often this is no test of the real worth of a piece of literary work, but, on the other hand, it is more or less of a severe test of good work. Then, if you have any articles accepted and printed by other papers, reprint them in the college paper, by permission, and invite criticism of the articles from other writers among the students."

Edward was so impressed with the president's advice that at the first meeting of the new board, where they talked over the interest of the college publication, he advocated the formation of such a circle as the president suggested.

To his great delight every member of the board favored the plan, and the circle was organized then and there. There were six seniors, four juniors, three sophomores and two freshmen. As it happened, they were nearly all above the average age for students in their respective classes. Some of the seniors had done considerable writing during the college course. All of the editors were ambitious for the success of the paper, as it was the college rule that all profits from it should be divided proportionately among the editors. This rule was afterward modified so as to leave a portion of all profits in a sinking fund, to be used for the development of the paper itself.

Edward was very busy now, what with his paper route, his special work for the president, some of which continued even after the return of his secretary, and his regular studies. The football team was "after him again," and matters had taken a turn in such a way that Edward was seriously considering the possibility that he might play again. Pearsons had not come back, and, under President Royce's management, it was exceedingly unlikely that the custom of hiring nominal students would be continued. But the fascination of attempting something for publication attracted Edward especially at this time, and for several weeks he wrote one article a week and submitted it to the other editors for criticism. According to the simple rules of the circle, these articles became the property of the college paper only if they were accepted and paid for by some other paper, and before being sent out they were subjected to the severest criticism and discussion.

It would be almost a separate story by itself to relate all the experiences of that little circle of inexperienced but persevering literary aspirants for publication. The history of it would reveal a great quantity of brain effort apparently expended for nothing. It was an event when one of the junior editors proudly displayed a check for $5 that he had actually received for an article on college athletics he had sent to a magazine devoted to outdoor sports. The circle learned, several months afterward, that he was so elated by his success that he wrote half a dozen more articles for the same paper, all of which were promptly rejected. But at the time of receiving his check he was the most envied and admired member of the circle, although one of the sophomores, who boarded at the same table with this selfsame junior, said the junior's head was so turned by his success that the girl who waited on the table had to turn his chair around in front of his plate because his mouth was in the back of his head.

A man's first money earned with his pen is an event, however, that brings with it a thrill that is distinct and separate from every other he has ever experienced. And one morning when Edward found in his letter box a letter from the editor of a well known periodical in the east, inclosing a little yellow slip of paper good for $10, it almost took his breath away. The little note that accompanied the check was a complete surprise also. A personal note from the president of the United States inviting him to dinner would hardly have pleased or astonished him more. This editor was perhaps a rare exception among editors, but he had a kindly feeling toward young writers and encouraged Edward in a few words of discriminating praise to work hard and develop the best that was in him.

(To be continued.)

Finish every day and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities, no doubt, crept in; forget them as soon as you can. To-morrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with its hopes and invitations to waste a moment on the yesterdays.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

HEED THIS APPEAL!

To the Members of the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences, M. E. Church, South:

During the last session of the Trustees of Randolph-Macon College it was ordered that "a committee be appointed to draft a circular letter to be sent to the ministers of the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences, urging the necessity of college education and soliciting patronage for our college." In pursuance of this action of the Board we were appointed a committee to do the work.

It is not necessary that we should say at the outstart that Randolph-Macon College is a Methodist institution, and therefore entitled to the patronage of the Methodists who live around it. But we do most earnestly desire to speak from a denominational standpoint, and appeal to our preachers, and through them to our people, with the reasonable hope that all Methodists in the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences will rally to the support of our college, and give to it the help and patronage which it deserves.

1. We ought to stand by Randolph-Macon College because it is our own denominational college for the education of sons of Methodist parents.

2. It is equal in grade and necessary outfit, in actual collegiate work, and in well-deserved reputation to any college in the country.

3. It helps to keep us abreast of the other denominations in the land by furnishing skilled workmen for Church work.

4. It is the place where our young preachers, who have been called to the ministry by the Holy Ghost, are prepared for a life of usefulness in delivering the Gospel of Christ to the people.

5. It supplies us with Methodist teachers for our own institutions of learning, and also for private and family schools.

6. It fits our boys for business life as well as for literary employment, in proof of which we find that all departments of industrial enterprise are now giving preference to college-trained men when they can obtain them, because they find it needful to use men who have been taught to think.

7. In addition to all this, it is our duty to call your special attention to the fact that the denominational colleges in Virginia receive no appropriation from the State treasury. Hence our appeal to our Methodist people to secure the patronage necessary to keep our college afloat. Other evangelical denominations support their own colleges. Can we afford to do less?

During the past one hundred years our Church has endeavored to provide educational facilities for the children of Methodist homes, and the result has made itself manifest in the wonderful record of useful men and women who adorn both public and private life from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Many of them have planted the banner of the Cross in foreign lands. Shall we abandon the work to which we were assigned by the providence of God? Shall others take our crown? No; we must keep what we have fairly won, and strengthen our strongholds. Our honor as a Church demands it.

8. Randolph-Macon needs an endowment that will enable us to give, during every session, free tuition to every Methodist boy within the bounds of the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences, whenever that boy is ready to receive a collegiate education. This can be done—and it will be done so soon as the income from a satisfactory endowment is large enough to meet the annual expense list.

There is an abundance of money in Maryland and in Virginia for everything else—why not for a college endowment?

Last year the total sum of $50,000,000 was donated to the cause of higher education in these United States of America. In the South about half a million was bestowed upon literary institutions. North Carolina gave one-half of that amount. Virginians contributed only $77,531!

There are over 3,500 millionaires in this great republic. Of that number over 400 are in the Southern States. There are about 20 millionaires in Virginia.

No one can truthfully say that there is a lack of money among the 150,000 Methodists who are expected to make good the pledges of loyalty which have been repeatedly given by the patronizing Conferences. $20,000 would endow any one of ten professorships in Randolph-Macon College. Some of our members are fully able to give that amount. Ten chairs could be endowed in a year without actual personal sacrifice. Smaller gifts, added together, would swell the sum total until we had an annual income sufficient to meet the current liabilities of each succeeding year. This would open wide the door to free tuition.

Brethren, for the sake of the good it has done—for the sake of the grand work it can yet do—stand by the dear old college. Plead with the people to lay their gifts on its altar. Send your sons, and the sons of your neighbors, to obtain their education there. Ask God to bless Randolph-Macon, and believe that He will do it. But faith without works is dead!

Faternally yours,

JOHN P. BRANCH.

ON THE WING AGAIN.

There is an enterprising preacher in the Virginia Conference named Baughn. When he was at Burkeville he wrote to me asking me to give him a lecture at "St. Mark's church." I agreed. When the time came it was raining, but, undeterred by dripping skies, after a good warming at McFadden's hospitable fireside in Crewe, we started for "St. Mark's." When we reached the Nottoway river I found that St. Mark's, like its Venetian namesake, lay beyond the rolling flood, and no gondola, such as glides softly over the blue waves of the Adriatic lagoons, could have lived long in that Virginian torrent. The truth is, we were afraid to try it. A negro coming along while we waited, we induced him to drive the buggy across, while Baughn and I

"cooned a log." But we reached "St. Mark's." Baughn is not a man to be balked by high waters. There was very little outcome to the lecture, and the scheme for raising money was what the fishermen call "a water-haul." But it showed Baughn's grit. We have a man down in Mississippi made of Baughn's mettle. His name is Jacob. He is a builder of churches and parsonages, a student, and an all-around good fellow. He hasn't more than found out that the chimney in his new parsonage draws all right when Conference meets, and Jacob is sent to another place, where he has to go at it from the bottom. This year he has both a church and parsonage to build. So he asked me to give him ten lecture dates in Mississippi. I agreed. The first date was at "Pleasant Hill." It was ten miles away from the railroad, but what of that! It was raining hard when I left Olive Branch for Pleasant Hill. "Beware of the creek," said a friend as we started. "Do we have to cross a creek?" I asked of Graham, the Baptist driver. "Yes," he replied, "but there is no danger. I cross it every day." When we drove down the hill into the creek bottom, I saw the field covered with water, and wanted to investigate. Graham laughed and pooh-poohed at my caution. I told him I was going to Pleasant Hill if I had to ferry across, for I mean to keep my engagements; but I didn't want to get a wetting. O, he knew every foot of the road, the water wasn't knee deep, and he had hardly said it, when down went the horses over their depth, and began to swim; the next instant down went the buggy, and began to float, and the swift water to run over our laps. Fortunately, the creek into which he had unwittingly driven was narrow, the horses behaved admirably, both of us kept cool (which was not hard to do in that water), and in a few minutes we struck the opposite bank, and got on solid ground again. Riding several miles wet and cold was no specially good preparation for speaking, but thanks to deep breathing, I am never hoarse, or out of voice, and spoke to a good audience (for the night) nearly two hours without inconvenience. It was a gracious providence that saved us. Enumbered as we were with heavy wraps we might easily have been drowned, and my career ended not far from where it began. I'm going to my appointment, but I don't intend to have a Baptist driver when I have swollen creeks to cross. They are too careless about water.

Two sections of Mississippi, the Southern part of the State, the great lumber region, and the western part, known as the Delta, are very prosperous. The negroes have gone into the Delta by thousands, almost denuding some of the upland counties of labor. As many as six thousand negroes from one county found their way last year into the Delta. But the greater part of North Mississippi is in a worse condition than at any time since the close of the war. The result of twenty-five years of free negro labor has been such an impoverishment of the land as makes its abandonment almost inevitable. If we could get the negroes out and a better class of intelligent farmers to take hold of these hills and valleys no part of the country would respond more promptly and profitably to tillage. It can never be reclaimed by negro labor. The small white farmer is the only savior of this land.

As I went through the country and observed the impoverishment of the fields, the dilapidated farms, and the poor people, it set me to thinking. What are we as a Church doing for these people? Are we lifting them up? Are we transforming these ignorant masses of the rural neighborhood into better men and women? I fear we are falling far short of our duty here. And I also fear that it is due in a large measure to that obstructive conservatism that is content to run on in the old ruts. Any proposal to change our methods of work is regarded as disloyal to the Church. Yet the test of any system is not its immediate results so much as its capacity for such changes as may adopt it to altered conditions. The Church ought to be a centre of light, of social refinement, of intellectual uplift to the community. Here and there in my travels I run across a man who extends the sphere of religion beyond the idea of worship, and includes within it the whole round of human activity, so that it becomes a force for the elevation of man morally, intellectually, socially and every other way. Not long ago I received a letter asking me in very urgent terms to come to a certain place in the mountains of Kentucky and deliver a lecture. I supposed the writer was a Methodist brother, but upon reaching the town I found that he was a Baptist. He believes that religion means a great deal more than going to church on Sunday, and that it ought to educate, elevate, and refine people, and as one means of doing this he had undertaken to have a lecture course that would reach the social life of the community, and by giving them an elevating class of "entertainments" lead them to higher things than the minstrel show and the itinerant opera bouffe. He has succeeded to a remarkable degree. I went, and away out there among the miners, in that part of Kentucky where we frequently hear of those deadly feuds, I had an audience that packed the church. They had recently had a noted lecturer, but he indulged in a good deal of vulgar humor, perhaps thinking these rude mountaineers would enjoy that sort of thing. But he was mistaken. My Baptist brother had wrought too well for that. They were disgusted, and he felt that his lecture course had received a serious set-back. He sent for me to help him overcome the bad effects of that lecturer's mistake. I have just received a letter from him. Here is what he says: "I want to write you a few words of appreciation for the good your visit here has done us all. There has never been a man who has so completely satisfied everybody here, and there are expressions on every hand that you must be one of the course next year. You have redeemed this year's course, and your lecture came just at the right time for that." I quote these kind words to emphasize the fact that a man can in a short time so elevate the standard of the community that a coarse and vulgar lecturer disgusts them. What he is doing there in the backwoods of Kentucky might be done anywhere. Every now and then I meet a brother who deplores the fact that the people of his town will not go to hear "a good lecture," but will crowd the biggest hall in the place to enjoy the negro minstrels. Well, it is his fault. He will never change it by denouncing the minstrels. He can only put the minstrels down by lifting his people up above them. Sometimes these dear brethren say: "I enjoyed your lecture, but I wish you would come and help me in a meeting." There is where the trouble is. Their idea of religion is "a meeting." But after the excitement of the occasion dies away there is nothing permanent left. Our methods are wrong. We must lift the people to higher things.

Since I wrote in a former letter about the probable contest of Rev. H. C. Morrison's eligibility to election to the General Conference I have read his letter announcing his "withdrawal" from the Church, which is republished by Dr. Rankin in the Texas Christian Advocate. At the time I wrote, I had forgotten about Bro. Morrison's withdrawal, and my remarks applied only to his trial and his expulsion, which, I think, was illegal. His withdrawal puts the matter in a more difficult attitude. Still I hope some way will be found to let him in.

What I wrote recently about Methodist preachers reading their sermons has stirred a breeze, and a simple question as to where the great preachers are that Vanderbilt University is expected to furnish us has given some good people the hysterics. The trouble comes from my "impudence" in speaking aloud what a great many people are thinking. The editor of the Midland Methodist thinks I was "kicking at the hub." He is mistaken, I have only the kindest feelings for "the hub." But the sensitiveness of some folks at "the hub" to anything like criticism reminds me of an old mule we had on the farm when I was a boy. Whenever any one went about the lot he imagined he was going to be curried, and he got restless. Sometimes when no one was thinking about the old mule, he went sailing around the lot; and talk about "kicking," he had an original patent on kicking. The trouble with the old mule was he had cockle burrs in his hair. I often think of the old mule when I see how "nervous" Nashville is at the sight of a curry-comb. Even dear old Dr. Matthews, the clerical patriarch at McKendree, took a shot at me. All right. But the Vanderbilt "theologues" owe me a treat—I brought some of them into notice.

I want very heartily to second Bro. Twilley's suggestion about those memories of Rev. James A. Duncan. It would, indeed, be a delightful and inspiring volume. The influence of such an ideal man as Dr. Duncan ought not to die with those who knew and loved him. If I might suggest the character of these papers, I would say let them be personal reminiscences, giving us actual incidents in the life of the man; as a man in the brotherly relations of his social life, as a college president and instructor of youth, and, above all, as a minister in the pulpit. If Bishop Granbery, Dr. Whitehead, Dr. Lafferty, and others would write these papers, they will confer a blessing on the young people of the Church. The editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate recently had an editorial on "The Passing of the Evangelist." If his opinion applies to a certain class of evangelists, the superficial and sensational revivalist, the Church is to be congratulated on their disappearance. They have done more harm than good. But I doubt if it is true that the evangelist is no longer in demand. I am not an evangelist, in the common acceptance of the term; but since it is known that I am free to help in revival work, I receive numerous invitations. This would indicate that the pastors need help, and evangelists are not obsolete. S. A. STEEL

SEVEN DELEGATES OR SIX—WHICH?

Rev. J. A. Timmerman, D. D.

The last session of North Georgia Conference convened in Rome, November 20th. The minutes for 1900 show an enrollment of 263, but three having died, we were left with 260 clerical members. Forty-four lay members increased our number to 304, and eight having been received into "full connection," the second day of the session gave us 312 members.

At this juncture the Bishop announced as transfers J. M. Sewell, from the Florida Conference, A. E. Sanburn, from South Georgia Conference, W. H. LaPrade, Jr., from St. Louis Conference, and F. M. C. Eads, from the Pacific Conference. But as the Pacific and St. Louis Conferences had been held, and Eads and LaPrade had already been counted, they were not entitled to vote. Two transfers, however, Sewell and Sanburn, increased our roll to 314 members. A ballot was then taken for delegates to the General Conference, and W. F. Glenn and R. J. Bigham received 139 and 121 votes respectively, and they were declared elected.

On the second ballot, M. J. Cofer received 125 votes, and he was declared elected. The third ballot on Friday, resulted in the election of J. D. Hammond, who received 143 votes. On the fourth ballot, W. P. Lovejoy received 93 votes, and he was declared elected. The fifth ballot resulted in no election. On the sixth ballot, J. B. Robins received 113 votes, and he was declared elected. In the mean time (on Friday) J. H. Hartmann was granted a location at his own request; on Saturday W. S. Stevens announced his withdrawal from our Church, and the withdrawal of W. F. Pitts reduced our number from 314 to 311. On Monday W. A. Mallory and G. W. Morgan were granted a location at their own request, further reducing our number to 309, but M. S. Williams was readmitted and R. O. Wier was announced as a transfer to us from the Florida Conference, making our number again 311. H. W. Joiner, about this time, was transferred to the Florida Conference and a resolution of regret passed by the Conference. Eliminating his name, we had at that time 310 members, but granting that he was entitled to the privileges of membership until the close of our session, we had an enrollment of 311 members, or nine less than the requisite number for an additional delegate. However, it was announced, at that time, that we had the necessary two-thirds, or more, entitling us to an additional delegate, and an election was ordered. The first ballot resulted in no election. On the second ballot J. W. Heidt, the secretary of the Conference, received ninety-four votes, and he was declared elected. The Bishop announced the transfer of Alonzo Monk from the Holston Conference, but Dr. Monk's Conference had already been held, and he, of course, could not be recounted. Besides, his transfer, according to the published proceedings, was announced after the ballot had been taken. From the same report, it seems that Joseph Irons, from the M. E. Church, considered the disciplinary questions and was admitted into our Conference, on Monday night, and after the election had been ordered. However, counting him, we would have only 312 members, or eight less than the requisite number. If the foregoing calculation is correct, it will be seen that we had enrolled at the beginning of our session 304 members, 260 clerical and 44 lay; that we admitted into "full connection" eight, making 312; that we received three transfers entitled to vote, Wier and Sewell from Florida, and Sanburn from South Georgia, giving us 315; that we readmitted one Williams, making our number 316. Three locations, Hartmann, Morgan and Mallory; two withdrawals, Stevens and Pitts, reduced our number to 311. If Joiner is eliminated, whose transfer was announced before the last election was ordered, we had only 310 members. If Joseph Irons is counted, who appears to have been admitted at the last night session, not long before adjournment, we had again an enrollment of 311, or nine less than the "law allows." Consequently, we are not entitled to seven delegates in the next General Conference, but to only six. Who blundered?

MAKING ROOM FOR CHRIST IN GOVERNMENT.

A Christian Citizenship Conference, devoted to the consideration of political loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ, was in session at Alleghany, Pa., February 24th and 25th. The attendance was large at every session, increasing to the end. A large and beautifully draped American flag was a prominent feature of the platform decorations. The Conference was opened with a discourse by Dr. A. J. McFarland on the subject, "Jesus Christ the Royal Saviour and Governor Among the Nations," based on Psalm 22:28: "For the kingdom is the Lord's and He is the Governor among the nations." A careful paper by Rev. Dr. R. C. Wylie, of Wilkinsburgh, Pa., gave an examination of the Constitution of the United States that brought out the absence of religion or the recognition of any moral standard above the will of the people in that otherwise excellent instrument of government. The addresses that followed emphasized these moral defects as of the utmost gravity, involving Christians in sin, in the gross inconsistency of a diverse private and public moral standard, and in hampering them with their work of moral reform. The attitude of protest was held to be the attitude of power, for we may not do evil that good may come.

The first day of the Conference closed with an address by the Rev. Professor R. J. George on "The Blighting Effect Upon Spiritual Life of an Oath to an Unchristian Constitution and to Unscriptural Laws," and the second with an address by President Johnston, of Geneva College, on the theme, "Christian Citizens Should Hold Consistently for the Highest Christian Ideal of Civil Government."

The speakers included also among others Dr. F. M. Foster and Rev. W. McLeod George, of the Christian Nation, both of New York; Dr. J. C. McFeeters and Dr. J. W. Sproull, of Pennsylvania; Revs. J. C. Slater and A. A. Samson, of Ohio. Every one of the twenty-four speakers on the programme was present, and all the arrangements for the Conference worked out smoothly. The general trend of the addresses given is fairly indicated by the resolutions which were presented and discussed in the day sessions of the Conference and each adopted by a rising vote. They are as follows:

1. All Christians, having been redeemed by the blood of Christ, should stand loyally for His kingly authority over the nations, and should recognize His right to rule their lives as citizens, a right generally neglected or denied.

2. The present Constitution of the United States fails to meet the requirements of God's Word by its failure to recognize the authority of Christ and of His law, and violates the Word in giving the supreme place to the people without acknowledging the sovereignty of God, and also in the terms of the oath prescribed for the President.

3. A Christian cannot in loyalty to Christ, the King of nations, swear to carry on our government according to a law that leaves Christ out.

4. The Christian who separates himself from an unchristian constitution owes it to Christ and to his country to do his utmost to bring his country to know, acknowledge and serve Christ.

5. The history of the past century goes far to prove that no real reformation is to be expected from the ballots even of Christian citizens while they choose men to carry out, as supreme political law, a Constitution that knows not the Lord.

6. The reformer to be effective must stand clear of the wrong which he would reform.

The addresses and discussions are to appear in book form at an early day, under the editorial supervision of Rev. W. J. Coleman, of Alleghany, Pa., who arranged and managed the Conference.

"The Cow Pea" is the title of the latest publication issued by the Experiment Farm of the North Carolina State Horticultural Society, at Southern Pines, N. C. This book, neatly bound and illustrated in plain and concise manner, discusses the value and uses of this important crop, the cow pea. Every reader can get a copy free by writing to the superintendent of Experiment Farm, Southern Pines.

LESSON XI, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 16.

Text of the Lesson. Acts viii, 26-40. Memory Verses. 34, 35—Golden Text. Rom. x, 10—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

26. "And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise and go toward the south." The previous verse says that Peter and John preached the word of the Lord in Samaria, and then, on their way back to Jerusalem, preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans. They evidently left Philip busy in the midst of a great work in Samaria, and while continuing faithfully to preach Christ a messenger from heaven is sent to him commanding him to leave Samaria and go down to the desert way, which was between Jerusalem and Gaza. It may have seemed a strange and unreasonable thing to leave a great work and go to a desert road without being told why or wherefore, but the great motto of a true worker with God must be "willing and obedient."

27, 28. "And he arose and went, and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, who had come to Jerusalem for to worship, was returning and, sitting in his chariot, read Esaias, the prophet." Here, then, is the reason of the angel's visit to Philip. God saw the hungering soul of this man of great authority under the queen of Ethiopia, and He would satisfy that longing soul, and Philip, the faithful messenger in Samaria, was the chosen vessel. God knew that He had a prompt and obedient servant in Philip.

29, 30. "Then the spirit said unto Philip, Go near and join thyself to this chariot." At Samaria an angel spoke to him; now the Holy Spirit tells him what to do. As to the Spirit speaking to believers see chapters x, 19; xi, 12; xiii, 2; xvi, 6, 7, and consider the promises in John xiv, 26; xv, 26; xvi, 13. It is possible for us to hear the voice of the Spirit and be guided by Him. See also Isa. xxx, 21. God has promised that He will surely guide His people (Ps. xxxii, 8), and I believe He guides in one or other of three ways—by His Spirit through His word, if necessary by His Spirit apart from His word, but never contrary to it, and by His providences or the events of daily life. A believer ought to be a Spirit filled and Spirit controlled person, and since God desires it what can hinder but our unwillingness? Prompt and obedient, Philip ran to the chariot, and, hearing the eunuch reading in the prophecy of Isaiah, he said, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" See what pains God will take to cause one to understand His word when He sees that desire in the heart, and remember how the Lord Jesus on the resurrection day took two or three hours to open the Scriptures to those two who were slow of heart to believe (Luke xxiv, 32). May His patience be ours.

31. "He desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him." The treasurer of the queen was a great man and at this time riding in his chariot, while Philip was poor and probably had the appearance of a wayworn traveler, yet see how cordially he is received by the man of authority. Many messages have been unspoken and letters unwritten which the Spirit has whispered because some timid soul has feared rebuke. It is ours to obey; results are the Lord's. See Jer. i, 7-9.

32, 33. He was reading of some one who had been cruelly ill treated, but, like a lamb or a sheep, was dumb before his persecutors—one from whom all justice was taken away and who was finally slain. The story is so familiar to us that it does not affect us. We have heard it from the prophets who foretold it and in the gospels from those who actually witnessed the fulfillment of the prophecies. We know, or profess to know, Him of whom the prophets spake, who fulfilled every prophecy concerning His humiliation, but how much do we care? This man read with interest and astonishment, perhaps for the first time. There are many who have never read of Him because those put in trust with the gospel have not been faithful to their trust. Contrast Rom. i, 14-16; I Thess. ii, 4.

34, 35. "Then Philip opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture and preached unto him Jesus." This he did in reply to the eunuch's question, "Of whom speaketh the prophet this?" Philip did not waste any time on the style of the prophet or on the possibility of there being two Isaiahs, each of whom wrote part of the book, neither did he so much as hint at the impossibility of any one writing of things 700 years before they happened, but from this and other Scriptures he made plain the truth concerning Jesus.

36, 37. "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." Compare the confessions of Peter and Martha in Matt. xvi, 16; John xi, 27, and note I John v, 1. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." Unless you have ever talked with and led to Christ a soul really hungry for the truth you cannot understand Philip's joy as he, by the Spirit, opened the Scriptures and saw this man drink it all in and then ask to be baptized. Truly the Lord Himself was with them (Matt. xviii, 20), and the Spirit wrought gloriously. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Rom. x, 10). The eunuch had believed in his heart and confessed with his mouth and was quite ready for a further public confession before all his servants, for doubtless there were many with him.

38, 39. "The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more, and he went on his way rejoicing." How strange the whole thing must have seemed to the driver of the chariot and the rest of the company—the stranger invited to ride with their master, the earnest conversation, the baptism, the sudden disappearance of the stranger and their master's new joy, which no doubt he told them all about, and the queen, too, when he arrived home! The Lord by Philip wrought a great work that day, and some time we may hear the sequel to this story from the lips of the eunuch himself. I am sure that Philip was and has been many a time glad that he was so prompt and obedient. How the Spirit of the Lord caught him away I know not, but I believe that, having finished his work, he supernaturally disappeared.

40. "Philip was found at Azotus, and, passing through, he preached in all the cities till he came to Cesarea." This last place seems to have been Philip's home, and a church was gathered there (Acts xxi, 8; xviii, 22). It matters not whether we find Philip in Samaria or in the chariot or going from place to place, he is ever preaching Christ.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 16, "A Noble Purpose."
Text, Dan. i, 8-20.

"That he would not defile himself."

This was more than the ordinary temperance principle of the ordinary modern boy. We must view it in a broader way.

Daniel was selected from among the young men who had been carried captive from Judæa to Babylon with some others who showed ability and appeared capable of being educated for governmental positions. He was probably of royal descent. He, with at least three others, had been deeply impressed with religious truth in his native land. The impassioned appeals of Jeremiah for righteousness and national honor could not have been unknown to him. This little group of young men at a foreign court must have felt keenly the humiliation of their country and religion. With a patriotic fervor not infrequently found in the young and a characteristic disregard of the corrupt influences around them, they determined to stand true to their ancestral religion. There is no probability that they took the vow of Nazarites not to use the products of the vine or that they were other than simply devoted young fellows standing on principle.

But if they were resolved to worship Jehovah and Him only what about the food they would have served them as members of the king's household? That food and all eating were inseparably connected with the worship of the gods, as it is at the present time in all the orient and ever has been. By eating the meat and drinking the wine provided for the king's officers they would be worshiping the gods he worshiped and renouncing their own Jehovah. This they meant not to do. There is but one course then open. They must refuse the king's food and live on simple vegetables and water if they would avoid meat and wine offered in idolatrous worship.

It was a risky course to take. If the diet did not agree with them and they failed in health or studies as compared with the others classed with them they would be in disgrace if not positive danger.

Risky as it seemed, it was, however, the only safe course to take. Simple living joins well with high thinking and earnest faith. The result was what it always has been, is now and ever shall be. Whoever does the right thing finds it the successful and wise thing. God's way with Daniel was not different from God's way with every other young man. He that honors God shall be honored of God. Expediency may tempt one to abate somewhat of one's constancy and devotion, but it results in sacrifice of principle and loss of integrity.

Do the right thing whatever the risk and whatever the cost, and safety with success shall be the ultimate result.

Daniel's purpose and his maintenance of that purpose are all that raised him to position, kept him in honor and power and sent his name down the ages as a synonym of unswerving devotion to convictions of duty.

Feebleness of Faith.

Feebleness of faith is owing to the lack of nutrition. We do not inwardly digest the word and by the law of assimilation utilize the productive power that is resident in it. Hence we become as weak as other men. We have the form, but are destitute of the power which alone is derived from holy living. If we do not know the will of God, there is no hope of our doing it or knowing the doctrine, which is not only an inspiration, but an incentive, to action, for if any man will do God's will he must know the mind of God, which is revealed in him and which is to demonstrate by obedience to the divine requirement. Therefore every man should be fully persuaded in his own mind by an intelligent apprehension and comprehension of things concerning his spiritual development, for God works in us to will and to do.—Philadelphia Methodist.

A Universal Possibility.

Sin is a universal possibility not only against God, but everything. One may sin against himself. The effect is purely a matter of degree. One sins against the laws of his own physical being. Nature is long suffering, but unmerciful. There is no cross in the theology of nature. The transgressor must meet the penalty of his transgression. Pain is the remorse of a broken bone. Fever is the hell fire of an outraged nature. Sometimes this comes to us as an inheritance. Heredity is the original sin of nature. The harvest of the dragon's tooth is not gathered in a single season. Life's machinery is thrown out of gear, and it requires generations to adjust it.—Presbyterian Journal.

The Way of the Transgressor.

It is with the transgressor as with the falling stone—the farther he falls the faster he falls.—Episcopal Recorder.

Faith's Answer.

I asked my Father what it meant
That all my prayers were vain?
Why was it that the waves were rough,
Why pitiless the rain
That swept me from my moorings where
The sea was smooth, the sky was fair?
He answered me, Because, my child,
It is thy Father's will;
Canst thou not trust Him who can say
To billows wild, "Be still."
Who holds in hollow of His hand
Each wave that breaks upon the strand?
Again with agonizing cry
I staggered 'neath the rod;
I looked, when, lo, a cross in view!
It was the hand of God
That bore the heaviest end; thus late
I learned to know how light its weight.
'Twas not until my will in His
Was merged that I could see
With eye of faith that God, who holds
Each mystery, holds the key,
That He who guides His children home
Knows the best way for each to come.

SALOON SMASHING.

A Forgotten Speech of Abraham Lincoln Brought to Light.

The editor of The Religious Telescope has brought to light a forgotten speech of Abraham Lincoln's in defense of women who had been engaged in just the kind of work Mrs. Carrie Nation was doing in Kansas. These women lived in Clinton, Ill. They were fifteen in number, and almost by chance Mr. Lincoln was present at their trial and was asked to defend them, since they had no counsel. He addressed the court in the following speech, which brought about their release:

"May it please the court, I will say a few words in behalf of the women who are arraigned before your honor and the jury. I would suggest first that there be a change in the indictment so as to have it read, 'The State against Mr. Whisky' instead of 'The State against the Women.' It would be far more appropriate. Touching this question there are three laws—first, the law of self protection; second, the law of the statute; third, the law of God. The law of self protection is the law of necessity, as shown when our fathers threw the tea into the Boston harbor in asserting their right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

"This is the defense of these women. The man who has persisted in selling whisky has had no regard for their well being or the welfare of their husbands and sons. He has had no fear of God or regard for man; neither has he had any regard for the laws of the statute. No jury can fix any damages or punishment for any violation of the moral law. The course pursued by this liquor dealer has been for the demoralization of society. His groggery has been a nuisance.

"These women, finding all moral suasion of no avail with this fellow, who was oblivious to all tender appeal and alike regardless of their prayers and tears, in order to protect their households and promote the welfare of the community, united to suppress the nuisance. The good of society demands its suppression. They accomplished what otherwise could not have been done."

One Cure For Hard Times.

If the workingmen should suddenly say, "The money which we have hitherto spent for intoxicating liquors shall henceforth be expended for useful articles," and if for a single week they should turn it loose upon cotton goods, how much money do you suppose would be directed into the cotton trade

In one week? Not less than $3,000,000. If this were done, all the wholesale dealers and the retail dealers would cry out: "Send more cotton goods down here! There is a boom in the cotton trade!" And if the workingmen should suddenly take it into their heads to take the earnings that they hitherto have used for intoxicating liquors and spend them for furniture, how much do you suppose would be let loose upon the furniture market? Not less than $6,000,000 in four weeks. There would then be no stagnation of trade in the furniture market.—George W. Bain.

Saloon Railroaded Out.

Loyalton, Cal., was rid of the saloon in a rather remarkable way. A large lumber company which was building a line of road to reach certain timber which it controlled made the proposition to build a depot and several box factories that would give employment to some hundreds of men at that place provided the people would give a sufficient guarantee that no liquor should be sold in the place or within six miles of it. Without such a guarantee the company held that it could not consistently with its own interests make large investments there and in event of failure to obtain such guarantee announced its intention of building a new town elsewhere where it could control the situation. The people very wisely agreed to the terms of the company. The railroad came, and the saloon went, and all reputable people are pleased with the arrangement.

Montreal's Saloons.

A recent number of the Montreal Herald gives some interesting statistics concerning the magnitude of the saloon interests in that city. According to The Herald, the 400 bars of that city would measure a mile and a half of straight whisky selling space at which more than 3,000 men could drink at one time without rubbing elbows. Behind the bars of that city there are not less than 1,200 men as bartenders, or more than twice as many as the firemen and police of the city combined. In addition to this number of saloons there are 500 groceries in the city where liquor is sold. The number of drinking places provides one for each sixty-four wage earners of the population. That is to say, says The Herald, every saloon keeper has sixty-four workers upon whom he may levy tribute for his comforts and luxuries.

Temperance in Austria.

In Bukowina, a portion of Austria bordering on Russia, temperance societies have been founded recently in large numbers, and in many villages the following custom has sprung up. The peasants bury a small cask of brandy with a religious ceremony and raise over it a mound having a cross on top, with the inscription, "To remind us for all time that we have promised to drink no more brandy."

A Tribute to Abstinence.

The new bishop of London told a recent interviewer that his capacity for hard work without breaking down is due to two things, total abstinence and bicycling.

WHAT THE BIBLE HAS TO SAY TO FATHERS.

ing that whatever is said intentionally to mislead is disgraceful and is a lie. In daily life how many falsehoods are uttered as if harmless, excused as the usages of society, as the sport of conversation, and afterward in the daily business of life, as the necessity of trade, and permitted by the customs of commerce. Thus it comes to pass that in many business transactions "yes" and "no" are words hastily uttered, which convey and are intended to convey a meaning contrary to the reality. How much of the crimes of business result from the habits of untruth acquired in childhood and not condemned by fathers!

Honesty is intimately associated with truthfulness. The eagerness for gain is easily aided by departure from truth. "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer," when he desires to obtain an article at a less price than it is worth. Very often the dishonesty is gloried in rather than condemned. So also in selling. The value of the article is declared greater than its real worth, and the extra price obtained by the lie is regarded as the lawful prize of sharpness. It is to be feared that in most buying and selling there is deliberate lying. This is considered by many dealers as of no consequence in little things, when in large matters it may cause absolute ruin or enormous wealth. If fathers would avoid helping their boys to develop in after years into creators of guilty wealth or of widespread ruin, let them be taught in early years to abhor lying and cheating. Similar hints might be suggested respecting industry and indolence. This is property—opportunity for useful work is something given by the Heavenly Father to His earthly children, and to waste it is akin to trampling bread under our feet. Diligence in the father will encourage diligence in the child, and lead to diligence in after life, with happiness in others and beneficence to the needy. Modesty in behavior to little girls should be thoughtfully cherished in young boys as well as youths, who should be early trained to be the protection and reliant friends of the weaker playmates. Fathers should avoid all improper conduct toward young women, and all coarse language, if they would train their boys to be virtuous and decent youths. Fathers should carefully watch the studies and the sports of their boys. Latin or Greek books are often used in the school unfit for translation, and though certain odes of Horace are marked off as forbidden to the boys, the very forbidding often attracts the perusal and plants the poison.

There are mysteries in the physical frame which cannot easily be explained to the young, which it is impossible to conceal. Is it right to disguise or hide them altogether? Will not the young ask questions most natural for them to ask, and important for them to know, in order to behave themselves aright? If children are reproved for asking such questions, will not the same questions be asked from others not so able or so safely to be trusted? Some parents resort to fiction, and invent fables and fancies which are sure to be discovered and unravelled, and thus do great harm when the youths discover that they have been deceived. Will not the truth of facts, soberly and solemnly explained, be more conducive to purity, both in themselves and toward others, than any stern repression or any falsified delusion?

This course will be made easy if in regard to all other subjects there is diligence in explanation. Children from the first ask question—"How?" "When?" "Why?" Tell as plainly as their child minds can comprehend the origin of plants, the growth of seeds, the development of birds, the progress of nature in all operations, and the mysteries connected with our own physical nature will greatly diminish, that is, will cease to seem so different from everything else. So with many of the difficult parts of the Bible. Never let us deceive children by mere fancies. What God has plainly revealed let us as plainly make known, or distinctly declare to be one of other parts of the sacred history that are reserved for their knowledge in after years. If children come to us asking for explanations, let us not reprove them as too curious, but welcome their desire for knowledge, and let us explain as far as we can. If young persons come to us with some theological difficulty, let us welcome such signs of religious curiosity and do all we can to satisfy it. So if they ask us to explain some difficulty in the sermons they hear, let the difficulties they speak of encourage us as symptoms of religious investigation. Let not these difficulties distress us. Tennyson says that there may be more truth in some skeptical doubts than in half the creeds. If we know how to take this aphorism, this is true.

At the age of eighty-five, looking back on a long experience of fathers and children in many families, there are hints I feel disposed to add, which might prove more or less commendable or useful, but my space is already occupied. A parent's chief duty and endeavor should be to bring up his children as children of God, and therefore to cultivate the divine life. But there is danger lest external forms should take the place of religion itself. A child may be drilled into attitudes and forms which look like real piety, but injuriously exclude it by the outward show of it. Better the real beating of the young heart toward God than any amount of mere pretence. Beware of mere premature piety. Old age sobriety is not juvenile virtue, nor is childish uproar a proof of ungodly tendencies. The development of nature does not of necessity indicate immoral impulses, but may rather be the early germs of pure tendencies. Do not expect to find in children or in young men what is befitting the solemnities of age. Carefully separate and condemn what is immoral, but at the same time smile on all that is true and may be accepted from God. Specially beware of introducing to your children stories that involve sin, and at the same time show your interest in entertaining books and youthful games which make your children understand that you are not opposed to their daily amusements. Be careful in your discipline not to reprove innocent fun; and never be severe over faults which may only be neglect of some of the orders of the household. Do not treat foibles as crimes. Take your part in youthful pranks. Laugh with the laughters in innocent mirth. Show approval of what interests your children, and thus give greater emphasis to your condemnation of what is wrong. Take obvious interest in their early struggles to learn, to speak, to sing, to recite, to work. Encourage the fullest confidence with their parents. Urge them never to do, or read, or find pleasure in anything which they would be ashamed to tell father or mother; and whatever they would keep secret from them, let them resolve never to do themselves.

Be careful of the conversation you encourage in their presence. Never make game of religion or religious people. Do not ridicule or censure people who may belong to some other church or denomination. Treat all who love God and wish to live godly lives as, with themselves, sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. Try to teach them that all belong to the same family of heaven who try to serve and please God. Tell them that in after years they may learn what these differences mean, but that meanwhile we must love them all as children of God. Let them, above all things else, try in everything to please their Heavenly Father, and so best to give joy to yourselves. Let not your prevailing topic of discourse be social quarrels or commercial schemes or the gain or loss of money, but the fear of God, which is "better than riches, and the gain thereof than fine gold."

whether his paper is properly managed, are questions upon which no opinion is expressed. Those who read the article of Rev. C. H. Briggs, given below, will not be able to judge. It is likely that no readers of fair and well-balanced minds will condemn Dr. Palmore from reading this article alone. The spirit of it is such that the reader says, "Well, that man is mad, and his statements and conclusions are prejudiced." It is not stated that he is mad or prejudiced, but the reading of the article would lead one to think so, and so the article destroys itself very largely. He does not give Dr. Palmore his honorary title of "Dr.," or his usual title of "Rev.," or his Methodist title of "Bro.," but calls him plain "Mr." His closing paragraph is somewhat amusing. He says, "The paper has degenerated into a personal organ of its editor, and is no longer a true exponent of Missouri Methodism." This is dogmatic and positive, to say the least of it, but when one recalls the fact that Dr. Palmore was elected chairman of the delegation to the General Conference from this Conference, and that Rev. C. H. Briggs, his critic, although a presiding elder, had fewer votes than Dr. Palmore had, and that the election was only last fall, and that the suggestion of the Publishing Interests Committee was made to Dr. Palmore "some years ago," it looks as if Rev. C. H. Briggs is hardly the one to give an authoritative statement as to who is the "true exponent of Missouri Methodism." One would think more highly of this statement if the writer of it had said that, "in his opinion," this was true.

It looks to an outsider as if Presiding Elder Briggs and Editor Hoss are prejudiced against Dr. Palmore, and as if they are also trying to do all they can to destroy his influence in the approaching General Conference. They know his views on the great questions to be decided there—the "War Claim," the management of the Nashville Advocate, the number of Bishops to be elected, the presiding-eldership, episcopal prerogative, etc.—and such a man might have great influence. This may not be the case, but it looks as if that might be the object. Certainly, if their views are accepted by all the readers of the Nashville Advocate, that will be the result of their conduct.

But, as was said in the beginning, the thing to be specially noted is that Dr. Hoss has sawed off the limb on which he has been swinging, and cannot defend his course in the matter of the "War Claim" after this publication. This, however, is not surprising to those who have followed his career and have watched his conduct. The article of Dr. Briggs follows:

"EPHRAIM'S VIEWS ABOUT W. C. T. U."

Under the above heading the St. Louis Advocate of February 5th contains an anonymous attack upon one of our Bishops, which would be a disgrace to "yellow journalism." A coward who dares not face the light of open day skulks behind a nom de plume to shoot his poisoned arrows at one of the noblest and greatest men of Methodism. Trenchant wit that smote religious fanaticism is falsely represented as low buffoonery, and a whole Conference is insulted by the insinuation that the preachers laughed because they had to.

The use of tobacco, whiskey and beer drinking and polygamy are put in the same category, and justified by arguments that falsely pretend to be warranted by the Bishop's remarks. As though this were not enough, the writer represents the Bishop as a mainstay of whiskey drinking Church members. The whole article is marked by coarseness, scurrility, and mendacity. And this low product of a diseased and depraved imagination is given to the Church by an editor who poses as the special champion of purity and decency, and who publishes in the next issue of his paper the fact that the boys—his "New Century Knights"—in voting to express their choice of their ideal of manhood, gave him the second place—just a little below Washington and above Moody, Wesley, and Marvin.

If the Church at large is amazed that a Southern Methodist paper should prove so unworthy, let it be remembered that the Church has no control over the St. Louis Advocate. Its editor owes his position, not to the choice of his brethren, but to the fact that he was able to invest $22,500 in the paper.

Some years ago the Committee on Books and Periodicals of the Southwest Missouri Conference, by a unanimous vote ventured the suggestion that the paper did not in all things interpret the mind and heart of the Church. To this Mr. Palmore's lofty reply was that it was the business of the paper "to interpret the mind and heart of God." If since then he has entertained the slightest doubt of his infallibility as the interpreter of "the mind and heart of God," he has not allowed the expression of that doubt to appear in the paper.

Free discussion is unknown in the columns of the St. Louis Advocate. Members of the last General Conference of as high standing as Dr. J. H. Pritchett and Judge Rich, of Missouri, were shut out of the paper because they would not endorse the editor's extreme course, while any screed seemed welcome that was a scream against the book agents.

The paper has degenerated into a personal organ of its editor, and is no longer a true exponent of Missouri Methodism.—Nashville Advocate.

Religious News.

Professor R. E. Blackwell lectured before the faculty and students of the Blackstone Institute on Monday night, March 3d. The subject of the lecture was "Chances." The method employed was the reading of "Prologue," with analysis and comment. It was a helpful and pleasant evening. The only drawback was the shortness of the visit, as classes called him back to Randolph-Macon after a short stay.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

Rev. R. H. Bennett presided at the Methodist preachers' meeting at Epworth church yesterday morning, and prayer was offered by the Rev. H. C. Cheatham.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

Rev. R. H. Bennett offered the following resolutions of sympathy for Rev. W. R. Proctor, president of the body, who recently lost his brother, Rev. F. W. Proctor. They were adopted by a rising vote:

"Resolved, That we have learned with deep sorrow of the death of our brother, Rev. F. W. Proctor, and while we rejoice in his deliverance from pain and suffering, and in his translation to the upper kingdom, we delight to treasure the memory of his sweet and noble life; we extend to his sorrowing wife, to his mother and sister, and to our president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, and to all the bereaved in their distress our tenderest brotherly love and sympathy, and pray that the blessed grace of our Lord Jesus may minister unto them, sustaining and comforting them until this mortal shall put on immortality, death shall be no more, and may receive an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

"Resolved, That our secretary be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to the wife of our deceased brother, and to the president of this body, Rev. W. R. Proctor.

"R. H. BENNETT,

"EDWARD T. DADMUN."

Rev. W. R. Proctor, in tender words, thanked the body for their warm expressions of sympathy with him and the family of his brother in their bereavement, and said that his brother passed away in great peace and triumph, giving full assurance of his entrance into the heavenly rest.

Rev. C. H. McGhee addressed the meeting at some length on the importance of a more united effort of prayer on the part of the ministry and the Church for God to open up to them a way by which, under His providence, something may be done to stop the tide of worldliness and wickedness now so prevalent in Norfolk, and to save the souls of the young of our city, and he asked that the meeting engage in special prayer for the direction of God's Holy Spirit in bringing about this much desired object. After several earnest talks by Revs. H. C. Cheatham, R. H. Bennett, E. T. Dadmun, and E. H. Rawlings, prayers were offered by Revs. H. C. Cheatham, C. H. McGhee, E. T. Dadmun, and Dr. A. Coke Smith.

At Huntersville church there was a good Sunday school and Epworth League meeting. Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins preached at 11 A. M., and the pastor, Rev. H. C. Cheatham, preached at night.

Rev. J. P. Barrett, of the Christian Memorial Temple, conducted fine services Sunday and had a very pleasant day.

Rev. Mr. Smith, of Oaklett and Bethel churches, reported the work moving along pleasantly in his two charges. He preached in the morning at Oaklett, and in the afternoon at Bethel.

Port Norfolk—Rev. Daniel T. Merritt preached at 11 A. M. and at 7:30 P. M. Rev. Ernest Stevens, of Owens' Memorial church, occupied the pulpit. The co-operative revival is still in progress.

McKendree—Fine congregations attended the services Sunday. There was a large communion service. Rev. Dr. Judkins preached at 11 A. M., and the pastor, Rev. W. R. Proctor, preached at night. There was one conversion at the evening service.

Rev. George H. McFaden reported 312 scholars present at the Sunday school at Wright Memorial church and large congregations at morning and evening services.

At Cumberland Street church, the pastor, Rev. C. L. Bane, reported large congregations. There was one conversion, seven members received on profession of faith, and one by certificate.

Dr. Smith preached at Epworth Sunday morning, and Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at night. Two members were received by certificate.

Rev. J. N. Latham had his usual services at Park View, and received one new member by certificate.

Rev. W. P. Jordan attended the Sunday school at Park Place and preached for Rev. Dr. Barrett at Providence in the afternoon.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings received six members at Monumental Sunday, three on profession and three by certificate. He said there had been fifteen conversions during the revival meeting, and that the services would be continued this week.

Rev. H. C. Cheatham preached at Queen Street at 11 A. M. Sunday, and the pastor, Rev. J. K. Jolliff, preached at night.

Talmage's Sermon

WASHINGTON. —In this discourse Dr. Talmage depicts the struggle of a man who desires liberation from the enthrallment of evil and shows how he may be set free; text, Proverbs xxiii, 35: "When shall I awake? I will seek it yet again."

With an insight into human nature such as no other man ever had, Solomon in these words is sketching the mental processes of a man who has stepped aside from the path of rectitude and would like to return. Wishing for something better he says: "When shall I awake? When shall I get over this horrible nightmare of iniquity?" But seized upon by, uneradicated appetite and pushed down hill by his passions he cries out: "I will seek it yet again. I will try it once more."

About a mile from Princeton, N. J., there is a skating pond. One winter day, when the ice was very thin, a farmer living near by warned the young men of the danger of skating at that time. They all took the warning except one young man. He, in the spirit of bravado, said, "Boys, one round more." He struck out on his skates, the ice broke, and his lifeless body was brought up. And in all matters of temptation and allurements it is not a prolongation that is proposed, but only just one more indulgence, just one more sin. Then comes the fatality. Alas for the one round more! "I will seek it yet again."

Our libraries are adorned with elegant literature addressed to young men, pointing out to them all the dangers and perils of life. Complete maps of the voyage of life—the shoals, the rocks, the quicksands. But suppose a young man is already shipwrecked, suppose he is already off the track, suppose he has already gone astray—how can he get back? That is a question that remains unanswered, and amid all the books of the libraries I find not one word on that subject. To that class of persons I this day address myself.

You compare what you are now with what you were three or four years ago, and you are greatly disheartened. You are ready with every passion of your soul to listen to a discussion like this. Be of good cheer! Your best days are yet to come. I offer you the hand of welcome and rescue. I put the silver trumpet of the gospel to my lips and blow one long, loud blast, saying, "Whosoever will, let him come, and let him come now." The church of God is ready to spread a banquet upon your return, and all the hierarchs of heaven fall into line of bannered procession over your redemption.

Moral Gravitation Overcome.

Years ago, and while yet Albert Barnes was living, I preached in his pulpit one night to the young men of Philadelphia. In the opening of my discourse I said, "O Lord, give me one soul tonight!" At the close of the service Mr. Barnes introduced a young man, saying, "This is the young man you prayed for." But I see now it was a too limited prayer. I offer no such prayer today. It must take in a wider sweep. "Lord, give us all these souls today for happiness and heaven!"

So far as God may help me I propose to show what are the obstacles to your return and then how you are to surmount those obstacles. The first difficulty in the way of your return is the force of moral gravitation. Just as there is a natural law which brings down to earth anything you throw into the air, so there is a corresponding moral gravitation. I never shall forget a prayer I heard a young man make in the Young Men's Christian association of New York. With trembling voice and streaming eyes he said: "O God, thou knowest how easy it is for me to do wrong and how hard it is for me to do right! God help me!" That man knows not his own heart who has never felt the power of moral gravitation.

In your boyhood you had good associates and bad associates. Which most impressed you? During the last few years you have heard pure anecdotes and impure anecdotes. Which the easiest stuck to your memory? You have had good habits and bad habits. To which did your soul more easily yield? But that moral gravitation may be resisted. Just as you may pick up anything from the earth and hold it in your hand toward heaven, just so, by the power of God's grace, a fallen soul may be lifted toward peace, toward pardon, toward salvation. The force of moral gravitation is in every one of us, but also power in God's grace to overcome that force.

The next thing in the way of your return is the power of evil habit. I know there are those who say it is very easy for them to give up evil habits. I cannot believe them. Here is a man given to intoxication, who knows it is disgracing his family, destroying his property and ruining his body, mind and soul. If that man, being an intelligent man and loving his family, could easily give up that habit, would he not do so? The fact that he does not give it up proves that it is hard to give it up. It is a very easy thing to sail down stream, the tide carrying you with great force, but suppose you turn the boat up stream—is it so easy then to row it? As long as we yield to the evil inclinations in our heart and to our bad habits we are sailing down stream, but the moment we try to turn we put our boat in the rapids just above Niagara and try to row up stream.

Force of Habit.

A physician tells his patient that he must quit the use of tobacco, as it is destroying his health. The man replies, "I can stop that habit easy enough." He quits the use of the weed. He goes around not knowing what to do with himself. He cannot add up a column of figures; he cannot sleep nights. It seems as if the world had turned upside down. He feels his business is going to ruin. Where he was kind and obliging he is scolding and fretful. The composure that characterized him has given way to a fretful restlessness, and he has become a complete fidget. What power is it that has rolled a wave of woe over the earth and shaken a portent in the heavens? He has quit tobacco. After awhile he says: "I am going to do as I please; the doctor does not understand my case. I am going back to my old habits." And he returns. Everything assumes its usual composure. His business seems to brighten. The world becomes an attractive place to live in. His children, seeing the difference, hail the return of their father's genial disposition. What wave of color has dashed blue into the sky and greenness into the mountain foliage and the glow of saffron into the sunset?

What enchantment has lifted a world of beauty and joy on his soul? He has resumed tobacco.

The fact is we all know in our own experience that habit is a taskmaster. As long as we obey it it does not chastise us. But let us resist it and we find that we are lashed with scorpion whips and bound with ship cable and thrown into the track of bone breaking juggernauts.

In Paris there is a sculptured representation of Bacchus, the god of revelry. He is riding on a panther at full leap. Oh, how suggestive! Let every one who is speeding on bad ways understand he is not riding a docile and well broken steed, but that he is riding a monster wild and bloodthirsty and going at a death leap.

I have also to say if a man wants to return from evil practices society repulses him. The prodigal, wishing to return, tries to take some professor of religion by the hand. The professor of religion looks at him, looks at the faded apparel and the marks of dissipation, and instead of giving him a firm grip of the hand offers him the tip end of the longer fingers of the left hand, which is equal to striking a man in the face. Oh, how few Christian people understand how much gospel there is in a good, honest handshaking! Sometimes when you have felt the need of encouragement and some Christian man has taken you heartily by the hand have you not felt thrilling through every fiber of your body, mind and soul an encouragement that was just what you needed?

Lift Up the Fallen.

The prodigal, wishing to get into good society, enters a prayer meeting. Some good man without much sense greets him by saying: "Why are you here? You are about the last person that I expected to see in a prayer meeting. Well, the dying thief was saved, and there is hope for you." You do not know anything about this, unless you have learned that when a man tries to return from evil courses of conduct he runs against repulsions innumerable.

We say of some man, "He lives a block or two from the church, or half a mile from the church." In all our great cities there are men who are 5,000 miles from church—vast deserts of indifference between them and the house of God. The fact is we must keep our respectability though thousands perish. Christ sat with publicans and sinners, but if there come to the house of God a man with marks of dissipation upon him people are almost sure to put up their hands in horror, as much as to say, "Is it not shocking?"

How these dainty, fastidious Christians in all our churches are going to get into heaven I do not know unless they have an especial train of cars cushioned and upholstered, each one a car to himself. They cannot go with the great herd of publicans and sinners. O ye who curl your lip of scorn on the fallen, I tell you plainly that if you had been surrounded by the same influences instead of sitting today amid the cultured and the refined and the Christian you might have been a crouching wretch in stable or ditch covered with filth and abomination! It is not because we are naturally any better, but because the mercy of God has protected us. Those that are brought up in Christian circles and watched by Christian parentage should not be so hard on the fallen.

I think also that men are often hindered from returning by the fact that churches are anxious about their membership, too anxious about their denominations, and they rush out when they see a man about to give up sin and return to God and ask him how he is going to be baptized, whether by sprinkling or immersion, and what kind of a church he is going to join. It is a poor time to talk about Presbyterian catechism and Episcopal liturgies and Methodist love feasts and Baptist immersions when a man is about to come out of the darkness of sin into the glorious light of the gospel.

Helpfulness of Religion.

Why, it reminds me of a man drowning in the sea and a lifeboat puts out for him, and the man in the boat says to the man in the water, "Now, if you get ashore are you going to live in my street?" First get him ashore and then talk to him about the nonessentials of religion. Who cares what church he joins if he only joins Christ and starts for heaven? O you, my brother of illumined face and a hearty grip for every one that tries to turn from his evil way, take hold of the same hymnbook with him, though his dissipation shake the book, remembering that he that "converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins."

Now, I have shown you these obstacles because I want you to understand I know all the difficulties in the way. But I am now going to tell you how Hannibal may scale the Alps and how the shackles may be unriveted and how the paths of virtue forsaken may be regained. First of all, throw yourself on God. Go to him frankly and earnestly and tell him these habits you have and ask him if there is any help in all the resources of omnipotent love to give it to you. Do not go on with a long rigmarole, which some people call prayer, made up of obs and ahs and forever and forever amens. Go to God and cry for help.

I remember that in the civil war I was at Antietam with other members of the Christian commission to look after the wounded. I went into the hospital after the battle, and I said to a man, "Where are you hurt?" He made no answer, but held up his arm, swollen and splintered. I saw where he was hurt. The simple fact is when a man has a wounded soul all he has to do is to hold it up before a sympathetic Lord and get it healed.

"Young man, I will stand by you. The mountains may depart and the hills be removed, but I will never fail you." And then, as the soul thinks the news is too good to be true and cannot believe it and looks up in God's face, God lifts his right hand and takes an affidavit, makes an oath, saying, "As I live," saith the Lord God, "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Blessed be God for such gospel as this! "Cut the slices thin," says the wife to the husband, "for there will not be enough to go around for all the children; cut the slices thin." Blessed be God, there is a full loaf for every one that wants it. Bread and enough to spare! No thin slices on the Lord's table!

Advice to Young Men.

I remember that while living in Philadelphia at the time I spoke of a minute ago the Master Street hospital was opened, and a telegram was received, saying: "There will be 300 wounded men tonight. Please take care of them." From my church there went out twenty or thirty men and women. As the poor wounded men were brought in no one asked them from what state they came or what was their parentage. There was a wounded soldier, and the only question was how to take off the rags most gently and put on the cool bandage and administer the cordial. And when a soul comes to God he does not ask where you came from or what your ancestry was.

The Home Circle.

A FRIEND.

I have a Friend so precious,
So very dear to me,
He loves me with such tender love,
He loves so faithfully,
I could not live apart from Him.
I love to feel Him nigh,
And so we dwell together,
My Lord and I.

Sometimes I'm faint and weary,
He knows that I am weak,
And as He bids me lean on Him,
His help I gladly seek;
He leads me in the paths of light
Beneath a sunny sky,
And so we walk together,
My Lord and I.

"THE CHANGED CROSS."

By Mrs. O. W. Scott.

The accommodation train whistled and coughed and stopped at a small country station. The usual fringe of idlers stood on the platform to do it reverence, and at one side was a farm wagon, the sorrel horse attached to it whisking his tail stupidly, much to the disappointment, apparently, of the driver, who held his bridle with a determined hand.

The parties who had been brought to the station—a man and his wife, with three small boys—saw their trunk thrown aboard and climbed the car steps.

"Good-bye, Fuller; just look over once in a while to see the house ain't carried off," said the man, waving his hand.

"You see, you didn't need to worry so about getting here, Lottie," he continued, as he edged his way through the aisle with a heavy bag in one hand, a box in the other, and the boys clinging to him promiscuously.

"If I hadn't we'd be over in Stubb's woods this minute," she responded, dropping into a seat and relieving her hands of several half-wrapped packages. It was a warm morning, and she had evidently reached a point in weariness and general demoralization where the passengers were no more to her than so many dummies. "There!" she exclaimed, "I never shut that attic window, and if it rains—"

"I shut it, Lottie," replied her husband, looking somewhat embarrassed. "Do you want to make room for Willie in that seat?"

"No, I don't. Do buy 'em some peanuts or candy and set 'em down out the other end of the car. I think I might have a few minutes to get my breath after what I've been through this morning."

The man in the seat just behind her glanced over his newspaper and coughed slightly, as if to remind her of his presence, and her husband's face flushed under its coat of tan.

"Well," he assented, putting the box he carried into the rack above her head and turning away.

The pretty baby face of the youngest boy wore a grieved expression, as if he were choking back his tears and complaints, but he trotted obediently, holding fast to his father's coat.

The mother took off her jacket, which was neither new nor stylish, gave a quick glance around to see what other women wore, pulled down the cuffs of her shirt waist, removed her hat, and after cramming the packages on the seat into her hand bag, she leaned against the window and looked wearily out at the ever-changing, sunshine-steeped landscape.

A half hour later the train stopped again at a small village, and a group of ladies bade gay good-byes to friends and entered the car. There were few vacant seats, and one of the ladies, tall and distinguished in appearance, paused with a "Is this seat engaged?"

"No," replied our friend.

The lady gave her a quick inquiring glance as she sat down, noting her almost discourteous tone.

"There are not usually many passengers at this point, I imagine, but some of us old Brightwood students have been spending a week at Professor Gray's fruit farm, and are just returning," she said, half apologetically.

There was a moment's silence, and then the farmer's wife turned toward her eagerly, as she asked, "Did you graduate at Brightwood?"

"Yes, eleven years ago, and for five years I have been there as a teacher. Do you know the school?"

"I graduated there myself ten years ago," was the unexpected answer.

"O! Please tell me your name. You must have been one of the juniors when my class left."

"My name was Lottie Granger, but now it's Lottie Smith. I got married right away. My husband and three little boys are out the other end of the car."

"Indeed! and do you recall a senior named Edith Burrows?"

"Why, yes; she was smart and took some of the prizes. Was that your name?"

"And is still. I have Latin classes in the same old rooms. Do you remember?"

"O my! I guess I do, for I didn't have any use for Latin. I liked the sciences first rate, but, my land! what does it all amount to? It's different with you; you've gone right on and got somewhere, but I married a farmer and never went ahead. I've forgot 'most all I learnt, and all I've got for it is a discontented spirit."

The voice was tense with feeling—a combination evidently of regret and rebellion.

"But you had your training," replied Miss Burrows' low, clear voice. I think that is the chief end of education to the individual—that enrichment of the mind which no circumstance or condition can take from you."

"I suppose so"—the answering voice was still querulous—"but I've degenerated; I guess that's the trouble. Anybody would, though, in my place, having to work so hard year in and year out. If a girl's going to marry a farmer, or a mechanic, for that matter, she's better off, I say, without too much education. There you are, out of society, and you must cook, cook, cook, and look after eggs and milk and vegetables, and your children play in the dirt, and your clothes get old-fashioned and you get to feeling as though you didn't belong anywhere."

There was a half smile on the teacher's face, but it disappeared as she saw a tear splash upon Mrs. Smith's tightly twisted fingers. This was not simply the complaint of a nervous, tired woman, but of a fretting soul out of harmony with her environments.

Miss Burrows hesitated, and began, "I know there are women who are unfortunate in their marriage—"

"It ain't - isn't - so with me," interrupted the other. "David is better than I am. He thought 'twas wonderful that I'd marry him after I'd got through Brightwood."

"You are a Christian, aren't you?" was the next question in the even, cultured tone.

"Why, yes, I hope so. I've been a church member a number of years."

"Then you believe that God cares for His children; that He does direct their lives?"

"Y-e-e-s, I suppose He does."

"Then He gave you the opportunity to secure an education, not accidentally, but that you might be a stronger and more useful woman. Then when you loved a man well enough to marry him I am sure you did not think that was an accident. God gave you your boys too. Do you realize what a wonderful privilege it is to have the training of three men-to-be? And on a farm, with nature's great text-book open before you!"

The mother of "three men-to-be" shook herself impatiently. "I don't see just what you mean," she said. "I could wash 'em and dress 'em and get their meals as well if I hadn't studied Latin, and not feel half as 'abused' as I do now."

"I suspect so, if you think only of their bodies, but the study and the knowledge you acquired give you such an advantage in starting them mentally, and spiritually as well, in the right direction. You can teach them about the stars and trees and flowers and birds and insects. Why, Mrs. Smith, if you had been a teacher you might have enjoyed to teach other people's children, but to have your own when they are so pure and sweet—" There was a little catch in the teacher's voice which so astonished Mrs. Smith that she could not rally for an instant.

Finally she said: "Honestly, I hadn't thought of that. I've thought about the clubs I've read about, where women get together and discuss things, and wished and wished I could have a chance to sort of rub up my wits that way and make something out of my schooling, but—"

There was a look of perplexity, almost of despair, on the teacher's fine face as she said quickly:

"Clubs are well enough in their place, but the world is just suffering for mothers—mothers who can use what the schools have given in making good homes and training children. Why—" she paused an instant, as if language failed to express her feelings, and then added with new emphasis—"if you were a teacher you would only have second chance; the mother has the first. Our work is toward the same end, to make better men and women, and so a grander nation. And God has given to you—"

"Ipswich Junction! Ipswich Junetion! Change for trains going south—Canton, Manchester—" and the brakeman's voice trailed off a list of unintelligible names.

"So soon? I had no idea we were near the Junction. I must say good-bye," and Miss Burrows rose.

"You don't know what you've done for me. I—I guess it was providential, your coming into my seat. I won't forget. Good-bye."

So they parted, and the train rumbled on.

A few moments of silence with her face close to the window, and then Mrs. Smith rose and made her way back to her husband and children. Little Willie was asleep, his dimpled face pressed against the father's breast.

"There's an empty seat next to mine now," she said; "won't you come? I guess the boys want something to eat by this time; we sha'n't reach grandpa's till after dinner."

"I saw a woman sitting with you, Lottie, and I was awful sorry; I'm afraid she bothered you," said her husband, while the little boys stretched themselves and drew long breaths of relief as they started for the longed-for luncheon.

Lottie's face flushed, and she shook her head thoughtfully as she responded, "No, she didn't bother me; she explained things and did me lots of good. You'll see, David."

Then she lifted Willie from his father's arms tenderly, and as she brushed the damp curls from his forehead she murmured, "Mother's little man!"

WORSE THAN A BLOW from a hard fist is the buffet of cold wind upon a pair of improperly protected lungs. A few minutes exposure to cold may be the beginning of consumption. Lose neither time nor courage. Fortify yourself against pulmonary troubles, including consumption, with Allen's Lung Balsam. A few doses will loosen the cough and enable you to get rid of the phlegm that produces it. Cure soon follows.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

There is much rejoicing in Washington over the release of Miss Stone, both at the State Department and among the people. The officials of the department are particularly gratified over her safe return, because it has been accomplished by a series of most exacting and painstaking negotiations, which are, however, passed over in the general thankfulness at her deliverance. There have been times when the department has been accused of dilatoriness, but there has never been a proper realization, on the part of the general public, of the extreme delicacy with which the whole problem had to be approached, not only to guard the safety of Miss Stone, but to meet duplicity on the part of her unscrupulous captors. Added to this was the real danger that the possession of Miss Stone would be fought for by different bands of marauders for the sake of the ransom—a contingency that actually arose on one occasion and was attended with grave danger to the captives. While her captivity was a terrible experience, especially in mental anguish, its conclusion leaves a deep feeling of thankfulness that it did not terminate in martyrdom.

This week sees the last of the women's conventions in Washington, the Mothers' Congress having just begun its sessions. The meeting marks several important changes in the organization, and one of them will have a deep significance. It is no less than an entire revision of the name and purposes of the society, so that it will no longer be confined to mothers, but will also be open to the fathers of the country, the name becoming "The National Council of Fathers and Mothers." A resolution to this effect has been already introduced, but will not be voted on until next Friday. One of the exhibits at the Congress is the baby incubator and model nursery that attracted so much attention at the Pan-American Exposition.

The National Council of Women finished its meetings yesterday after some very interesting sessions during the week. The last meetings were particularly significant. Mrs. Susan Young Gates, of Utah, made an urgent appeal relative to the decreasing birth rate among native Americans, and drew some marked comparisons between the honor that is attendant on maternity in other countries and the burden of reproach that is cast on the mother of a large family here. The question of an annuity for Miss Clara Barton, of the Red Cross Society, was taken up in the form of a resolution urging Congress to provide a pension of $5,000 for the head of the Red Cross Association, on account of her great services to the country and to the cause of humanity all over the world. The resolution was passed unanimously and with much applause.

The visit of Prince Henry has rather cast into the shadow the ordinary activities of the capital, yet the undercurrent of life goes on as usual, whether gilded with the pomp of royalty and display or not. Prince Henry happened to visit the Senate at the time of a very exciting session over the question of the disenfranchisement of the two South Carolina Senators on account of their disgraceful quarrel on the floor of the upper chamber last Saturday. In this connection it is an item of interest commented on by the more religious Senators, that on Saturday, the chaplain, Dr. Milburn, was late at the time of opening, and in the hurry to get through the important measures before the body, the opening prayer was omitted. On that day occurred the most disgraceful scene and the only personal encounter that the Senate has known for thirty years.

In pleasant contrast to some members of the Washington social set is the naive simplicity of Miss Alice Roosevelt, the daughter of the President. She is fond of society, and had looked forward with much pleasure to the special preparations she should make for the reception of Prince Henry, and particularly to a beautiful gown which was to have been made in New York to wear at the christening of the Emperor's yacht. But the news of her brother's illness changed all these plans, and it speaks much for her unselfish and sisterly interest and affection that she hastened to the sick bed of her younger brother, to nurse him through his illness. Consequently she did not have that delight of a young girl's heart, a new costume for a special occasion. She has been the recipient of many urgent appeals to christen the "Meteor" with water instead of the customary champagne, and it was reported that she contemplated giving this reform that sanction which her place in the country would naturally confer upon it. But whatever plans she may have had were set aside by the action of the Prince, who brought from Germany the bottle of native wine that the Emperor wished to have used when the vessel glided from the ways. As a mark of courtesy and deference to the wishes of the Emperor, Miss Roosevelt could hardly refuse to acquiesce in his wishes.

Following the enactment of the New Hebrides bill, which became a law on the 12th, Secretary Hay has sent an invitation to the British Government to join with this in the effort to repress the trade in spirits with the natives of uncivilized islands and countries—a trade which not only cheats them of their goods, but also acts as a factor in their degradation. It opens up a great humanitarian movement equal in importance to any in the Christian world today. Legislation of this kind, concurred in by the most powerful nations, will do more for the real uplifting of primitive peoples than all the other influences of so-called civilization accompanied by civilization's vices. As England has been pledged in her former colonial policies to discourage the liquor traffic among the aboriginal races with which she comes in contact, it is not believed that she will hold aloof from the international crusade, so that a world treaty to make the provisions of the New Hebrides bill universal and permanent will mark the culminating point. This last step is now in the hands of the "Native Races Deputation," whose representatives will visit the courts of the world in the interests of this great movement of the new century.

The whole question of liquor traffic is attracting more attention than ever before, here at the national capital, elsewhere in the country, and, in fact, all over the world. New York is in the throes of a campaign on the question, but her reformers are too much interested in the politics of the case to see clearly the sociological aspects at the present time. However, such excellent work is being done in some quarters that the metropolis may soon be led out of its bondage into a higher and better way of thinking and living. The cry of reform is in the air here as everywhere else, and, while it is hard to get national legislation, the success of the Reform Bureau in the New Hebrides bill points the way to other work that can be done successfully.

By the way, the President signed the New Hebrides bill last Saturday when he returned from the sick bed of his son, and has presented to Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, president of the Reform Bureau, the pen with which the measure was signed.

The cause of temperance will always be aided by the dissemination of facts that deal with the national aspects of alcoholism, and all figures of value in the work should be brought to the notice of legislators. The practical values set by insurance companies on risks where alcoholism plays a part shows that sense and sentiment are hand-in-hand in this matter. And some statistics recently gathered in France have a profound bearing on the question. It has been demonstrated that alcoholism in parents results in frightful infant mortality through several generations, and some sociologists are looking to this cause as one of the principal factors in the figures of decrease in the French population.

The Young Women's Christian Temperance Union has just held a quarterly meeting, reviewing much excellent work done during the last quarter, particularly in the lines of non-alcoholic medication, the use of the punch bowl in modern society, and Sunday observance. The best work, and a unique one that could be profitably followed by similar organizations all over the country, has been in connection with the coffee urn that this society has presented and maintained at Fort Myer, the big cavalry recruiting station across the Potomac river from Washington. These young women have done a great deal to make this post exchange pleasant and attractive to the soldiers, and have thus refuted one of the most potent arguments of the pro-canteen forces, that the loss of the canteen took from the men a source of pleasure and recreation for which no substitute was given. The local society is in a most flourishing condition, as are all of its different branches.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND.—

There is no use trying to persuade American mothers that a substitute exists for Perry Davis' Painkiller. They know how it relieves the troubles of childhood, from sprained arms and legs to stomachache. Other preparations may do good, Painkiller is certain to. A big difference, and one that has been recognized for sixty years. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

and had a very interesting Sunday school institute in the afternoon.

Rev. W. A. Christian preached morning and night at Memorial, Berkley.

Centenary—Rev. E. T. Dadmun reported that he had closed the co-operative revival at his church. Rev. Geo. Wesley Jones preached last week. The meetings had resulted in much good.

Rev. D. J. Traynham preached at Beach Grove church Sunday morning and at Jolliffs in the afternoon. The work on his circuit is progressing satisfactorily.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at Le-Kies' Memorial Sunday morning. He reported that the contributions to the Epworth church debt had been increased to $2,900.—Virginian-Pilot.

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT CLUB.

Dr. A. Coke Smith presided at the meeting of the Christian Thought Club of the Methodist preachers, which met yesterday at 12 o'clock in the pastor's study at Epworth church. Rev. D. T. Merritt acted as secretary. Prayer was offered by Rev. E. H. Rawlings. The paper of the day was presented and read by Dr. Smith on the subject assigned by the committee—viz.: "What Changes, if Any, Are to be Made in Methodist Doctrine and Polity, if the Highest Usefulness is to be Attained?"

Dr. Smith thought there were no changes needed in Methodist doctrine, claiming that Methodism has won every doctrinal battle in which it has been engaged. As to Methodist polity, he held that greater usefulness would be secured by reducing the size of the presiding elders' districts and saving to the Church the expense of the presiding elders' salaries ($340,000 for the Southern Methodist Church), by making some pastor in the district also presiding elder.

He argued also for the removal of the time limit on the pastorate, for the relieving B. D. graduates of the theological seminaries from the four years' course of study in the Conferences; for one ordination, claiming that there is not enough difference between the office of deacon and elder to justify the continuance of both; for the granting of undergraduates in charge of pastorates the permission to administer communion, baptize and perform the rite of matrimony; for the election of stewards by the Church Conference and their confirmation by the Quarterly Conference; for the creation of the order of deaconess; for the creation of the offices of local secretaries of education and Church extension in connection with the district boards of the same.

He claimed that Methodism is already highly efficient, but that those minor changes would enhance its already high usefulness and remove needless friction, and that to write ne plus ultra on Methodism is to fly in the face of all that Methodism stands for.

These subjects are of especial interest just now, in view of the approaching meeting in May at Dallas, Texas, of the General Conference of Southern Methodism, the legislative body of the Church, of which Conference Dr. Smith is a member.

Healing balm for all your wounds, pardon for all your guilt, comfort for all your troubles.

Then, also, I counsel you, if you want to get back, quit all your bad associates. One unholy intimacy will fill your soul with moral distemper. In all the ages of the church there has not been an instance where a man kept one evil associate and was reformed—among the sixteen hundred million of the race not one instance. Give up your bad companions or give up heaven. It is not ten bad companions that destroy a man, nor five bad companions, nor three, but one.

What chance is there for that young man I saw along the street, four or five young men with him, in front of a grogshop, urging him to go in, he resisting—violently resisting—until after awhile they forced him to go in? It was a summer night, and the door was left open, and I saw the process. They held him fast, and they put the cup to his lips, and they forced down the strong drink. What chance is there for such a young man?

I counsel you also to seek Christian advice. Every Christian man is bound to help you. If he declines to help you, he is not a Christian. Now gather up all your energies of body, mind and soul and, appealing to God for success, declare this day everlasting war against all evil influences. A half and half work will amount to nothing; it must be a Waterloo. Shrink back now and you are lost. Push on and you are saved.

Victory Over Sin.

Some of you, like myself, were born in the country. And what glorious news might these young men send home to their parents that this afternoon they had surrendered themselves to God and started a new life! I know how it is in the country. The night comes on. The cattle stand under the rack, through which burst the trusses of hay. The horses have just frisked up from the meadow brook at the nightfall and stand knee deep in the bright straw that invites them to lie down and rest. The perch of the hovel is full of fowl, their feet warm under their feathers. When the nights get cold, the flames clap their hands above the great backlog and shake the shadow of the group up and down the wall. Father and mother sit there for half an hour, saying nothing. I wonder what they are thinking of. After awhile the father breaks the silence and says, "Well, I wonder where our boy is in town tonight." And the mother answers: "In no bad place, I warrant you. We always could trust him when he was at home, and since he has been away there have been so many prayers offered for him we can trust him still." Then at 8 or 9 o'clock, just before they retire, for they go early to bed, they kneel down and commend you to that God who watches in country and in town, on the land and on the sea.

Some one said to a Grecian general, "What was the proudest moment of your life?" He thought a moment and said, "The proudest moment was when I sent word home to my parents that I had gained the victory." And the gladdest and most brilliant moment in your life will be the moment when you can send word to your parents that you have conquered the evil habits by the grace of God and become eternal victor.

Oh, despise not parental anxiety! The time will come when you will have neither father nor mother, and you will go around the place where they used to watch you and find them gone from the house and gone from the field and gone from the neighborhood. Cry as loud for forgiveness as you may over the mound in the churchyard, they cannot answer. Dead! Dead! And then you will take out the white lock of hair that was cut from mother's brow just before they buried her, and you will take the cane with which your father used to walk, and you will think and think and wish that you had done just as they wanted you and would give the world if you had never thrust a pang through their dear old hearts.

The Door of Mercy.

God pity the young man who has brought disgrace on his father's name! God pity the young man who has broken his mother's heart! Better that he had never been born. Better if in the first hour of his life, instead of being laid against the warm bosom of maternal tenderness, he had been confined and sepulchered. There is no balm powerful enough to heal the heart of one who has brought parents to a sorrowful grave and who wanders about through the dismal cemetery rending the air and wringing the hands and crying: "Mother! Mother!" Oh, that today, by all the memories of the past and by all the hopes of the future, you would yield your heart to God! May your father's God and your mother's God be your God forever!

This hour the door of mercy swings wide open. Hesitate not a moment. In many a case hesitation is the loss of all. At the corner of a street I saw a tragedy. A young man evidently doubted as to which direction he had better take. His hat was lifted high enough so you could see he had an intelligent forehead. He had a stout chest and a robust development. Splendid young man! Cultured young man! Honored young man! Why did he stop there while so many were going up and down? The fact is that every young man has a good angel and a bad angel contending for the mastery of his spirit, and there were a good angel and a bad angel struggling with that young man's soul at the corner of the street. "Come along with me," said the good angel; "I will take you home. I will spread my wings over your pillow. I will lovingly escort you all through life under supernatural protection. I will bless every cup you drink out of, every couch you rest on, every doorway you enter. I will consecrate your tears when you weep, your sweat when you toil, and at the last I will hand over your grave into the hand of the bright angel of a Christian resurrection. I have been sent of the Lord to be your guardian spirit. Come with me," said the good angel in a voice of unearthly sympathy. It was music like that which drops from a lute of heaven when a seraph breathes on it.

"Oh, no," said the bad angel; "come with me. I have something better to offer. The wines I pour are from chalices of bewitching carousal. The dance I lead is over floors tessellated with unrestrained indulgence. There is no God to frown on the temples of sin where I worship. The skies are Italian. The paths I tread are through meadows daisied and primrosed. Come with me."

The gate of heaven is closed against even those who have nothing more to their credit than the doing of good. There must be acceptance of Christ, if entrance is to be had in the yonder world.

Yes, we must be watchful, especially in the beginning of the temptation, for the enemy is then more easily overcome if he be not suffered to enter the door of our hearts, but be resisted at the very gate on his first knocking.—Thomas a' Kempis.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

Editorial.

CHAUCEUR, NOT CHANCES.

The Recorder made Professor Blackwell lecture on "Chances," instead of on "Chaucer." The mistake gives another opportunity to say how much the lecture was enjoyed.

STUDENT MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

This great gathering met in Toronto. It means more for the world than the visit of Prince Henry, of Prussia, although one would not think so by reading the daily papers. We give a large portion of the excellent report of the Conference published in the New York Advocate, written by the assistant editor, Dr. Herben.

The Recorder has always held to the principle of fair play. No man has ever been shut out of its columns because his views did not coincide with those of the editor. Of course, there are some things that ought never to be published, but there are many things shut out by some editors because they are not willing for the facts and arguments to be presented to their readers, lest they influence their opinions. No editor should ever espouse or defend a cause unless the facts warrant it. If the facts warrant it, then there should be no objection to giving the other side a hearing. If they do not warrant it, then the editor should be glad to know it and to let his readers know it.

On the fourth and fifth pages of this issue we give three interesting communications. While the Recorder may not agree with some of the strong adjectives used in the first one about Dr. Hoss, yet he gladly publishes the article as giving the view-point of a close friend of both Dr. Hoss and the editor of the Recorder. The Recorder has never questioned the fact that Dr. Hoss has many admirable qualities, but has simply held the view that his prejudices are so strong that his judgment is not well balanced, where his prejudices become involved, and that he has in consequence made grave errors in his attitude toward the "War Claim," and in his conduct of the General Conference organ concerning this question. Had he allowed a full discussion of the matter in the Advocate, the Church would be in a far better condition today. The Recorder wishes him well in all good things, but thoroughly disapproves of many things in his course, and has said so plainly, because his position was damaging the Church. Brother Moore is right to desire his friend to be seen at his best by our Virginia Conference, and his article is gladly published.

The other two articles are gladly published. They illustrate the remarkable position taken by many editors. It would seem that Brother Cooper's article is as free from objection as any article can well be on a disagreeable subject. But the editor of the Central Advocate declined to publish it, although the view-point was in all probability a new one to his readers, and the subject one of great importance. This is the sort of editing which has been done by so many "organs," especially since the last General Conference, and explains the position of so many Conferences—they do not know the facts.

As to Dr. Kelley's letter, this editor does not see how an editor can decline such a letter as that, unless he is afraid for his readers to see it, and if that be the case, he should not continue to be editor, but should resign to give place to another, who believes in "fair play."

A NEW LIQUOR LICENSE BILL.

The Constitutional Convention, by a close vote of 24 to 28, rejected the Barbour resolution on the subject of liquor licenses, and adopted a clause referring all such questions to the General Assembly. The Anti-Saloon League lost no time in useless talk, but at once requested Judge W. H. Mann, of Nottingham, to draft a bill and offer it in the Legislature. This has been done, and the bill has been referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate.

All the friends of good morals and all the opponents of the saloon are urged to go to work at once and to arouse public sentiment in their several communities in favor of the passage of this bill. A careful reading will show several admirable features:

- (1) There must be police protection.
- (2) There must be a desire on the part of a majority of the voters for the granting of the license.
- (3) It must be shown to the satisfaction of the judge that it is not contrary to a sound public policy, or injurious to the morals or to the material interests of the community.

Surely every opponent of the saloon can work for the passage of this bill.

Write personal letters to your representatives, get your friends to write letters, send petitions, do everything possible to show your representatives in both Senate and House that you are in earnest, and that you want them to be in earnest.

Work quickly. The time is short.

The following is the section of the law, with the amendments in italics:

It shall be lawful for any person who may consider that he would be aggrieved by the granting of such license to have himself entered and made a party defendant to said application, and to defend and contest the same. If the court be fully satisfied upon the hearing of the testimony for and against the application, that the applicant is a fit person to conduct such business, and that he will keep an orderly house, and that the place at which it is to be conducted is a suitable, convenient, and appropriate place for conducting such a business, and one at which police protection is afforded, and if it shall further plainly appear to the satisfaction of the court that a majority of the qualified voters of the district or town in which the privilege is sought to be exercised are in favor of the application, that the sale of ardent spirits at that place will not be contrary to a sound public policy, or injurious to the morals, or the material interest of the community, the court may, upon the execution by the applicant of bond in the penalty of not less than two hundred and fifty dollars or more than five hundred dollars, with good security, conditioned for the faithful compliance with all the requirements of this act, grant such license; and thereupon the commissioner of the revenue shall issue the same in such form as may be prescribed by the auditor of public accounts. But if the court shall not be fully satisfied that all of the requirements of this act have been complied with, it shall refuse to grant the license. Either party to such application shall have the right to appeal from the order or judgment of the court granting or refusing such application during the term at which the application is heard to the circuit court of said county. The judge of such circuit court shall take cognizance of such appeal, and may hear the same either in term time or in vacation. And if he shall be clearly of opinion that all the requirements of this act have been fully complied with, may grant the license upon the terms prescribed in chapter two of this act, but if such requirements have not been fully complied with, he shall refuse the same, and the decision of such circuit court, or of the judge thereof in vacation, shall be final, and no appeal, writ of error, or supersedeas shall lie thereto. The party to any such proceeding who shall substantially prevail shall, in cases where such applications are contested, be entitled to recover their costs from the opposite parties as in other civil cases. All bonds taken under chapter two of this act shall contain the waiver of the homestead exemption of the obligators therein. In case an application be finally refused by the court, the applicant shall have refunded to him by the treasurer or other collecting officer the amount of money deposited by him.

BEREAVEMENTS.

Our pastors have to preach the Gospel of patience, resignation and comfort to others, and they do bring peace and strength to many weary troubled hearts. But they are not called upon simply to preach, but also to apply to their own hearts the same message of grace. During the last few weeks, some of our brethren have had bereavements in their own family circles, and have felt the need of the sustaining power of the world. Bro. Jett has lost his father, Bro. Judkin a married daughter, and Bro. Ferguson a grown son. For all of these brethren there have arisen many prayers, and there is deep sympathy. The editor knew personally only the last named. He was his father's namesake, was a very talented young doctor, and had moved to Columbia, S. C., where he had built up a fine practice, and was held in high esteem. His death was sudden, and a great shock to his father and mother. Their many friends will sympathize with them in their great grief, and pray that their strength fail not.

To the Junior Leaguers of the Virginia Conference:

Dear Fellow-Workers,—The buildings of the Virginia Conference Orphanage will be completed by July 1st. A large room in the Vincent cottage is to be called "The Junior League Room." Little children not over five years old are to occupy this room. We want the Junior Leaguers to undertake to support these homeless little ones. I therefore request the Junior Leaguers who are willing to undertake this work to write me, giving name and address of superintending.

Sincerely yours,

MRS. W. H. VINCENT,
Capron, Va.

Many of God's zealous workers are called fanatics. They are not fanatics, but heroes and heroines; and as such they are counted by God.

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELTON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

COPYRIGHT, 1899, IN U. S. A., BY ADVANCE PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO.

"Your article was accepted by two of the three readers in the office on account of its practical value to farmers' boys, many of whom are among our subscribers. You did not try to tell about something in Africa or Manila that you never saw, but you described actual experiences that were of interest and value to you at the time, and you evidently wrote for the purpose of helping others who might try the same thing that you tried and accomplished. For these reasons we can use the article, for which we beg you to accept the inclosed check," etc.

So the editor wrote, cautioning the young writer against being too much puffed up over his success.

Edward's first impulse was to show the letter to Freeda. So that evening he went over to the hall, where Freeda was now living again, and showed her the letter and the check.

She was much pleased and proud of him.

"What was the article about?"

"You remember that winter that I had more than usual spare time on the farm and I trapped the coyotes, skinned them and made the skins into carriage robes, mittens and caps? I simply told it just as it happened and drew a diagram of the new trap I made and sent it with the article. You remember, Freeda, how you helped dress the skins and how we studied up the taxidermy a little and mounted one or two of the best specimens?"

"Yes," said Freeda, with a smile.

"Did you put me into the story?"

"Of course I did, and I want you to take the check. You need some gloves or things, don't you?"

"What's the reason I can't earn a check of my own?" asked Freeda suddenly.

"Girls can't do literary work," was on Edward's tongue in the excitement of his newborn authorship, but the recollection of the editor's caution stopped him. He looked at Freeda rather dubiously, however, and Freeda read his skepticism concerning girls as writers.

"What would you say if I received a $10 check some time for an article?"

"I should say, 'Good for you!' But I didn't know that!"

"Didn't know what?" asked Freeda promptly.

"Why, the girls in Hope don't ever read the daily papers. They don't know where Manila is. I heard one of the girls ask another one the other day if Manila was off the coast of Guinea."

"Ned Blake, that's a piece of fiction."

"No, it isn't," said Edward, with a grin. "It's a fact that college girls don't read the daily papers, and they don't talk about anything in the dining room but the boys or their lessons or the teachers or something like that," concluded Edward, rather tamely. He was always a shy person in the company of the girl students and in the habit of criticising them rather deeply.

"Some of what you say is true. We can change it perhaps. What would you say to a rival literary circle or girls who had more articles accepted and paid for than yours? Girls are smart as boys with the pen."

Edward looked his doubts.

"We'll print all the bona fide articles you girls have accepted and paid for in the college journal and pay you $1 apiece for them besides," he said, making the offer on the strength of his editorship.

"Done!" exclaimed Freeda, laughing.

Edward went away feeling sure that Freeda herself would do something, for he had great admiration for her and genuine pride and affection in his thought of her. But his doubts amounted almost to positive convictions that a girl's literary circle could not be made to succeed.

All of his experience came to him after his second football trial. He had finally yielded to the pressure early in the fall term and had gone into the team as right tackle, where he was doing magnificent work. In the first game that was played with a rival college he had distinguished himself by making a field goal by a difficult play that had not been attempted for years. The students were wild over it. The enthusiasm could not have been higher if he had captured Aguinaldo by personal combat. The girls worshiped Edward Blake, the silent, and, after the mysterious fashion of girls, admired him all the more apparently because he paid no attention to any of them.

And then came an event that put the whole question of college athletics before Edward in a new light and stirred up Hope college with an internal war that rivaled the one across the sea.

The captain of the team who had succeeded Reynolds was a good fellow, a fair student and a young man with plenty of means. He could afford to devote all his leisure time to football, because he was not obliged, as Edward was, to work his way through college. And that was one factor in the trouble that now arose between Edward and the rest of the team.

In making out the schedule of games with other college teams at a distance the captain arranged for a six days' tour. Hope college team to play four games in that time. They were to start Monday morning and get back to Raynor the following Sunday afternoon.

When the schedule of games was first talked of, Edward objected on account of the time it took from college work.

"Why can't we arrange all the games necessary nearer home? If the game is the main thing, I don't see what we make by going such distances and taking so much time from the studies. Besides, I have my paper route. It will be hard to arrange to leave that with any one else. I could fix it for a day or two, but not for a whole week very well. Besides, it's too much to make up all the studies. I don't have the time that most of you fellows have."

"Oh, pshaw, Blake! Even old Quad will pass a football player through on exams. Burroughs same as said at last university game that he would guarantee to pass all the fellows in his division if they won the game. (Burroughs was a tutor in German who was an old football player himself.)

"Besides, old man," said the captain, "the president likes to have the team

"What's the reason I can't earn a check of my own?"

make these long trips away from home. It advertises the college, and that's what he wants. Why, the football team did more to advertise Hope last year than anything else."

"Perhaps it did," replied Edward slowly. He was facing a really serious condition, for the loss of time out of his studies was something he did not like to face. He was a slow student, but very conscientious, and it did not appeal to his sense of fairness that he should be passed in any department unless he had actually done the work. If he went on this six days' trip, it would mean that he must pay some one to take his paper unless the football association would do it, and even then no amount of money could make up the loss of college time.

The team all urged him not to drop out. The pressure brought to bear was something which every college boy can easily understand.

At last Edward said: "I want to do the right thing, of course. Will you leave it to the president? If he says it's all right and approves of the schedule, I'll go."

There was a moment's hesitation on the captain's part. He was not sure of the president. Still, in the short time he had been at the head of affairs he had said very little about athletics and had not yet dictated anything. Besides, he was popular as a young man and a teacher and had been present on the ball field as an interested spectator at the last game.

"All right," said the captain. "I'm agreed." The rest of the team assented, and that afternoon Edward, the captain and one other member of the team called at the president's office. As they went in Edward, who knew the president better than any of the other students knew him, thought he knew what his decision would be. And yet even he was surprised at the interview that followed, as the president welcomed them and sat there facing them, his kindly but serious look going quickly from one to another of the three students.

CHAPTER VI.

The captain started the interview by saying:

"President Royce, we've come to see you about the matter of our football schedule for next week's trip." Here the captain rapidly mentioned the teams and places where Hope college eleven expected to play. "Now, Mr. Blake, who is our best player for right tackle, does not like to take the time out of the course to be gone the week, but he has agreed to leave matters, as we have also, to your decision. It seems to me, and to all the other members of the team, as if these games we have arranged are important and will advertise the college, especially if we win, as we probably shall if Blake goes. If he should drop out, it would be a serious loss to us. If the college athletics are going to be kept up with any enthusiasm it seems necessary to play these games. That's the way I feel about it."

The captain paused, and the president waited to hear from the others. Edward waited until the other member of the team had heartily seconded the captain's remarks, and then, as the president turned a thoughtful face toward him, he said with considerable hesitation:

"I'm in a good deal of doubt, sir, as to what I ought to do. I like football and enjoy the game. I think the training has improved my health. If all the playing was here at home I think I could keep up with my studies all right. It is the absence of a week that makes me doubtful about going. I'm a slow student, and I can't get time to make up a week's absence from the classroom. It will give me some trouble to arrange for the carrying of my paper, but in one or two instances last year I know the rule of the paper was suspended in the cases of football players. Still, of course, in spite of the way I feel about it, I have agreed with the fellows to leave the matter to you, sir, and I will act according to your decision."

The president listened very attentively, and when Edward was through he did not reply at once. The three young men waited anxiously for his decision.

"I believe in college athletics," began the president, more as if he was holding a soliloquy than addressing his visitors, "and I believe in encouraging them for the good of the college. The question is, of course, what place to give athletics in the college and the manner in which they shall engross the student's time and strength to the best advantage to him for his development as an all round man. Now, Blake here"—the president came out of his soliloquy and spoke directly to the young men—"Blake here has stated one of the questions that a college ought to consider in connection with the subject. If the athletics of a school are in danger of absorbing more time and strength from the student's mental development than is good for him, the athletics are demanding more than their rightful share. This seems to be the case with Blake. The college primarily does not exist in order to encourage football. Its primary object is to develop the best possible men and women all around for their places in the world. Between the intellectual and moral and the physical development the physical certainly ought not to be put first in matters of importance even for a small part of the year. The physical development of a student ought to be such as to enable him to do his best as an intellectual and moral being. The minute the physical training or practice binders or obstructs the intellectual or moral training it is wrong. Some students ought never to attempt what I may call the heavy physical work of a college, like football. A few out of a large number may find it a benefit, but those few will be obliged to draw very severely often on the best vitality they possess. As to the advertising the college receives from football games played at a distance from the college, I will have a few words to say on that subject at my next chapel talk."

The president paused a moment, and the captain, with the other member of the team, looked glum enough. So far it looked as if the president would decide against Edward's going.

"My advice to you, however, Blake," continued the president, "is to go with the team on this trip." The captain almost fell over in his surprise. "I will see the proprietor of the paper and arrange for some one to take your route while you are gone. I want you to be fair and honest about the general results of your experience on the trip, and come to me as soon as you return and let me know if, on the whole, you think such a trip is a good thing for the college or yourself. Will you promise to do that?"

"Yes, sir," replied Edward, hardly knowing whether to feel glad or sorry at the president's decision.

"Then I believe that is all?" questioned the president gravely, turning to the other two.

"Yes, sir," replied the captain, rising hastily, as if he feared the president might reverse his decision.

Once outside the office the captain smote Edward joyfully on the back.

"Well, old man, Prexy kept us guessing up to the last minute of the last half, didn't he. But the way he rushed the thing before time was called was a caution."

"Of course I shall be obliged to give him my candid view of the results of the trip when I get back," said Edward in his usual slow and dogged manner.

"Oh, well, we don't care about that," said the captain carelessly. "The main thing is the trip. If we win three out of four games, the president won't object, and we'll call on him and make him give us a speech. He's all right. Of course he felt obliged to preach his little lecture on athletics, but he's evidently with us all right."

"My advice to you, however, is to go with the team."

So spoke the captain, not going very deeply into the president's motives in letting Edward make the trip. Edward, who knew the president better, thought he could see his reasons in part at least.

He saw the reasons better every day of that memorable week. The first game played was won by Hope, and a telegram from the captain to the college told the news in less than ten words.

"Hope, 10; Fairview, 5. Slayton broke collar bone."

Hope had a jubilation that night out on the campus, with a bonfire and speeches. The breaking of Slayton's collar bone was incidentally mentioned, but every one felt easy about the substitutes who had gone along with the team to take the place of disabled members.

The next game was played after an all night ride of 200 miles. The team was somewhat battered, for its victory over Fairview was hard won, and its night ride was against it, but the members went into the game confident of success.

It was in this game that Edward received the first injury that had so far proved troublesome to him. His shoulder was badly wrenched. He continued in the game, however, until the end. It resulted in a tie, neither side being able to score. The team rested that night and was to start next morning for its third game, but news came that, owing to some local difficulties, the team expecting to play with Hope would be obliged to cancel its contract, and the game would have to be called off.

This meant a serious shortage in necessary gate receipts, and, owing to the nature of the contracts, Hope college team was the principal sufferer. But the giving up of the game gave Edward and one or two other members of the team who were badly hurt an opportunity to recover a little for the last game in the schedule.

This last game was the roughest that Edward had ever known. It was played, not with a college eleven, but with a local team composed partly of old players, very few of whom had ever attended any college or university. There was an unusual amount of brutal exercise, of bullying and of meanness generally. In the last part of the first half the captain's leg was broken, and he was carried off the field unconscious. Edward found himself at the beginning of the second half suffering the most excruciating pain from his injured shoulder. He discovered after the excitement was over that it was dislocated. He nearly fainted away several times; but, with several others who were injured, he staid in the game until time was called, with the ball in the middle of the field, but the score 12 to 6 in favor of the local team.

This was Saturday, and the only train for Raynor left at 10 o'clock. This would reach Raynor between 2 and 3 o'clock Sunday morning. When the train came in, it was crowded with an excursion, and the team had to find seats in the smoker. The captain was in such condition that it was not wise to move him, and he had been left with one of the other boys at a hotel. Edward had had his shoulder set, but it was remarkably sore, and he thought that five hours' ride would never end.

When they arrived at Raynor, there were no cars running up the hill, and the team walked up. With the substitutes they numbered some 18 students. One of the boys who had been unusually noisy on the train and who afterward confessed that he had a little liquor aboard started a college song as they marched up the hill past the silent houses. It was after 3 o'clock in the morning, and Edward, marching painfully along with the rest, silent as usual, could not crowd down the feeling of shame that rose in him at the thought of the irreverent breaking into the stillness of that Sunday morning. He had inherited from his father and mother, who were New England born, an almost Puritan thought of the Sabbath day.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

DR. E. E. HOSS—A CHARACTER SKETCH.

(Dear Cannon,—I enclose a little character sketch of Dr. Hoss. I know that you are eminently fair, and will publish it. Yours sincerely,

J. W. MOORE.)

Much is being written and many things are being said about the editor of our great central organ. Like all men of strong convictions and great abilities, he has warm friends, whilst others heartily dislike him. I judge that his opponents have not had that close association with him that reveals to them the real man.

My first acquaintanceship—close acquaintanceship—(I feared at the time that it was going to be too close) with Dr. Hoss was when he was president of the Martha Washington College. Although this was a girls' school, yet to add dignity and grace to the institution, some of the small boys of Abingdon were admitted. Associating with the girls, I imbibed some of their habits—in fact, I had learned to giggle. Miss Jackson threatened that if I did not cease that she would send me up to the president's office. I did not cease. So I was ordered to report at the office. I was badly frightened, but obeyed. Dr. Hoss arose, and to me looked about twelve feet tall. He looked at me for a few moments and then burst out laughing and laid the switch down, and I was soon employed in destroying the remains of a pound cake and washing it down with lemonade. It is needless for me to say that from that day until this I have been prepossessed in his favor.

If I were looking for one word that most fittingly summed up all his faults and all his virtues, I would use the word knightly. No kindlier or more self-sacrificing spirit has our Southern Methodism. I have wondered sometimes when I have heard him called autocratic. Dr. Hoss is a man of strong convictions, and expresses these in language strong and effective, but he respects a man who in as vigorous style utters his thought. The intensity of his convictions give the impress to those who know not his spirit that he is dogmatic. No man is more willing to accord to an opponent respect and admiration. I know a man in the Holston Conference of strong intellect and vigorous in expression, whose views of current questions run counter to those of the editor of the Advocate, still on the platform and in private, I have heard him express the profoundest admiration for the character and ability of this man.

I know of no man more willing to sacrifice for others, willing to sacrifice both ease and money, than Dr. Hoss. I remember one young man who came to Vanderbilt University, and found when there that he was not fitted to enter in some of the studies. He must either pay a tutor or return home. To pay a tutor was a matter of impossibility; to return home would have been a grave disappointment. Dr. Hoss took the young man and in a few months had him fitted to matriculate in all the departments, and that young man is now an honored minister in the Southwest.

The writer of this article is the son of a Methodist preacher. His father was never burdened with this world's goods, as is the case with most Methodist preachers who give themselves to one work. Dr. Hoss heard of my desire to enter Vanderbilt University, and without the least solicitation sent me the requisite money to come to Nashville, and helped me to pay my entrance fees. I have known him, in helping young men, to overdraw his own bank account and use his credit to keep them in school. If his salary were $100,000 a year, at the end of the year he would still be hard up, but every dollar would go into something worthy.

Dr. Hoss is knightly in his treatment of opponents. I have in mind now a man who felt called of God to oppose Dr. Hoss, and was impelled of the devil in many of his methods. The time came when that brother stood in need of assistance, and the first to aid him was the present editor of the Nashville Advocate. Bitter words were as if they had never been spoken, and through the instrumentality of the man he had lampooned he was given the most lucrative position that he had ever held. Magnanimity may be one form that triumph takes, but it was not so with him. If the man ever knew who his benefactor was, the knowledge came to him in no offensive way.

One of Dr. Hoss' greatest faults and greatest virtues is a profound belief in his friends. Respecting them and loving them, he condones even their faults, or, rather, fails to perceive that they have faults. This, to my mind, explains his position in the unfortunate Publishing House matter. Knowing Dr. Barbee, he could not for one moment believe that the Doctor would do anything that was not strictly honorable. Those with good memories will be reminded that Dr. Hoss expressed his disapprobation of the telegrams and sorrow because of their being sent. To be thus ardent in friendship may be a fault, but it is a fault that leans to virtue's side. In this age of selfishness, an age that would stifle a Damon and asphyxiate a Pythias, it is refreshing to come upon a man whose friendships lead him to think no evil.

I have written this that I may introduce my friends in old Virginia to the Dr. Hoss that I have known—the real Dr. Hoss. Some of them have fallen out with a caricature, perhaps, a part of it painted by the Doctor himself, in unfortunate moments. A truer, kindlier, braver, knightlier spirit our Methodism does not contain than E. E. Hoss.

J. W. MOORE.

A LETTER DENIED PUBLICATION IN NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

(Dear Brother Cannon,—I enclose with this an article sent the New Orleans Advocate more than two weeks since; as yet it has not appeared in that paper. To-day a copy of the two pamphlets enclosed will be mailed to all the preachers in the Baltimore Conference; the same effort to discredit the pamphlet giving the action of the Senate may be made by the war-claim advocates. Will you give place to the enclosed letter to Dr. Boswell, that the preachers may not be led to think the pamphlet untrustworthy?

Yours truly, D. C. KELLEY.)
Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Dr. Boswell,—Some time in the latter part of the year 1901 I received an extremely unbrotherly note from you—so much so that my first thought was not to reply in any manner. Later, however, a reply was made in terms which were intended to be Christian. To this note, though asking a question which grew out of your first note, you made no reply. In the New Orleans Advocate January 9, 1902, the following appears in the editorial column:

"An attempt was made to create sentiment on the subject (the war claim) in some sections by scattering an anonymous leaflet, gotten up in the form of a congressional report, which leaflet was without date or address, and mailed to all who received it, as far as we have heard, with one exception, on a mail train. Whether the anonymous document was intended to deceive or not, it did deceive. There were some who thought it a genuine and authentic document from the United States Senate. But it created no excitement. It fell still-born."

January 11th a courteous Christian note was written you, to which no reply came. As your published paragraph had the appearance of being a bitter report in your paper to a question asked in a private note, I was not willing to believe that you would, after this publication, still refuse the courtesy of a reply to a personal note, but as none came, the following note was, after ample waiting, forwarded under cover to a Christian brother, with the request that he would deliver it in person, wishing to be sure that you received it:

"The Vauxhall,

"Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 8, 1902.

"Dear Brother Boswell,—Some time since I wrote you, enclosing a pamphlet and asking whether this pamphlet was the one to which you, in an editorial, had attached the two words, 'anonymous' and 'deceive.'"

"Having received no answer—as you may not have seen the letter—this will be sent under cover to —, with the request that he deliver it in person. I await with interest your reply.

"Yours truly, D. C. KELLEY."

On my return from a distant appointment on my district, I find your reply, as follows:

"New Orleans, La., Feb. 21, 1902.

"Dr. D. C. Kelley, Nashville, Tenn.:

"Rev. and Dear Brother,—I did not suppose until a few moments ago that you were anxious to hear from me, else I would have written. As the document to which I referred was without name or date or address, I couldn't see what business it was of yours if I did characterize it as anonymous and deceptive. Even now I do not know why you are concerned, unless you desire to know why I used the above language. I did so because:

"1. It had no name, no date, no address.

"2. I said 'whether intended to deceive or not, it did deceive.'

"A lawyer of my acquaintance said it was a 'genuine document from the United States Senate.' I heard a preacher say he thought it emanated from the Senate. You know it did not. While it may be a copy, it is a counterfeit gotten up in imitation of congressional matter. To that extent it deceives.

"Now, you have my answer, and you may use it as you please, provided you acknowledge that you had the document printed and circulated all over the North Mississippi Conference. Otherwise, it is a private matter, which you have nothing to do.

"Yours fraternally,

"JOHN W. BOSWELL."

If you had not published the above paragraph in your paper of January 9th, this note might close our correspondence, but this publication demands, not for my own sake, but for the sake of the Church, that a word be said. I did not have "the document printed and circulated all over the North Mississippi Conference," but I sent out a number of the pamphlets by mail; so far as I now remember those sent by me were chiefly addressed to Bishops, editors of Church papers, delegates-elect to the General Conference. These were sent out after comparing the pamphlet with the official journal of the Senate and finding the quotations therefrom to be correct.

Allow me to say now, after comparing the pamphlet with Senate documents published at Washington, there is nothing in it or about it to deceive an intelligent reader. You say there is "no name;" the Senate of the United States is a name greater than that of any one man living. "No date"—both date and page from which it is taken are given.

When your lawyer friend said it was a genuine document from the United States Senate, he told the exact truth; he did not say that it was printed by the government printer at Washington—it in nowise pretends so to be. The form, size of sheet, title page, and added matter on the last page indicate to every intelligent reader that it is a copy, not an original.

You say, "as the document to which I referred was without name or date or address, I could not see what business it was of yours if I did characterize it as anonymous and deceptive." You had already, in a private note, said to me that you believed that I had sent you a copy. When I wrote you a private note asking a proper question, instead of replying privately, you published your attack, which attack brought your full editorial weight to bear to discount a true statement. The statement made was not only needed for the vindication of the honor of the Church, but had behind it the authority of the greatest body of men on earth to-day.

I have at no time concealed my thoughts as to what ought to be done, as you have good reason to know. Allow me to say that in my opinion the publication of this copy from the Senate's records was due the Church and public, only partial information having before appeared in the newspapers, and in some of them no information except from one side of the questions involved. As your condemnation of the pamphlet has been placed in print in your editorial columns, a place for this defence is respectfully asked.

Yours truly, D. C. KELLEY.

A LETTER DENIED PUBLICATION IN CENTRAL METHODIST.

(My Dear Brother Cannon,—The enclosed article I sent to the editor of the Central Methodist the recognized "organ" of the Louisville, Kentucky, and Western Virginia Conference.

The editor returned it, saying: "The enclosed article, I believe, I will not publish, if you will excuse me. It would open up a question in the Central I do not care to have discussed in our columns just now." The editor—Professor D. W. Batson—is a personal friend, and I am sorry he could not publish it "just now," as I think this is the time to publish articles on this subject.

If you will publish it, you may also publish this explanatory letter.

I am, yours fraternally,

W. A. COOPER.)

To the Brethren-elect to the General Conference:

Dear Brethren,—The undersigned minister and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, respectfully suggests the following for your consideration:

First. He believes that graver responsibilities rest upon you than upon any General Conference since that held in New Orleans in 1866. Not only are you called upon to legislate for the Church, but also to protect its character. Tens, if not hundreds, of thousands of our members believe that a great wrong has been done by our agents. They have felt humiliated that the Book Committee did not condemn the acts of the agents, and call for their resignations. They have waited patiently for the assembling of the representative body of the Church, of which you are members-elect. These many thousand do not believe that any blame rests as yet upon the Church, but they do look to you to right the wrong, and to make restitution for it. The act of the agent is the act of the principal, and the principal must not only condemn the act of the agent, but he must assume the responsibility of the act, and make reparation for it. This well-known principle of law must apply in this case. So, brethren, the Church which has honored you with election to her highest representative body, looks to you to condemn the acts of the agents, the administration of the Book Committee, and make restitution for the wrong done.

But to whom shall restitution be made? To the United States Senate? No! The money paid by them was a just debt, and we owe them nothing except condemning the men that deceived them. To whom, then, shall restitution be made? To the men and women and children wronged—the old superannuate, the widow, and the orphan.

These are they that will rise up against us at the judgment, unless we restore unto them the $100,000 taken from them. These grand old men, whose names are on the "honor roll," whose work for Methodism has made it the mightiest moral force on this continent, whose monument is the Church, in their name, I ask you to repair the wrong and restore the money.

The Senate was informed that the money was to go to this fund, and when it was rumored that a large percent. was to go to a professional lobbyist, he (the lobbyist) denied it, and our agents denied it, and the Senate, therefore, refused to pass an amendment to protect the superannuate, the widow, and the orphan, deeming our agents absolutely trustworthy and the amendment, therefore, unnecessary. Did the United States Senate love these old preachers more than we do? If not, I beseech you, in their name to pledge to them that the Church will raise the $100,000 and restore it.

If we do not this, how can we longer preach restitution as an integral part of repentance? Yea, how can we preach honesty, veracity, sincerity, and fidelity as necessary to religious character? The Church can raise this $100,000, and will raise it; and the writer sincerely believes the raising of it will cause a revival of religion to sweep over our South land such as we have not seen for years. He believes it will not only be a wholesome lesson to our people and the world, but a means of grace that will bring hundreds and thousands to Christ and to the Church.

Finally, brethren, "prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

I have the honor to be your humble servant,
WM. A. COOPER.)
Clarksville, Va., Feb. 25, 1902.

A NAME THAT IS ABOVE EVERY NAME.

"Jesus, the name high over all
In heaven or earth or sky;
Angels and men before it fall,
And devils fear and fly."

The house of Scipio had always been of good repute among the Romans; for stainless honor, for tried courage, for incorruptible integrity, for marked ability, they were renowned. Rome relied on them to lead her armies in the field, and to make her laws, and always to be on the side of justice and truth and honor as leaders and friends of the people. In one of their wars, when defeated by their enemies and reduced to extremities, they chose a Scipio, put him in command of their armies, and sent him "to carry the war into Africa;" there such was his success that he acquired the name, "Scipio Africanus;" by it was called and honored, was saluted as such on his return.

Jesus was the equal of the Father, though it was robbery to be equal with God, was sent by the Father to destroy the works of the devil and bring back to love and obedience a world that had rebelled and cast off the fear of its Maker, and made so famous the name of Jesus that when He went back to heaven the name was exalted above all principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named not only in this world, but also in that which is to come.

After His work was done on earth, after He had died on the cross and was ready to ascend to the presence of the Father, two angels became His escorts, who said to His disciples as they stood gazing up to heaven: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." Their minds are full of His coming glory.

Angels in heaven stood ready to cast their crowns at the feet of the King who had come back crowned with glory and honor, and whose name was "Jesus."

God doth not consider any honor too great to be rendered to His Son as "Jesus;" no one in heaven nor in earth, nor under the earth was found worthy to take and open the sealed book that was in the hand of Him that sat upon the throne save Jesus only; and every creature that is on earth and in heaven and under the earth unites in ascribing blessing and honor and glory and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and the Lamb forever.

He shall come as the Son of Man. "Jesus," in the glory of the Father, in His own glory and that of the holy angels; He shall come as Judge, and in triumph and glory such as our world has never seen, and it shall be as "Jesus." "God also hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name which is above every name, that at the name of 'Jesus' every knee shall bow of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth, and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God, the Father."

A COMMENDATION.

March 8, 1902.

Rev. James Cannon, Jr.:

Dear Brother,—I have just read the open letter on the War Claim in the Recorder of February 20th. I thank God for one man on the editorial corps of Southern Methodism who could not be silenced on this grave subject. The plan suggested in the closing paragraphs of the "Open Letter" seems to meet all the requirements of the case. Condemn the deception practiced by the agents, retire them, elect an entirely new Book Committee, replace the $95,000 paid Mr. Stahlman in the treasury of the Church, and then let us all try to forget the unhappy affair.

God bless you in your noble efforts to wipe off the stain of this affair.

Very truly,
S. A. STEEL.

"The Twentieth Century Life of John Wesley" will be found to be a storehouse of facts and incidents, lightened up by pictures that make the whole study fascinating. Not only do its pages appeal to Methodists and to churchmen, but to all who desire to be acquainted with one of the great leaders in the history of Christianity. The first instalment shows that the subject is being handled in a worthy and competent fashion.

GILDEROY ON HABIT.

An illustration or two on habit for the boys of your order. I once had an old man in my charge who had been a banker for long years. He formed the habit of wetting his fingers on his tongue when he had to count paper money. He got so he licked his fingers for everything, when he started to the table or when I called on him to pray. This was a habit and he did it unconsciously.

In my twentieth year I laid down the ax, plow, hoe, maul, wedge, plane and saw, and entered the ministry. I was in the habit of spitting in my hands when I went to grasp any tool. It took me nearly two years to break myself of that habit. Every time I arose in the pulpit to give out any text I would spit in my hands. I felt the need of a tight grip on something, often I did not have it on my subject. Finally I began with my hands in my pockets to keep from spitting in them. —St. Louis Advocate.

A PARROT AT BREAKFAST.

A funny parrot lives in Brooklyn, and is very fond of the lady she lives with. When the breakfast bell rings in the morning, she will push open the door of her cage with her bill, fly down to the breakfast table, take her own chair, which she always knows and occupies at each meal, and wait till the family assembles. If they should not gather as quickly as she thinks they ought, she will call out, "Hurry up, folks, hurry up!" and at the same time hop over to the oat meal dish and attempt to lift the cover; for she is very fond of oat meal, and will make her entire breakfast of it. She would not touch the oat meal, even if she were able to life the cover; for she is a very good Polly. After finishing her breakfast, she flies right back to her cage.—Exchange.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 23.

Text of the Lesson, Eph. v. 11-21.
Memory Verses, 15-18—Golden Text,
Eph. v. 18—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

11, 12. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." This week's study in this epistle and the next on the resurrection need not necessarily break the continuity of our study of the acts of the apostles, for in all the Scriptures we have the things concerning Him of whom Philip spake to the eunuch and whom we must see as the center of every lesson. In this epistle we are, as one has said, taken into the presence chamber of the King and made acquainted with His secret counsels and purposes concerning us. Only as we by faith enter into His love and purposes will we be delivered from the works of darkness mentioned in chapter iv. 31; I Cor. vi. 9, 10; Gal. v. 19-21. Intemperance, as generally understood, is one of the many works of darkness, but the child of God should be free from all if he would know the joy of being a child of the Lord Almighty (II Cor. vi. 14-18).

13, 14. "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead and Christ shall give thee light." The three favored apostles, heavy with sleep on the Mount of Transfiguration and actually sleeping in Gethsemane, show us how the most highly favored believers may be indifferent to the great things of God and how this cry, "Awake thou that sleepest," may apply to us all.

15, 16. "See, then, that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." The Revised Version has on these two verses either in the text or the margin "Look therefore carefully how ye walk," "buying up the opportunity." The life of the believer is spoken of as a continual dying to self, an overcoming, a conflict, a race (I Cor. ix. 11; I John v. 4, 5; Eph. vi. 12; Heb. xii. 1), but in this epistle and elsewhere it is also called "a walk." In the climax in Isa. xl. 31, the walking—that is, the steady plodding—is more difficult than the mounting on wings or the running. We are entreated to walk worthy of our vocation, not as other gentiles walk, to walk in love, as children of light, to walk worthy of God, who hath called us unto His kingdom and glory (Eph. iv. 1, 17; v. 2, 8; I Thess. ii. 12). As to buying up the opportunities, if we had the zeal of unscrupulous business men, who for their own gain make corners in even the necessities of life, how much might be accomplished in the service of Christ? If we walked as Christ walked (I John ii. 6), all would be well, but who is sufficient? Our sufficiency is of God (II Cor. iii. 5).

17. "Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." It is not the will of God that any should perish, for He will have all to be saved and has made full provision for the same (II Pet. iii. 9; I Tim. ii. 4; John iii. 16). When sinners are saved, He desires that they should be holy and so fully yield to Him that they may prove in daily life how good and acceptable and perfect His will is (I Thess. iv. 3; Rom. xii. 1, 2). Our blessed Lord could truly say "I seek not mine own will." "I delight to do thy will, O my God" (John iv. 34; v. 30; vi. 38; Ps. xl. 8).

18. "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." Drunkenness belongs to the unfruitful works of darkness; to be filled with the Spirit is the privilege of every child of light. Wine stimulates and exhilarates unnaturally, but the Holy Spirit stimulates supernaturally; the one is for self, the other for God. There is a drunkenness that does not come from wine or strong drink (Isa. xxix. 9), but is just as much the work of the adversary. Only that which is of God through Christ gives light and life; all that is not of God, causes stupor and drunkenness, and the manifestation of the flesh as God only can operate to reach the desired results. In a very true and solemn sense the salvation of the world depends on the church, although it is equally true that only the Holy Spirit can save men from sin. The truth must be preached by men fired and led of God. By the simple means of preaching the truth it has pleased God to save them that believe.

19. "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." A drunken man is apt to make himself known by his noisy talk or ribald song, but a Spirit filled person, having true melody in his heart, will sing unto the Lord. Each proclaims his master by that which comes from the abundance of his heart. In Col. iii. 16, we have the same result from the word of Christ dwelling richly in us; therefore, according to an axiom which says that things that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another, there is probably some connection between being filled with the Spirit and filled with the word of God. We know that the Spirit has written the word, and the Spirit is the word, and the word of God, the Lord Jesus, is the embodiment and manifestation of the written word. If we would be filled by the Spirit and used by the Spirit, let us lay up His word diligently in our hearts (Ezek. iii. 10, 11).

20. "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." In I Thess. v. 18, it is written "In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." How earnestly we should covet to be filled with the Spirit since He alone can live this holy and beautiful life in us! "He who spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not, with Him, also freely give us all things" (Rom. viii. 32), and since "God is love" and has so loved us, He cannot give us anything that is not love, so we will thank Him for all things if we believe this. Mrs. Bottoms tells of two waiters whom she saw accidentally jostle one another, the one thereby spilling some hot water on the other, who meekly replied, "Never mind, it is all in the will." A lady whom I know told me that having spilled a bottle of ink on her carpet she was able to take it meekly and as part of His will.

21. "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." Some one has said that submission is the highest mission on earth, higher than home or foreign missions, and that unless one has learned it he is not fit for missionary service anywhere. In His life at Nazareth, in His baptism, in His public ministry and in His sufferings our Lord fully manifested this grace of the Spirit. As we can only show our love to God by our love to others, so we can only manifest true submission to God by submission to others.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic for the Week Beginning
March 23, "Difficulties In the Way of Evangelizing the World."

Texts, Jonah i. 1-3; Matt.

xxiii. 37, 38; Mal. iii,
8-10—Read Matt. iii.

The last thing Jesus told His disciples before His ascension was "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations." This is the special work of the church of Christ on the earth. For this the Holy Spirit was given on Pentecost and continues to abide in the church until the work is finished and Christ comes.

The world is to be evangelized. Matthew, Mark and Luke all tell the same story in different words. All nations are to be discipled, organized and taught the principles which Christ revealed. Men should repent of their sins and find salvation from them through Him.

The task of preaching and teaching and administering rests on the church. The power to convict, convince, persuade, regenerate and sanctify is with the Holy Spirit alone. He never fails to do His work where the church faithfully does her part. The two must cooperate to reach the desired results. In a very true and solemn sense the salvation of the world depends on the church, although it is equally true that only the Holy Spirit can save men from sin. The truth must be preached by men fired and led of God. By the simple means of preaching the truth it has pleased God to save them that believe.

Why has not the world been evangelized before this time? Well may we ask the question! The answer is a long one and not easy to give or understand fully. Every age since Pentecost has seen faithful disciples who have lived and died for the faith, who have done all that inspired souls could do, and yet the work is unfinished.

This year the League gives special thought to this cause. We call it the cause of missions. It is really the bringing in and making real the kingdom of God among men. Special attention should be given to tracing the historical progress of the extension of the kingdom of God since the time of Christ.

A special library of helpful books has been prepared on this subject, and it is desired that every chapter of the League shall arrange for special reading or study of the work that has been done, is now in progress and should be attempted.

Rev. S. Earl Taylor, 57 Washington street, Chicago, has charge of this department and will aid all who wish information.

The particular difficulties in the way of success have ever been—

First.—Unfaithful messengers, like Jonah.

Second.—Unwilling hearers, like the Jews, who rejected Jesus.

Third.—Covetous followers who withhold offerings due the cause of God, as in the days of Malachi.

The work moves on in spite of all hindrances, because some are inspired by the same Spirit which sent John into the wilderness to preach "prepare ye the way of the Lord," and which from the opened heavens rested on Jesus when He had been baptized by John. The Spirit filled messengers shall find Spirit filled hearers and givers who will do the work.

Real Joy.

Real joy is as sacred and divine a thing as there is. You know that it is true that we may, if we choose, begin to enter on our inheritance of eternal things now, here in this life. Especially is this the case with this divine gift of the gladness of the soul. Do not rest content with any mere small, finite, temporal thing and call that joy. It is some mere passing earthly elevation of spirit. That is merely a selfish impression. That is not connected with any feeling of regret for our imperfection, as true joy must ever be. In true joy there can be no selfishness. It is the delight that comes from consciousness of the nearness of God, consciousness of love to Him, consciousness of sin forgiven, consciousness of living for the good of our brothers and sisters of the human family.—William MacDonald Sinclair.

No Duty Without Love.

We cannot do our duty to any one without love. We cannot keep His commandments without doing our duty to men. But when we learn to love and to obey the promptings of love in our human relations we find that "His commandments are not grievous" any more. The spirit in us is in sympathy with the spirit in Him, and we are the children of our Father, which is in heaven.

—Outlook.

She Hath Done What She Could.

"She hath done what she could," said the Master, "for Me." How tender and sweet was the word! "And the deed she hath done her memorial shall be Wherever My gospel is heard."

Ah, 'tis this that must try every deed that we do
Ere Jesus pronounces it good;
Not the thing we have done, but the love it may show,
And whether we've done what we could.

There are some that are struggling along on the way
And reaping, they think, only leaves,
Whilst others return at the close of the day
And bring in a harvest of sheaves.

But the eye of the Master is on every one;
Not a sigh nor a struggle is lost,
And it is not the much nor the little we've done,
But—what has the offering cost?

Not the poor widow's mite nor the gold of the king
Shall count of itself in the test;
It will not be the stamp of the coin that we bring,
But whether the gift is our best.
—Philadelphia Ledger.

WHAT ALCOHOL DOES.

It Ruins a Man's Business, Health, Home, Happiness and Brains.

Will any one deny that alcohol is not the chief cause of individual failures to properly make adjustments to the circumstances which underlie business and earning a living? said the late Leslie E. Keeley. Ventures sent to sea, like ships, with alcohol in command or at the helm cannot mind the winds, take proper astronomical observation or sail the ship to the right port. More men fail in business or lose their employment by reason of drink than from all other causes. Alcohol ruins a man's business, health, his home, his happiness, his brains.

By any showing whatever there is no cause which equals alcohol in producing insanity. It moves in triumphal procession along every route of stress which leads to the human brain and mind. Like a flood, it submerges sense, reason and the will, as the deluge did the valleys and the hills. Like a demon, it inhabits the man's vitals and blows its breath of oblivion through his senses into that most wonderful of God's mechanism, the higher brain centers. With fiendish suggestion of cure it lies ambushed in the mother's remedy for ailments of her children, and, hid in the darkness of nature's most incomprehensible secret, it reaches forth the skeleton hand of Mephistopheles and touches the unfolding tissue that God is weaving into a human brain. That touch is degeneration.

Not yet content, it sits at the accountant's desk and blots his page with error. It takes the business routes over the traveled ways and writes the word "infamy" on the business man's advertisement. It seeks out his rivals and enemies and whispers to them the awful word "drunkard." It seeks out his friends and teaches them to bow their heads in shame while murmuring the words of pity. When all business relations are broken and ruined, the tyrant of slaves turns about, and with an iron hand he grasps the man's brain and crushes reason, thought, love and happiness into the chaos of eternal ruin.

HE WON THE FIGHT.

A Pathetic Experience In John G. Woolley's Career.

A writer in the temperance column of Christian Work says that those who are wont to claim that it is easy for a man who is polluted with an appetite for strong drink to quit and stay quit should read the following bit of experience given by John G. Woolley. He says:

"I shall never drink again. But one night in a New England train and very ill I met a stranger who pitied me and gave me a quick, powerful drug out of a small vial, and my pain was gone in a minute or two, but alcohol was licking up my very blood with tongues of flame. I should have got drunk that night if I could. I thought of everything—of my two years of clean life, of the meeting I was going to, vouched for by my friend and brother, D. L. Moody, whose faith in me had gone out into all the world; of the bright little home in New York, of Mary and the boys. I tried to pray, and my lips framed oaths. I reached up for God, and he was gone, and the fiercest fiend of hell had me by the throat and shouted, 'Drink, drink, drink!'"

"It was not yet daylight, Sunday morning, when I stood on the station platform at Pawtucket all alone. I flew from saloon to saloon. They were shut. So were the drugstores, and all that day, locked in my room at the hotel, I fought my fight and won it in the evening by the grace of God, and the people never knew that the man who spoke to them that night had been in hell all day."

O mothers, as you love your now pure, sweet little boys, pray God to help you to so warn and teach them as to save them from becoming polluted with an appetite for strong drink!

WOMEN AND NARCOTICS.

What Dr. Norman Kerr Says Upon This Subject.

Dr. Norman Kerr writes as follows in Woman upon the constantly increasing use of narcotics by women:

"Alcohol is the narcotic most frequently used. But I could give you a formidable list of narcotics which women in all ranks of society are daily using—chloral, chlorodyne, ether, chloroform, less used by women in England than in America; sal volatile, eau de cologne and so on. I have known ladies addicted to alcohol to drink three bottles of brandy a day. A bottle a day is by no means an uncommon quantity."

"I have had patients who had habituated themselves to two ounces—960 grains—of chloral as their daily allowance. Twenty grains of chloral, I may say, is a full medicinal dose. I have treated patients who have been in the habit of swallowing eight ounces of chlorodyne a day, and I have known ladies who could take a pint of chlorodyne in the twenty-four hours."

"Both tea and coffee are used in excess. I found a patient insensible in her room one day who had drank nothing but tea. But she had consumed a pound of tea in the day."

"Tobacco in the form of cigars as well as of cigarettes is constantly resorted to."

Temperance Axioms.

Drink will make you a prey to vile imaginations.

Drink will make you blind to the pure and good and beautiful.

Drink will put you at many disadvantages in the race of life.

How Alcohol Poisons One.

Alcohol is a poison. It kills in large doses and half kills in smaller ones. It produces insanity, delirium, fits. It poisons the blood and wastes the man. —Professor James Miller, M. D.

It would be a great surprise to not a few people if God should answer their prayers.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

Massey Music Hall, of Toronto, Canada, holds about 4,000 persons, and on Wednesday afternoon of last week, when the first session of the fourth International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions was held, there was hardly an unoccupied seat in the house. In the evening, when the formal addresses of welcome were delivered, the building could not hold the multitudes that sought entrance, and an overflow meeting was held in Metropolitan Methodist Church, nearby.

To one who is not familiar with the Student Volunteer Movement the great concourse of people, the vast majority of them students representing institutions for higher education in the United States and Canada, has only an indefinite significance, and may smack somewhat of supercharged enthusiasm. But to one who has watched the marvelous development of the movement, and has seen its early promises more completely fulfilled in practical results than was hoped at the beginning, that great body of representative students was not only the realization of prophecy, but the concretization of consecrated power that is destined to exercise a great and determining influence in the evangelization of the world. There was enthusiasm there, but it was not the empty ebullition of mere numbers. It was a holy enthusiasm, born of noble purpose, and was the expression of deep consecration and intelligent apprehension of the opportunity for large service and of responsibility for the use of that opportunity. Those young people seemed to come from an atmosphere of prayer, and to be actuated by a deep desire to know the mind of the Spirit concerning themselves as related to the supreme work of the redemption of the world through Jesus Christ. And as one looked over that audience he could not escape the impression that, as they were there as representatives of a vast student body, we have in the educational institutions of evangelical Christianity a force the value and potency of which has not yet been fully comprehended nor completely enlisted as an agency in bringing the peoples now lying in darkness to a knowledge of the Truth.

PREVIOUS STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONVENTIONS.

It is the plan of the Student Volunteer Movement leaders to have a convention of the sort held in Toronto once in a student generation. In 1891, the first convention was held in Cleveland, and was attended by 680 delegates, representing 151 institutions, all the leading mission boards of North America, and nearly every mission field. At the second, held at Detroit, in 1894, there were present over 1,300 delegates, including students from 294 institutions, the representatives of 54 American and Canadian mission boards, missionaries from all the great mission fields, and the national leaders of the various organizations that work among young people. In 1898 the third convention met in Cleveland, with an attendance of 2,200 delegates. Of these 1,598 students and 119 professors came from 461 institutions. There were 87 representatives of mission boards and societies, 89 returned missionaries, and 100 national and State officers of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations and young people's societies.

In addition two conventions of this sort have been held in Great Britain, the first in Liverpool in 1896, which was attended by about 1,000 delegates and the other in London two years ago, at which 1,600 delegates were in attendance. These assemblages of students are said to have been the largest of the kind ever held in Europe, while it is certain that the convention which closed in Toronto last Sunday evening was the largest and most significant gathering of students in the world's history. This is seen to be so when one considers the motives back of the convention. These students assembled for (1) helpful association and conference; (2) to consider unitedly the leading problems of the world's evangelization; (3) to gain inspiration and a vision of the missionary possibilities of the Church; (4) to pray and earnestly resolve to enter with greater consecration upon the work of extending the kingdom of Christ among the non-Christian nations. To bring about these results addresses were delivered by representatives of some of the chief missionary societies, by missionaries returned from the field, and by leaders in the Volunteer Movement; discussions were held on subjects vitally related to the work of the missionary, the promotion of missionary zeal, and the dissemination of missionary information, etc.; special conferences were convened to consider matters related to the great mission fields of the world; an exhibit was shown which included a collection of missionary literature, with books and periodicals suitable for missionary libraries, a special model library for the missionary himself, printed matter used by the societies for home agitation of missions, raising funds, missionary education.

THE KEYNOTE OF THE CONVENTION.

At the initial session on Wednesday afternoon the keynote of the convention was struck by Mr. Robert E. Speer, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, in a vigorous, incisive and practical address in which he made an earnest plea for a closer walk with God, a complete surrender to Jesus Christ, the reproduction of the Christ spirit in one's own life. The occasion was one of deep heart-searching, and doubtless many, under the inspiration of the address, determined not only to seek for themselves entire freedom from sin and entrance into that life which is hid with Christ in God, but to endeavor to lead others into the same precious experience. This determination was stimulated by the address of Mrs. Howard Taylor, of China, who in a simple and winning manner spoke of the freedom of those who are in Christ Jesus, of the fullness of His love, and of the riches of Christian experience into which all may enter who would. And this spirit of personal devotion to Jesus Christ as Saviour and Master seemed to pervade the entire convention, and there was not a session in which that supreme idea and purpose was not introduced and emphasized.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE BY THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Thursday morning the report of the Executive Committee of the Movement was read by Mr. Mott. It is in many respects a remarkable document. It declares that the Movement, which was established in 1886, had for its primary object the raising up in North America of a sufficient number of capable missionary candidates to meet the requirements of the various missionary societies, and to help these missionary candidates to properly equip themselves for their life work, and to develop among those students who remain at home a sense of responsibility for the maintenance and reinforcement of the various foreign missionary enterprises of the churches. The field of the Movement is a vast and rich one, embracing as it does all colleges, universities, and other institutions of higher learning in the United States and Canada, of which there are about 1,000, with over 200,000 students. One gets at a glance the importance and magnitude of this Movement, and when he looks into the intelligent and eager faces of the nearly 3,000 delegates in the convention he gets some idea of its momentum and possibilities.

It is quite proper to ask what the Movement has done. The answer is found in Mr. Mott's report, as far as results can be shown in that form. The report states that through visitation of travelling secretaries, summer conferences, and correspondence the Movement has touched about 800 institutions, in over half of which nothing was being done in the interest of foreign missions prior to the introduction of the Movement, while in many others, where there had been more or less missionary interest, the Movement has greatly stimulated and developed that interest. Then the educational work of the Movement is vast in its significance and importance, as it has been the chief factor in the recent remarkable awakening of scientific study of missions in educational institutions. Eight years ago, when the educational department was organized, there were only a score of mission study classes in the colleges and seminaries of North America. Four years ago, at the Cleveland convention, 267 classes were reported, having 2,361 students; while there are now 325 classes, with 4,797 students. It is stated that over one half of these students are not volunteers. They are preparing in these study classes to prepare themselves to carry the burdens and meet the responsibilities of the churches at home, while their fellow-volunteer missionaries are laboring on the foreign field, and thus the Movement is achieving a twofold end.

Here are a few significant and illuminating passages from Mr. Mott's report:

We have the names of 1,953 volunteers who, up to the present year, have sailed. They have gone out in connection with about fifty different missionary societies, and are scattered throughout all parts of the non-Christian world. Doubtless other volunteers of whom we have no record are at work on the mission field. During the four years which have elapsed since the Cleveland convention, sixty per cent. more volunteers have gone to the mission field than during the four years preceding that gathering. Taking the whole life of the Volunteer Movement into consideration, nearly 100 per cent. more volunteers have sailed during the last eight years than during the first eight years.

The question from time to time recurs, are the leaders of the Movement going out to the field? Of the forty-six volunteers who have served the Movement as members or secretaries of the Executive Committee, twenty-seven have sailed and nine are either under appointment or have applied to the boards. Of the remainder five have been prevented from going by ill health and four are still in preparation. This does not include missionaries who have served the Movement.

The Volunteer Movement has exerted a mighty reflex influence on the religious life of the colleges and theological seminaries. If the volunteers and all that pertains to the work of the Movement were taken from our institutions, what loss these institutions would suffer. Missionary intelligence, missionary activity, and the missionary spirit have done far more than is generally realized to counteract the evil and subtle influences of pride, selfishness and rationalism as manifested in different student communities. Those who have travelled among the colleges have frequently observed that the greatest manifestation of the presence and work of the Holy Spirit has been in those places where there has been also the largest obedience to the missionary purposes of God.

HOW THE MOVEMENT WAS STARTED.

The extension of the Student Volunteer Movement is seen more vividly in the following statement from the report of the Executive Committee:

In 1894 the Movement had touched by its travelling secretaries 256 institutions; since then the number visited by them has increased to 798. Then the Movement had three secretaries; now it has eight. That year it rallied to the Detroit convention 1,325 delegates; in this convention we have fully twice that number. Then the Movement had issued eight pamphlets; now its list of publication includes 13 pamphlets and 18 text-books. Then there were less than 30 mission study classes, with but 200 members; during the past year there have been over ten times as many classes, with a total membership of nearly 5,000. Up to the time of the Detroit convention nearly 700 volunteers had sailed; since then the number has increased to nearly three times that number. At that time there was in many places an unfortunate chasm existing between volunteers and non-volunteers; now these two classes are united in spirit and effort, and the students who are not volunteers recognize increasingly that a burden of responsibility equal to that borne by the volunteers rests also upon them for the world's evangelization. Then there was no organized missionary work carried on by students among the young people of the Churches; now there are well-organized student campaigns in connection with a dozen or more denominations and participated in by hundreds of students. In 1894 the Volunteer Movement was established only in North America and the British Isles, with beginnings also in Scandinavia and South Africa; now it is firmly planted in every Protestant country of the world, and the volunteer idea has been successfully transplanted to the student centers of non-Christian lands. Then there were Christian student movements in only three or four countries, and these were not related to each other; now there are eleven national or international student movements bound together in sympathy and effort by the World's Student Christian Federation.

PROGRAMME OF THE MOVEMENT.

From this statement it will be seen that, while the movement has been making history, there is still a large element of the prophetic in it. And this impression deepens when the programme of the movement is studied. The leaders boldly declare that only a beginning has been made; that the next quadrennium must mark a decided advance in every department of the Movement's scheme of work; that the study of missions by the students and professors of the land must be greatly increased; and that these persons shall become foreign mission specialists, thinkers, writers, authorities on foreign mission problems. The programme involves also the enrollment of more students than heretofore as volunteers, as the boards are asking for more candidates than are now available, and the imperative call from the field must be heeded. Then the Movement is promoting the best possible preparation of volunteers for work on the field, by supplementing the work of the educational institutions, and by enabling the volunteers not only to secure a knowledge of missions through the mission study courses, but to acquire the habits of systematic, progressive, devotional Bible study, of the observance of the morning watch, and of intercessory prayer. The Movement claims, and with propriety, that the volunteer should be trained to become a missionary before he goes to the foreign field; he should learn while in college how to win men to Christ. It holds also that the volunteers should be held true to their life and purpose, and they should be encouraged by every proper means to go to the mission field. The necessity of this arises from the urgent need in the field, and the fact that for various reasons some who volunteer do not respond when they are called upon to enter the service. But it must be said that many of these who have been hindered from going abroad, either through their nonacceptance by the boards or through other disqualifications, have thrown themselves into home mission work in destitute fields, others have become city missionaries, and some have transformed the spirit of their local churches as far as foreign missions are concerned.

The Movement is endeavoring to develop in the students who are called to spend their lives at home a deeper sense of personal responsibility for the world's evangelization. If the world's evangelization is to be achieved in this generation, as the watchword of the Movement proposes, the Christian students of the world must contribute generously to that end by united and undaunted service; and those who remain at home must co-operate with those who go into the field, and missionary consecration is the demand of the hour, for out of it will surely come the most glorious missionary progress and triumph.

A DEEPLY SPIRITUAL MOVEMENT.

The spirit of the movement is seen in the statement that it constantly seeks to develop the spiritual life of the institutions in which it operates. The report quoted above declares: "Unless students are bringing to bear upon their lives day by day the Word of God, unless they are giving themselves to secret and united prayer, unless they are experiencing the saving power of Jesus Christ, and unless their hearts burn with the desire to please and to serve Him, the conditions are wanting for the development and manifestation of real missionary life. Where men are conscious of the presence of God they are most likely to hear and to heed His voice. A spiritual atmosphere is, indeed, essential to safe volunteering and to all self-denying effort on behalf of the extension of Christ's kingdom. Therefore let the Movement, including all its members, place greater emphasis than ever before on the cultivation of a strong spiritual life at all our student centers."

Bishop Thoburn, in a brief but burning address in one of the earlier sessions of the convention, placed the emphasis upon the same point, and as his convictions on missionary problems are founded upon long observation and personal experience, they are the more entitled to be heeded. He said that only spiritual persons can lead an inquirer to Christ, or can teach those who are babes in Christ, or can develop those New Testament gifts which are needful for the development of every Christian church; and only spiritual men can raise up spiritual churches. And again and again during the convention the same note of a deeper spirituality, a fuller consecration, a broader outlook, and a greater eagerness to respond to human need through the gracious ministrations of the Gospel was struck.

THE MORNING SESSIONS OF THE CONVENTION.

The convention session of Thursday, Friday, and Saturday mornings were seasons of spiritual refreshing, and of great inspiration. It was medicine to the heavy heart of the returned missionary to look into the faces of those thousands of students who were making the missionary's work a study, and were getting ready to enter into the more serious concerns of missionary endeavor after a while. The religious pessimist would have suffered a transformation if he could have felt the thrill of those meetings and felt the pulse of the vast movement they represented. The addresses were of a high order, and were laden with information and brimming with inspiration. Among the speakers were Dr. George Scholl, of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, who outlined the necessary

WASHINGTON. —In this discourse Dr. Talmage would lift people out of despondency and bring something of future joy into earthly depression. The text is Hebrews vi, 19, "Which hope."

There is an Atlantic ocean of depth and fullness in the verse from which my text is taken, and I only wade into the wave at the beach and take two words. We all have favorite words expressive of delight or abhorrence, words that easily find their way from brain to lip, words that have in them mornings and midnights, laughter and tears, thunderbolts and dewdrops. In all the lexicons and vocabularies there are few words that have for me the attractions of the last word of my text, "Which hope."

There have in the course of our life been many angels of God that have looked over our shoulders, or met us on the road, or chanted the darkness away, or lifted the curtains of the great future, or pulled us back from the precipices, or rolled down upon us the rapturous music of the heavens, but there is one of these angels who has done so much for us that we wish throughout all time and eternity to celebrate it—the angel of hope. St. Paul makes it the center of a group of three, saying, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity." And, though he says that charity is the greatest of the three, he does not take one plume from the wing, or one ray of luster from the brow, or one aurora from the cheek, or one melody from the voice of the angel of my text, "Which hope."

That was a great night for our world when in a Bethlehem caravansary the Infant Royal was born, and that will be a great night in the darkness of your soul when Christian hope is born. There will be chanting in the skies and a star pointing to the Nativity. I will not bother you with the husk of a definition and tell you what hope is. When we sit down hungry at a table, we do not want an analytical discourse as to what bread is. Hand it on; pass it round; give us a slice of it. John speaks of hope as a "pure hope;" Peter calls it a "lively hope;" Paul styles it a "good hope," a "sure hope," a "rejoicing hope." And all up and down the Bible it is spoken of as an anchor, as a harbor, as a helmet, as a door.

Power of Hope.

When we draw a check on a bank, we must have reference to the amount of money we have deposited, but Hope makes a draft on a bank in which for her benefit all heaven has been deposited. Hope! May it light up every dungeon, stand by every sickbed, lend a helping hand to every orphanage, loosen every chain, caress every forlorn soul and turn the unpictured room of the almshouse into the vestibule of heaven! How suggestive that mythology declares that when all other deities fled the earth the goddess Hope remained!

It was hope that revived John Knox when on shipboard near the coast of Scotland he was fearfully ill, and he was requested to look shoreward and asked if he knew the village near the coast, and he answered, "I know it well, for I see the steeple of that place where God first opened my mouth in public to his glory, and I am fully persuaded how weak that ever I now appear I shall not depart this life till my tongue shall glorify his holy name in the same place." His hope was rewarded, and for twenty-five more years he preached. That is the hope which sustained Mr. Morrell of Norwich when departing this life at twenty-four years of age he declared, "I should like to understand the secrets of eternity before tomorrow morning." That was the kind of hope that the corporal had in the battle when, after several standard bearers had fallen, he seized the flag and turned to a lieutenant colonel and said, "If I fall, tell my dear wife that I die with a good hope in Christ and that I am glad to give my life for my country." That was the good hope that Dr. Goodwin had in his last hour when he said: "Ah, is this death? How have I dreaded as an enemy this smiling friend!"

No better medicine did a man ever take than hope. It is a stimulant, a febrifuge, a tonic, a catholicon. Thousands of people long ago departed this life would have been living today but for the reason they let hope slip their grasp. I have known people to live on hope after one lung was gone and disease had seemed to lay hold of every nerve and muscle and artery and bone.

Alexander the Great, starting for the wars in Persia, divided his property among the Macedonians. He gave a village to one, a port to another, a field to another and all his estate to his friends. Then Perdicas asked, "What have you kept for yourself?" He answered triumphantly, "Hope." And, whatever else you and I give away, we must keep for ourselves hope—all comforting, all cheering hope. In the heart of every man, woman and child that bears or reads this sermon may God implant this principle right now!

Usefulness to Come.

Many have full assurance that all is right with the soul. They are as sure of heaven as if they had passed the pearly panels of the gate, as though they were already seated in the temple of God unrolling the libretto of the heavenly chorister. I congratulate all such. I wish I had it, too—full assurance—but with me it is hope. "Which hope." Sinful, it expects forgiveness; troubled, it expects relief; bereft, it expects reunion; clear down, it expects wings to lift; shipwrecked, it expects lifeboat; bankrupt, it expects eternal riches; a prodigal, it expects the wide open door of the father's farmhouse. It does not wear itself out by looking backward; it always looks forward. What is the use of giving so much time to the rehearsal of the past? Your mistakes are not corrected by a review. Your losses cannot, by brooding over them, be turned into gains. It is the future that has the most for us, and hope cheers us on. We have all committed blunders; but does the calling of the roll of them make them any the less blunders? Look ahead in all matters of usefulness. However much you may have accomplished for God and the world's betterment your greatest usefulness is to come. "No," says some one, "my health is gone." "No," says some one, "my money is gone." "No," says some one, "the most of my years are gone and therefore my usefulness." Why, you talk like an infidel. Do you suppose that all your capacity to do good is fenced in by this life? Are you going to be a lounge and do nothing after you have quit this world? It is my business to tell you that your faculties are to be enlarged and intensified and your qualifications for usefulness multiplied tenfold, a hundredfold, a thousandfold.

Is your health gone? Then that is a sign that you are to enjoy a celestial health compared with which the most jocund and hilarious vitality of earth is invalidism. Are your fortunes spent? Remember, you are to be kings and queens unto God. And how much more wealth you will have when you reign forever and ever! I want to see you when you get your heavenly work dress on. This little bit of a speck of a world where we get ready to work. We are only journeymen here, but will be master workmen there. Heaven will have no loafers hanging around. The book says of the inhabitants, "They rest not day nor night." Why rest when they work without fatigue? Why seek a pillow when there is no night there? I want to see you after the pedestrianism of earth has been exchanged for power of flight and velocities infinite and enterprises interstellar, interworld.

I suspect that the telescope of that observatory brings in slight constellations that may comprise ruined worlds which need looking after and need help saintly and missionary. There may be worlds that, like ours, have sinned and need to be rescued, perhaps saved by our Christ or by some plan that God has thought out for other worlds as wise, as potent, as lovely as the atonement is for our world. The laziness which has cursed us in this world will not gain the land of eternal activities—so much tonic in the air, so much inspiration in the society, so much achievement after we get the shackles of the flesh forever off. Do not dwell so much on opportunities past, but put your emphasis on opportunities to come.

Our Real Beginning.

Am I not right in saying that eternity can do more for us than can time? What will we not be able to do when our powers of locomotion shall be quickened into the immortal spirit's speed? Why should a bird have a swiftswiftness of wing when it is of no importance how long it shall take to make its aerial way from forest to forest and we, who have so much more important errand in the world, get on so slowly? The roebuck outruns us, the hounds are quicker in the chase, but wait until God lets us loose from all limitations and hindrances. Then we will fairly begin. The starting post will be the tombstone. Leaving the world will be graduation day before the chief work of our mental and spiritual career. Hope sees the doors opening, the victor's foot in stirrup for the mounting. The day breaks—first flush of the horizon. The mission of hope will be an everlasting mission, as much of it in the heavenly hereafter as in the earthly now. Shall we have gained all as soon as we enter realms celestial—nothing more to learn, no other heights to climb, no new anthems to raise, a monotony of existence, the same thing over and over again for endless years? No! More progress in that world than we ever made in this. Hope will stand on the hills of heaven and look for ever brightening landscapes, other transfigurations of color, new glories rolling over the scene, new celebrations of victories in other worlds, heaven rising into grander heavens, seas of glass mingled with fire, becoming a more brilliant glass mingling with a more flaming fire. "Which hope."

Now, let me introduce this feeling into the lives of some who are at times hopeless. There is a family whose son has gone wrong. Father and mother have about given him up, he seems so headlong, so ungrateful, so dissipated, and the old folks do not know half the story of moral precipitation. He has ceased writing home, but they hear of him through people who like to carry bad news, and every time the report is more deplorable. He swears, he gambles, he drinks, he goes into all the shambles of sin. His former employer says there is no hope for him, and all outside the family agree in thinking he will never reform. The father and mother have not quite given him up, and these words are to strengthen their hope. That boy is going to come back. You have a hold on him that you must not relax. Through prayer you may win the eternal God for your side of the struggle. You must enlist all the heavenly dominions, cherubim and seraphim and archangel, in the movement to save your son. Some day or some night he will call a halt to his infamous practices. Something will happen to him, as happened in a New York hotel to a son of one of the most distinguished clergymen of Scotland and one of the queen's chaplains. "When can I see you?" said a distinguished looking young man at the close of one of my services in Brooklyn tabernacle. I said, "You can see me now." He said: "No; I want a private conversation with you at your own house. When can I come?" I said, "Tomorrow night." "Your name," I asked. He gave me his name, the exact name of his father, whose name was known and is known through the Christian world, though years ago he departed this life. Returning home, I took up a book of which his father was the author, and in the picture at the opening of the book I found that the young man had most markedly his father's features. So I was sure there was no deception.

Forgive the Repentant.

On the following evening he came. He said that he was the black sheep of the family flock. He had wandered the world over and been in all kinds of wickedness, but a few nights before, after reading a letter from his mother in Scotland, he had retired for sleep, but in the adjoining room he heard some young men in such horrible conversation he could not sleep. He was shocked as he had never before been by the talk of bad men. He arose, struck a light, took out the letter from his mother and knelt down by his bedside and said, "O Lord God of my mother, have mercy on me!" He said that since that prayer he was entirely changed and loved what he before hated, and hated what he before loved, and asked what I thought it all meant. I replied, "You have become a Christian." He said he might be called at any time to leave the city. I never saw him again, but it seemed to me that he had turned his back upon his wicked past and had started in the right direction. And it may be so with your boy. Write him often. Tell him how you are all thinking of him at home, and it may be, your letter in hand, he may call upon his mother's God to help and save him. Hope, you of the gray hairs and wrinkles! Heaven has its thousands of souls who were once as thoroughly wrong as your boy is. They repented, and they are with the old folks in the healthy air of the eternal hills, where they have become young again. Hope on, and, though you may never hear of your son's reformation and others may think he has left this life hopeless, who knows but that in the last moment, after he has ceased to speak and before his soul launches away, your prayer may have been answered and he be one of the first to meet you at the shining gate. The prodigal in the parable got home and sat down at the feast, while the elder brother who never left the

ONE TOUCH OF MOTHERHOOD.

A lady in waiting to Queen Alexandra told a friend a touching little incident which took place soon after the death of her son, the Duke of Clarence. The princess, with her usual gentle reticence, tried to hide the grief for her first-born. It was shown only in her failing health and in increased tender consideration for all around her. One day, while walking with one of her ladies in the quiet lanes near Sandringham, she met an old woman weeping bitterly and tottering under a load of packages. On inquiry, it appeared that she was a carrier, and made her living by shopping and doing errands in the market town for the country people.

"But the weight is too heavy at your age," said the princess.

"Yes. You're right, ma'am. I'll have to give it up, and if I give it up I'll starve. Jack carried them for me—my boy—ma'am."

"And where is he now?"

"Jack! He's dead! Oh, he's dead!" the old woman cried wildly.

The princess, without a word, hurried on, drawing her veil over her face to hide her tears.

A few days later a neat little cart with a stout donkey were brought to the old carrier's door. She now travels with them to and fro, making a comfortable living, and has never been told the rank of the friend who has tried to make her life easier for the sake of her dead boy.—Chicago Post.

BISHOP VINCENT'S WISE WORDS

"Reverence for parental authority," he declared, "is the foundation of reverence for all authority, and this spirit of good citizenship in the State is, in its turn, the only sure guaranty of national permanence. The cornerstone of commonwealth is the hearthstone. Bad laws cannot make good citizens. Lawless homes mean eventually a disorganized society and a decadent nation. Nations have prospered just in proportion to the persistence of personal and domestic virtue. China, the oldest nation on earth to-day, has always exalted reverence for ancestors to the character of a religious principle. Our very first antidote, then, to the anarchic spirit is the cultivation of this fundamental duty in the home."

"Parents are also bound to live so that their children can honor them. Selfish and irreligious lives cannot expect to be honored. Fathers are to be pitied who refuse all religious sanctions for such a duty, and then have nothing higher than their own authority or that of nature to appeal to. Jesus, then, was only indorsing this Fifth Commandment and extending its application in obeying and honoring His mother as He did and in inculcating obedience to all authority in family, Church and State. And so was St. Paul when he declared: 'There is no authority but from God.'"

The law of nature is that a certain quantity of work is necessary to produce a certain quantity of good of any kind whatever. If you want knowledge you must toil for it, if food you must toil for it, and if pleasure you must toil for it.—Ruskin.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

qualifications for successful missionary work; Bishop Thoburn, who emphasized the need of a deep spiritual life in the missionary on the field; Mr. Harlan P. Beach, who magnified the educational work of the Volunteer Movement; Mr. John W. Wood, who revealed the potency of the printed page as a missionary agency; Dr. E. E. Chivers, who discussed the relation of young people's societies to the Movement; the Hon. S. P. Capen, president of the American Board, who emphasized the necessity of making the financial plans of the Church commensurate with the magnitude of the task of the world's evangelization; Dr. John F. Goucher, who showed the relation existing between financial co-operation in the Church and the world's salvation; Mr. Earl Taylor, who pleaded that the churches remain no longer on a peace footing with reference to the warfare with sin, superstition, and the degradation of heathendom, but that it arise, put on the armor, and go forth to the conquest of the world for Christ. There were many other speakers at these morning sessions, and the addresses generally registered high for instruction, edification, and inspiration.

THE EVENING SESSIONS OF THE CONVENTION.

The five evening sessions of the convention were remarkable for the deep religious tone which characterized them, and for the wonderful breadth of vision which they presented. The speakers were men who had personal knowledge of the things they discussed. There was no idle speculation, no spinning out of fine theories, no straining after the spectacular, but a deep, sincere and consuming purpose to honor God, exalt Christ, learn the mind of the Spirit, and to so present the supreme work of the Church of God that those who heard might be enlightened and some induced to become in a complete and practical sense co-workers with Christ in the world's redemption.

On Wednesday evening, as mentioned above, the speechmaking was largely of the welcoming sort, with the exception of the address of Dr. Ross Stevenson, who emphasized the obligation of the Church to support foreign missions. But on the other evenings the addresses were of a higher and more inspiring type. India, Korea, Africa and China were heard from through men who had toiled long, faithfully and arduously in those fields. The Rev. William Hotchkiss spoke for Africa, and told a thrilling story of his work; the Rev. C. A. R. Janvier made a stirring plea for India; the Rev. W. S. Ament and Howard Taylor, M. D., who had spent many years in China, represented that field.

Friday evening the convention hall was filled to its utmost limits, and the vast audience was lifted to the heights by the addresses of Mr. John R. Mott and Bishop Galloway, the latter magnifying in a magnificent way the invaluable services rendered by the missionary in the development of civilization through the redemption of men. Mr. Mott spoke with unusual vigor and convincing clearness on the need of a forward movement in the non-Christian world. His recent visit to the various mission fields gave peculiar force to his remarkably virile address, at the conclusion of which financial pledges were asked for the support of the work of the Student Volunteer Movement during the next four years, and in a very short time, without any particular pressure, about $15,000 was secured for each year of the quadrennium.

The evening meetings advanced one step toward the climax on Saturday, when the addresses were given by Prebendary Fox, of England, and Mr. Robert E. Speer, of New York. The speech of the former was an urgent appeal for loyal support of the missionary in the hardest fields, among the chief of which the work among the Mohammedans was placed. Mr. Speer's address was by many regarded as the crown of the convention as far as the speeches were concerned, and it certainly was a marvel. He gave statistics for twenty minutes which staggered the audience, and showed the comparative expenditures of Germany, Great Britain, Canada and the United States for various commercial and governmental purposes and their expenditures for the work of the world's evangelization. The exhibit was amazing. But, after a thorough discussion of money, men and machinery as related to the work of missions, he presented the urgency of humanity's need for the Gospel with such solemn earnestness, clearness, and candor that his appeal to the young men and women to forsake all and follow Christ seemed irresistible.

THE LAST DAY OF THE CONVENTION.

A remarkable series of meetings was held on Sunday. In the morning Massey Hall was pretty well filled, the audience consisting solely of delegates. The sermon was preached by Bishop Baldwin, of Huron, from the text, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." It was followed by an address by Mrs. Howard Taylor, which for spiritual insight, simplicity of statement, deep seriousness and burning earnestness was pre-eminent. Having been for many years engaged in active service in the field, and having sacrificed and endured so much for Christ's sake, she was competent to speak as one who had entered into the fellowship of His suffering.

Mrs. Taylor's powerful presentation of the glory of service on the mission field was an admirable preparation for the services of the afternoon—separate meetings for young men and young women—at which the appeal for decision for missionary service was pressed home gently, but firmly. As the students, many of them with radiant faces, many of them with serious faces, one denoting a decision for service and the other a lingering in the valley of indecision, passed out of the churches in which these meetings were held, they were handed the volunteer card, which on being filled out declares it to be the purpose of the signer, "if God permit, to become a foreign missionary." The declaration, so the card states, "is not to be interpreted as a 'pledge,' for it in no sense withdraws one from the subsequent guidance of the Holy Spirit. It is, however, more than an expression of mere willingness or desire to become a foreign missionary. It is the statement of a definite life purpose, formed under the direction of God. The person who signs this declaration fully purposes to spend his life as a foreign missionary. To ward this end he will shape his plans; he will devote his energies to prepare himself for this great work; he will do all in his power to remove the obstacles which may stand in the way of his going; and in due time he will apply to the boards to be sent out. Only the clear leading of God shall prevent his going to the foreign field. While it is the duty of every Christian to face this question, no one should decide it without careful thought and earnest prayer. Having confronted the question, no one should leave it until a decision pleasing to God has been reached. 'Understand what the will of the Lord is.'"

THE CULMINATION.

The convention culminated in a memorable farewell meeting in Massey Hall, to which only delegates were admitted. It was a remarkable session, and the impressions made will remain as a blessed and indelible memory, while the inspiration for service which it fostered will stimulate many young people throughout the land to attainment of a deeper spiritual life and a richer Christian experience, and have its fruitage in holier, wider, more intelligent and more consecrated service, that shall have for its objective the greater glory of God and the evangelization of the world in this generation.—N. Y. Advocate.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The Methodist Preachers' Meeting yesterday was the largest gathering of that body since the adjournment of the Virginia annual conference in November last, every pastor in the three cities, except one, being present. Rev. R. H. Bennett presided and prayer was made by Rev. J. B. Merritt.

Rev. W. M. Ivey, pastor of the Union Street Methodist church, colored, of Petersburg, a church organized under the supervision of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, appeared before the body in the interest of his church. He stated that there was a debt of $500 on the building which they were struggling to pay off, and the membership was very small, being only about fifty-five in all. He presented a strong endorsement from the Methodist Preachers' Meeting of Petersburg, commending him and his cause to ministers and laymen of the Methodist Church in this city and section.

The following, offered by Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith, was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we commend the appeal of Rev. W. M. Ivey to the liberality of our people and ask that wherever possible aid be given for lifting the debt on the Union Street Methodist church, Petersburg.

"A. COKE SMITH.

"E. H. RAWINGS."

The roll of the churches was called and reports heard from the following:

largely attended and he had closed a two weeks' revival service at his church. There were eight conversions during the meeting. Rev. J. B. Merritt preached for him Sunday morning, and Rev. J. K. White, of New York, preached at night on "A Charge to Keep I Have."

At Lekies Memorial Rev. Graham H. Lambeth held the usual services and received two new members by certificate.

Rev. George Wesley Jones conducted the Sunday school at Park Place. He reported a large attendance at the Sunday school in Trinity church. He preached morning and night. The evening congregation was a very large one.

Seamen's Bethel—The chaplain, Rev. J. B. Merritt, reported a good day and services well attended.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had a full day at Lambert's Point. Rev. E. T. Dadmun preached in the morning to a large congregation. The pastor, Rev. C. H. McGhee, conducted the funeral of Mr. James Vanderberry, one of the oldest members of the church, in the afternoon, and preached at night. He received one member by certificate.

Rev. W. P. Jordan preached at Huntersville Sunday morning for the pastor, Rev. C. H. Cheatham, who was detained at home by sickness. There was a good Sunday school. No service at night.

Rev. Dr. Judkins reported a pleasant day. He preached at Centenary Sunday morning, and at Epworth church at night.

South Norfolk—Rev. S. S. Lambeth, D. D., had an excellent Sunday school and interesting services morning and night. The co-operative revival meetings were still in progress. Rev. E. T. Dadmun and J. N. Latham had been preaching for him. The outlook for a good work is favorable.

Cumberland Street—Rev. C. L. Bane reported the revival services in progress at his church. Several of the brethren had been preaching for him. There had been five conversions. He preached at 11 A. M. Sunday, and at night to one of the largest congregations during his pastorate. Mr. Bane said there had been about twenty-five conversions during the past two weeks. The meetings will continue this week. Rev. W. Asbury Christian will preach every night.

McKendrie—Rev. W. R. Proctor reported fifteen conversions in the Sunday school, and these, with the six reported at a former meeting, makes a total of twenty-one. He had large congregations Sunday, and received one on profession of faith.

Memorial—Rev. W. Asbury Christian preached morning and night to full houses. He will begin his revival meetings next Sunday.

Central—Rev. W. T. Green reported a good Sunday school. He preached morning and night to very large congregations, and attended Cottage Place in the afternoon and heard Rev. W. T. Seawell preach.

Rev. T. J. Traynham, of Norfolk circuit, preached at Deep Creek at 11 A. M., at Indiana at 1:30, and at Olive Branch at 3:30 P. M., to the largest congregations since he has been on the circuit.

Rev. E. H. Rawlins reported that he had closed his meeting Wednesday night, the closing sermon being preached by Rev. H. C. Cheatham. There were fifteen conversions. He filled his pulpit Sunday morning and the presiding elder, Rev. W. C. Vaden, preached at night. Rev. Mr. Rawlins preached at Wright Memorial at night.

Rev. J. A. Latham had an excellent congregation at Park View Sunday morning. In the afternoon he made an address at the missionary meeting at Wright Memorial.

Owen's Memorial—Rev. Ernest Christian preached morning and night to large and interested congregations.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at Epworth Sunday morning, and at the Second Presbyterian church for Dr. Thacker at night.

Rev. Dr. Judkins reported some prosperous revivals in many parts of the district. Rev. Joseph E. Potts had forty-three conversions at Belle Haven, and that there had been forty-eight on the Dorchester circuit. A number of the charges had increased the salaries of their pastors. The financial reports were better this year on the district than any year during his presiding eldership. Twenty-seven out of twenty-eight charges had paid up in full.

***

The parsonage of the Nottoway circuit of the Methodist Church, was destroyed yesterday by fire.

The circuit is composed of the country churches—Rocky Hill, White's Chapel, Mays, Salem and Nottoway Court House, and is under the charge of the Rev. J. D. DeBerry.

The building was a comparatively new one, having been erected in the last five years.

The origin of the fire is supposed to have been from a defective flue, as the flames first came from the attic, and the whole roof was on fire before the flames were discovered.

Mr. DeBerry was away at the time, filling an appointment, and the rest of the family were at church, excepting the servant and one little child.

The loss is partially covered by insurance, as there was $700 on the house and $50 on the furniture. Most of the furniture was saved.—Dispatch.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

The last of the National Convention has adjourned, Prince Henry of Prussia has come and gone, and Washington has settled down to its accustomed quiet, so that religious and temperance matter this week is largely of a retrospective kind. Many there are in Washington who hope that out of the visit of the Prince to the United States may come further advancement of the cause of universal peace, and, too, some express the hope that it may lead to more hearty co-operation by Germany in those international movements which look to the welfare of mankind in the uncivilized portions of the globe, as, for instance, the movement, practically inaugurated by the New Hebrides bill, which Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts has done so much to promote.

Dr. Crafts is at present in Toronto, where he has been speaking to the students' conference in behalf of the treaty which Secretary Hay is now urging Great Britain to negotiate with this country for the prohibition of the liquor, opium, and firearms traffic among the aboriginal tribes all over the world. Your correspondent yesterday called on Mrs. Crafts, who is a worthy co-worker with her husband, and who is quite as much interested and as enthusiastic as he. She has received many encouraging letters from Toronto, and the newspapers of the city have shown their interest in no half-hearted way, all of them being filled with praise of Dr. Crafts and his work. As a result of his efforts in that city, there will be a clause on the Canadian Government referendum submitted to Mr. Chamberlain, in which the provisions of the Hay treaty are incorporated and very strongly urged. This was done on the motion of Dr. J. J. MacLaren, K. C., one of the most able lawyers of the Dominion government, who gave the measure his heartiest approval and support. The action shows the great effort being made to get the treaty before the proper authorities and in the most forcible way.

Since the movement has been undertaken it has met with warm encomiums from all sides, and not the least of them has come from the missionaries engaged in Christian work in the localities where it is hoped the measure will be enforced. The Misses Mary and Margaret Leitch, who have had the practical experience of mission service in Ceylon, say that there is no greater drawback to the efforts of the foreign missionary than the curse of the drink traffic, for not only does one case of intoxication frequently wipe out, in the case of the individual, the painstaking teaching of long months and even years, but the native with a whiskey bottle in one hand and the traders' firearms in the other frequently portends a massacre of the native Christians of his own race and of the missionaries who have gone over the seas to give them the message of the Gospel. The temperance argument on a missionary basis will appeal to all. But there are still other phases of the question. In some respects Great Britain is ahead of us, although this country is taking the initiative in the new movement. For England has long seen the evil in the trade that robs all other trades and renders many of the great costs of civilization vicarious sacrifices. Statesmen and merchants have seen that commerce and conscience alike have dictated the policy that England has pursued in her African dependencies, while the portions of Africa where the British control is not exercised are described by the Misses Leitch as one great open-air bar-room, where unscrupulous men drug the poor savages with liquor, and under the pretense of "trade" rob them of their goods. Petitions are now being widely circulated by the Reform Bureau for signatures, and all persons are urged to make an effort to interest those in authority, because every influence counts. The New Hebrides bill, which prohibits the sale of intoxicants and opium to the inhabitants of the islands of the Pacific is the one for which Dr. John C. Paton has pleaded for ten years. The victory will not only gladden his last days, but make them more golden in results by removing the chief obstacle he had to contend with. This is the fourth moral measure written by the Reform Bureau that has become a law in about a year past, during which twenty-four acts of government in all, some of them executive, have been secured by the Bureau and its allies.

England will, in all probability, stand ready to enact the treaty as soon as it is forcibly brought to her attention, as the cause of temperance has been making great strides there in the last few years, and the sentiment against alcoholism seems to grow stronger day by day. Not only are the temperance and religious bodies joined in the crusade, but very recently Sir Dyce Duckworth, one of the leading British medical authorities, took occasion to warn insurance companies that the use of alcoholic liquors is a far more prevalent cause of death than is usually supposed, and a greater element of danger than any one disease. He speaks purely from the clinical point of view. He says that total abstinence is far preferable to the misuse of alcohol in the slightest degree; that insurance companies should lay more stress than they do on the importance of total abstinence, and persons who drink at all should pay higher premiums.

The release of Miss Stone still has its echoes at the State Department, and it is possible the money that was raised for her ransom may go back into proper church channels, if the department can bring the Sultan to terms, as it has successfully done heretofore. There has already been a note, stronger than an intimation, that the Turkish government will be expected to make good the amount of the ransom, and the United States Minister at Constantinople has presented a note to the Porte demanding punishment for the guilty parties. So far the Porte in reply repudiates any responsibility, alleging that the offence was committed in Bulgaria, and therefore all liability is denied. It is likely that a strict investigation will be set on foot to get at the facts of the case, and that action will follow. In the meantime Miss Stone is en route to this country, where she will visit her family, recuperate, and perhaps lecture.

A Pennsylvanian now visiting Washington tells of a practical reform in his State that is good enough to be put in operation everywhere. He said: "All over Pennsylvania anti-swearing societies are being formed, and the people are joining them by the hundreds. The object of the societies is to bring about a cessation of profanity in ordinary conversation. I believe that a vast deal of good will come of this movement, and hope to see it spread to other parts of the Union. The fact is that a large per cent. of men use profane speech to an extent that they scarcely realize. A gentleman ought not to mar his talk with coarse and meaningless expletives, and I believe the day is coming when frequent oaths will not be tolerated in decent society."

"The United States, after the custom of Americans, went into the midst of the Philippine problem hastily, and without careful thought. We expected to finish everything up hastily, since it is our national characteristic to do things with a rush. It is not the duty of this government to abandon any of the work it has started out to accomplish, but, on the other hand, the necessity for action and endeavor along the lines laid out is obligatory. A little difficulty must not hinder us. We have a sacred duty to give the Filipinos the best form of government, and our religion. The time will come when they shall be an independent people, and will look back and thank us for what we have done for them."

DO NOT BE AFRAID to look the facts squarely in the face. That cough, racking and persistent, accompanied by tightness in the chest and spitting of sticky mucus, is a sign of consumption. Common sense dictates the use of Allen's Lung Balsam, an honest remedy, since it contains no opium; an efficient remedy, since it heals the irritated, inflamed throat and lungs, and so prevents a deep-seated cold from running into incurable forms of consumption.

VERY LOW RATES TO THE NORTH-WEST MARCH 1ST TO APRIL 30, 1902.

The Norfolk and Western Railway will sell tickets to Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Coast Points at exceeding low rates from all stations. It is possible rates to the West will never be so cheap again; choice of three routes. Write for rates and schedules, say to what point you are going and your nearest station to this line. See any Agent N. & W. R'y or W. B. BEVILL, M. F. BRAGG, Gen. Pass. Agt., Trav. Pass. Agt., Roanoke, Va.

KEEP UP A BRISK ATTACK upon that bad cold, and do not wait for it to "wear itself out." Perry Davis' Painkiller is a powerful ally. Use it internally, with warm, sweetened water. Rub it well into the inflamed throat and sore chest, and when the foe has taken flight you will understand why time and spasmodic competition make no difference in the popularity of the one Painkiller—Perry Davis'.

old place, stood pointing at the back door and did not go in at all.

To another class of persons I introduce the angel of Hope, and they are the invalids. I cannot take the diagnosis of your disorder, but let hope cheer you with one of two thoughts. Such marvelous cures are being wrought in our day through medication and surgery that your invalidism may yet be mastered. Persons as ill as you have got well. Cancer and tuberculosis will yet give way before some new discovery. I see every day people strong and well who not long ago I saw pallid and leaning heavily on a staff and hardly able to climb stairs.

The Perfect Life to Come.

But if you will not take the hand of Hope for earthly convalescence let me point you to the perfect body you are yet to have if you love and serve the Lord. Death will put a prolonged anæsthetic upon your present body, and you will never again feel an ache or pain, and then in his good time you will have a resurrection body, about which we know nothing except that it will be painless and glorious beyond all present appreciation. What must be the health of that land which never feels cut of cold or blast of heat and where there is no east wind sowing pneumonias on the air, your fleetness greater than the foot of deer, your eyesight clearer than eagle in sky, perfect health, in a country where all the inhabitants are everlastingly well! You who have in your body an encysted bullet ever since the civil war; you who have kept alive only by precautions and self denials and perpetual watching of pulse and lung; you of the deafened ear and dim vision and the severe backache; you who have not been free from pain for ten years, how do you like this story of physical reconstruction, with all weakness and suffering subtracted and everything jocund and bounding added?

Do not have anything to do with the gloom that Harriet Martineau expressed in her dying words: "I have no reason to believe in another world. I have had enough of life in one and can see no good reason why Harriet Martineau should be perpetuated." Would you not rather have the Christian enthusiasm of Robert Annan, who when some one said, "I will be satisfied if I manage somehow to get into heaven," replied, pointing to a sunken vessel that was being dragged up the river Tay: "Would you like to be pulled into heaven with two tugs like that vessel yonder? I tell you I would like to go in with all my sails set and colors flying."

Again, let me introduce the element of hope to those good people who are in despair about the world's moral condition. They have gathered up appalling statistics. They tell of the number of divorces, but do not take into consideration that there are a thousand happy homes where there is one of marital discord. They tell you of the large number in our land who are living prodigal lives, but forget to mention that there are many millions of men and women who are doing the best they can. They tell you the number of drunkeries in this country, but fail to mention the thousands of glorious churches with two doors—one door open for all who will enter for pardon and consolation and the other door opening into the heavens for the ascent of souls prepared for translation.

Those pessimists do not realize that two inventions of our times are going to make it possible under God to bring this whole world into salvable and millennial condition within a few weeks after those two inventions shall be turned into the service of God and righteousness as they will be. I refer to the telegraph and the telephone. If you think that God allowed those two inventions to be made merely to get rapid information concerning the price of railroad stocks or to call up a friend and make with him a business engagement, you have a very abbreviated idea of what can be done and will be done with those two instruments. The intelligence of the world is to be expanded, and civilization will overcome barbarism, and illiteracy will be extirpated, and the promise will be literally fulfilled—"a nation born in a day."

Let Hope say to the foreboding: "Do all you can with Bible and spelling book and philosophic apparatus, but toil with the sunlight in your faces or your efforts will be a failure. The pallor in the sky is not another phase of the night, but the first sign of approaching day, which is as sure to come as tonight will be followed with tomorrow. Things are not going to ruin. The Lord's hosts are not going to be drowned in the Red sea of trouble. Miriam's timbrel will play on the high banks 'Israel Delivered.' High hope for the home! High hope for the church! High hope for the world!"

I introduce the angel of Hope to those who have through disease lost Christian friends. "How could I find them," says a bereft soul, "up there in the land of the multitudinous?" You may find them by inquiry, by heavenly escort and by unfailing memory of the guard at the gate. "And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God, and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal, and had a wall great and high and had twelve gates and at the gates twelve angels." So you see there will be an angel guarding each gate. As you go in ask the armed guard. He saw your loved one pass through and will know the direction to take and by what fountain or in what street of gold is the mansion prepared. The blessed Christ knows where your departed loved one is, and he will tell you if no one else will. Fifty ways of finding out the whereabouts of your ascended one. "But will I surely know him when I get there, for he will be so changed?" Yes, for you will be just as much changed, and the old ability will assert itself. The soul will be as easily distinguished by soul there as on earth the body is distinguished by the body.

Cultivate Hope.

Open that closed instrument of music in your parlor that has not been played on since the hand of the departed player forgot its cunning. Put up before you on the music board the notes of the hymn of Isaac Watts and sing, "There is a Land of Pure Delight;" or James Montgomery's hymn, "Who Are These in the Bright Array?" or Filmore Bennett's "Sweet Bye and Bye;" or "Jerusalem the Golden." Take some tune in the major key—"Ariel" or "Mount Pisgah." While you play and sing the angel of Hope will stand by you and turn the leaves and join in the rapturous rendering. Reunion with the loved and lost! Everlasting reunion! No farewell at the door of any mansion! No goodbye at any of the twelve gates! No more dark apparel of mourning, but white robe of exultation! Hope now is on its knees with face uplifted, but Hope there will be on tiptoe or beckoning you to follow, saying: "Come and hear the choirs sing! Come and see the procession march! Come and see the river of life roll! Come with me over the hills that rise into everlasting heights." Celestial Alps and Himalayas hoisted into other Alps and Himalayas!

The Blackstone Guano Company commenced the manufacture of their celebrated brands of Fertilizers in 1884.

Since that time the demand for them has steadily increased every year, and we believe that the reason for this increased demand for the goods is due to the fact that all of these Brands have every year exceeded their guaranteed analysis in commercial value. For instance, the guaranteed analysis on—

Blackstone Standard	is	$15.20,	but it actually runs	$16.54
Alliance	"	15.20,	" " "	17.71
Hard Cash	"	16.70,	" " "	18.96

This shows that the average excess on the above Brands is $2.12½ per ton, which is not only greater than any other factory gives you, but is more than we have ever given before.

Editorial.

A paragraph in the Baltimore Sun some days ago announced of a certain celebrated society woman, "She is in excellent health, and has had a very busy winter. Few persons have received more dinner invitations than Mrs. —." If there is anything that is honeycombed with indolence, self-indulgence, and hypocrisy, it is so-called "high" life. Think of it, "busy," going to dinner parties! How difficult to form a strong and helpful character in such surroundings! Yet how many are striving with all their might to reach that dangerous "high" life. The words of the Master are ever true, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." We may well pity the children of rich worldly minded people. They have a strong fight to make against wind and tide.

There is much needless anxiety on the part of godly parents lest they should leave their children in good financial condition. Many parents cannot understand why their children grow up comparatively helpless. The reason is not far to seek. The father and mother started with little, but health and energy, and by battling with difficulties and overcoming, became leaders in the world of business, society and church. But their children have too often been fed on the idea that things have been done for them already, and there is not the need for persistent activity. They are flabby and weak, because they have not been obliged to do enough to make them strong. You parents who are saying, "I want my boy to have it easier than I had," beware! Strength comes from use. There is no victory without conflict.

No child is in a more dangerous condition than the only boy, or the only girl, or especially than the only child. The editor has in mind the case of an only boy, born to godly parents as the last child. All the other children were girls. They were well trained and have married and are a joy and comfort to their parents. But when the boy was born, a different course was pursued. There was such pleasure at his coming, that he was made the master of the house at once. His word, his wish, was law. The parents could not bear to see him crossed in anything. He was a "spoiled" child in the full meaning of the word. He was so spoiled that he was an offence to every one except his parents. He was so spoiled that he has never gotten sweet, and sound, and it will take strongest kind of brine to remove the taint upon him. Had he received the same kind of training given to his sisters he would have been the pride of his parents. He is now the cause of fear and sorrow. He was the only boy. Have you one? Do not make him a stench in the nostril of the community. Do not "spoil" him.

Who that has been reared in a house with other children does not pity the only child. What a hard life it is. Who would give up all the happy memories of romps and pleasures with brothers and sisters for all the special privileges of the only child. How difficult it is to keep from being selfish when for years of childhood, when character was forming, the doctrine of yours and mine is not even thought. When all the toys are mine, and all the candy is mine, and all the rides are mine, and all the parental caresses are mine. Theoretically unselfishness can be taught the only child, but it never equals the practical training given by having six or eight brothers and sisters to compel the training to be put into practice. What lonely hours by day and night the only child must have. No romps at bed-time, no games at home after school hours, no responsibilities of looking after the younger children. Then when youth has gone, no persons bound to one through life by the perpetually knit bonds of childhood. How can parents be so selfish and unloving, as to deliberately limit the number of their children to one. It is not only a crime against nature and against themselves. It is a crime against the child whom they profess to love so tenderly. They really love their ease more than anything else, and are unwilling to bear the burdens and responsibilities of parenthood. Such people ought not to get married.

In India in a recent conversation with one of our missionaries, a native replied: "Yes, I know our religion is doomed, and our gods are false, but the only reason I do not confess Christ is that I fear persecution to follow."

Can man or woman choose duties? No more than they can choose their birthplace, or their father and mother. —George Eliot.

MY MOTHER.

One week ago to-day, I was in the city of Richmond, where I had gone to visit my wife at St. Luke's Hospital. I had just finished a short editorial on "Bereavements," and had given the copy to the printer, when I received a telegram stating that my mother had been suddenly stricken with pneumonia. That was on Tuesday. On Thursday evening the parting came, and she was "absent from the body," and "present with the Lord." And in this one utterance of the Apostle the whole truth is summed up. As I sat by her side, within one short last hour, I saw one evidence after another of her presence pass away, until at last, all was still and quiet. I looked at the familiar beloved outlines. They were as they had been before. The body was there. I called her, I pressed her hand, I kissed her eyes and cheeks and brow.

Many times in years gone by, both in childhood and manhood, I had come home, and at once had sought for her. Sometimes I went from one room to another calling her name until I found her. Sometimes when she was asleep I would find her in her room, and touch her or call her softly; never did she fail to respond, never did she fail to greet me with a look that told me of her unselfish and unquenchable love and devotion. But now, for the first time from the hour I first saw the light, my voice and touch brought no response. The body, indeed, was there, but my dear mother was absent from the body. It no longer held the spirit which had made it so useful, so helpful, and so well beloved. As my mind ran over the days and the years, and I thought of all the unceasing round of tender, thoughtful ministrations, of loving self-denial, and of earnest importunate prayer in my behalf, and when I truly realized that she was absent from the body, and that the rest of my earthly pilgrimage I must walk without her, it seemed as if there could be no comfort that could assuage my sorrow.

The hearts which are truly interested in us and love us unselfishly and continuously, in both fair and stormy weather, are very few, and when we lose one of this small number the heart feels very lonely, and the world is never quite the same that it was before.

But the very intensity of our sorrow brings to us relief. We will not agree that the cold, silent body is the all, the sum total of our dear ones, who have been so much to us. Where are all those strong and mighty forces which made their lives so helpful and so beautiful, those spiritual powers which made our home-life so blessed and attractive? They have gone from the body. Yes, but gone where? There is only one answer that can stop our murmurs and complaints, only one answer that can give relief and comfort, only one answer that is adequate and satisfying, and that is the answer of God to our troubled, inquiring souls, "Absent from the body," but "present with the Lord." That she is indeed present with Him none can doubt who knew her. Her children were never in any doubt as to the things of greatest importance in her eyes. The Bible, prayer (private and family), the services of the Lord's house, her pastor, the people of God, especially the poor, the sinners whom she might lead to Christ—these were the subjects which engaged her thought and time. Years ago, in my early childhood, she used to sing:

"I'm a Pilgrim, and I'm a stranger;
I can't stay, I can't stay here."

Her pilgrimage is over, and with humble confidence in His love and mercy, she has entered into the presence of her Lord, whom she had followed and served devotedly for nearly sixty years. All of her children but myself have gone on before, and were ready to receive her, and as I sit and think of what she did for me, I humbly thank God for such a mother, and pray for grace that I may be faithful, and show my gratitude for such a peculiar blessing by living a consecrated and helpful life.

THE MANN LICENSE LAW.

At this writing (Wednesday afternoon) the bill introduced by Judge Mann is still in the Finance Committee of the Senate. The hearing before the committee began Wednesday morning. Judge Mann made a brief statement of the object of the bill and the scope of its provisions. The liquor interests were there, represented by Judge Robertson, of Winchester. As is usually the case there was a strong disclaimer of being favorable to intemperance. The liquor men were the friends of temperance, and the Mann bill was against the best interests of temperance. The preachers were taken as a theme for a lecture, and they were told that they had no business there, that they were damaging the cause of Christ and reflecting upon the power of the Gospel by their efforts to make men moral by law. They were finally informed that they ought not to keep temptation out of the way of the boys; that a boy must be made a man by temptation.

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

COPYRIGHT, 1899, IN U. S. A., BY ADVANCE PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO.

As the team came by the president's house some one proposed a cheer, ending with the regulation "Who's all right? Royce!" And in spite of a feeble objection on the part of one or two the cheer was given, and the team went on to the campus, entered the big gate and dispersed to their rooms.

Edward tumbled into bed, and in spite of the pain in his shoulder he slept several hours. He awoke about 10 o'clock, so sore and stiff all over that he could hardly move. He made himself a cup of coffee on a small oil lamp that he had used during vacation while the club was closed and devoured two or three apples that remained over from a lunch of the Sunday before. He heard the church bells ringing and the newsboys out on the campus calling out the Sunday papers with full accounts of all the big games on Saturday, and as he put his head out of the window he saw a crowd of students on the hall steps reading the paper and eagerly discussing the results of the games. Some one looked up and saw him and exclaimed:

"There's Blake! He can tell us all about it!" The next minute a crowd had tumbled up stairs into Edward's room, and he was questioned as to all the details of the trip, compelled to relate how the captain was hurt, who was to blame for the game that was called off, how much the team was in the hole financially, etc.

By the time this was over it was after 12 o'clock, and, with the rest of the club boys, Edward went over to the house for his dinner. The main topic of conversation at the table was football. The few members of the team who had been to church that morning were drawn into the football talk with the rest. Football was served up with every course, including the dessert and the toothpicks, and it continued to be the staple of conversation more or less through the afternoon.

Edward quieted his Sunday conscience by going to a church service in the evening in one of the churches down town. When he came back to his room, he read a chapter in his Bible, as he had been in the habit of doing every Sunday since he left home. He also started a letter to Willis, but did not finish it. His shoulder pained him exceedingly, and he lost considerable sleep that night from the pain. All the time he was awake he was going over his forthcoming interview with the president. He looked forward to it with mingled feelings of anticipation and dread.

It was really with more relief of mind than any fear of the president that the next morning he said, "I might as well have it over first as last, and I'll see him today." On his way over to chapel services the president passed him and made an appointment with him for the afternoon.

When he went into the library office, the president greeted him cordially and Edward felt encouraged by his look.

"How's your shoulder? Very badly hurt?" the president asked heartily.

"No, sir; I'm sore and lame, of course, but nothing serious. I've come in to make that report about the week's trip, and I want to say first of all that as far as I am concerned it is the last football trip I shall ever take away from college."

"That's a frank beginning. Go on," said the president as Edward paused.

Edward went on, giving a detailed account of the trip, not omitting any incidents, even that one of the boisterous singing Sunday morning.

"I heard you coming back," said the president slowly. Edward continued, giving an account of his Sunday. When he was through, the president asked a few questions.

"Then, in summing up the week's experience, Blake, will you tell me if I put down the arguments against it as they are evident to your own mind?"

"First.—The trip took time out of your college studies that you will have difficulty to make up. The amount of time was out of proportion to any gain on the side of necessary athletic development."

"Second.—Five men on the team received serious injuries, the captain's resulting in an enforced absence from regular college classroom work for several weeks. These accidents might have happened, however, in any games played at home, and we will not consider them as more than incidental to football playing in general."

"Third.—The coming home of the team late Saturday night and early Sunday morning broke into the rest and needful quiet, not only of every member of the team, but also of very many families on College hill, whose rights we as a college ought to respect."

"Fourth.—The Sunday itself was destroyed largely as a day of rest and worship, especially for the members of the team, because they were in no proper physical or mental condition to go to church, to study religious truth or talk about any things except the exciting events of the week before. It is certainly a very unfortunate arrangement that all the big football games in the colleges are scheduled for Saturday. Thousands of college students in this country practically spend all the forenoon of Sunday during the football season in discussing the results of the game played on Saturday. This is not what Sunday was made for, and it is demoralizing to the best use of the day."

"Fifth.—According to your report, I understand the team is badly in debt, owing to the failure of the team that broke its contract. How much did you say the indebtedness would amount to?"

"I don't know exactly. Andrews, the manager, thought it would figure up somewhere in the neighborhood of $150."

"Is there any money in the association to pay this?"

"No, sir, I don't think so," said Edward hesitantly.

"How will it be paid?"

"By subscription, I suppose. And I will come hard. For the fellows are down on the team for failure to win the two games we lost."

The president was silent a moment.

"Do you think, Blake, that any other members of the team feel as you do about the unwisdom of making these long trips?"

"I'm sure they do, sir," Blake named one or two of the boys who had expressed themselves vigorously on the subject. "It is going to be hard to hold the team together for the last two college games scheduled for the end of the month."

"Do you still feel like playing football?"

"Yes, sir; I am willing to play in a reasonable manner. But I've made up my mind I can never go off on one of these long trips again."

Edward rose to go, and, as the president said nothing, he walked to the door, saying, as he put his hand on the knob, "Is that all, sir?"

"No; please sit down again. That matter that Mr. Rankin came to see me about came before the trustees last week. One or two statements in your account of the interview were called into question. I want you to verify them."

The president pointed out the places in the typewritten copy, and Edward vouched for their correctness.

"How is the matter coming out, sir?" he ventured to ask.

"It is under consultation now. I think a majority of the trustees will see the matter as I do. There will be a division of sentiment, however. Several of the trustees and professors are fearful of losing money if we retain Clark, and the final decision in the matter will result in a possible serious difference of opinion among the college authorities."

There was a pause, and Edward, after a moment's hesitation, was through, made another movement to go, when the president called him back.

"Blake, I want to talk with you on another matter. Won't you please sit down a minute?"

Edward went back and sat down, greatly wondering what the president was going to say to him. But he was wholly unprepared for what followed.

"I want to ask you, Blake, about your religious life in the college. Are you getting any help in that direction?"

Edward was so astonished that for several seconds he could not think of

"Will you let me ask you whether you call yourself a Christian?"

anything to say. Finally he replied, with considerable embarrassment:

"No, sir, I don't suppose I am."
"Will you let me ask you," continued the president, "whether you call yourself a Christian?"

Again Edward hesitated. He had not recovered from his astonishment at the thought of the college president talking to him on this subject.

"No, sir, I don't suppose I am."

"What is your motive for conduct?"

"I believe in doing right and in telling the truth," replied Edward with considerable pride.

"But you do not think you are a Christian?"

"No, sir; I make no claim to be."

"Don't you think you ought to be?"

Again Edward paused before he answered.

"Yes, sir; I suppose I ought."

"Your father and mother?"

"Father was not a member of any church. My mother and sister belong to the Methodist church in Randall."

"Do you go to any of the college prayer meetings?"

"Yes, sir, once in awhile; not regularly," replied Edward, with his accustomed frankness.

"Are there any Christian students in your class or in the college that help you in any way?"

"No, sir; I don't know that there are."

"Do any of your teachers ever speak to you about the Christian life? Does the subject ever come up in the classroom?"

"No, sir; I can't recall any word on the subject by any of the teachers."

"And yet," continued the president in the meditative way that he sometimes had, as if he were talking entirely alone—"and yet most of the teachers are Christian men and women and church members. Are we so busy in our Christian colleges in this country that we can't find time from the teaching of languages and sciences and even ethics itself to do any personal work in our classrooms with the plastic hearts and minds of our students? What are we here for in this Christian college if not to bring these young men and women into a live Christian consciousness of their place in the kingdom of God? Are we here primarily to educate scholars for the professions and business and literary men and women for success in money making and accomplishments, or is it our primary object to train up devout Christian men and women to do their best through their professions and their powers to build up the kingdom of God on earth?"

He stopped suddenly and looked at Blake with great thoughtfulness.

"My boy," he said at last, with the earnestness that Edward felt came from a deep personal interest, "my prayer and wish for you will daily be that you may become a Christian student—not merely a moral being, but a Christian being—and as you live longer in the world you will notice a very wide difference between the two. If I am not mistaken, you have so far prided yourself on your morality and have more or less contempt and criticism for others. Am I right about that?"

"Yes, sir; I think so," said Edward in a low voice.

The president paused again, and then, as some one knocked on the door he said simply:

"I shall pray for you, Blake, and hope to see you a Christian man through and through before you leave Hope college."

"Thank you, sir," said Edward as he went out.

He was really agitated more than he was willing to confess by the unexpected review.

EAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

A PLAIN STATEMENT OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE MATTER. SOME REMARKS.

By George G. Smith.

(1) Messrs. Barbee and Smith, acting for the Book Committee, agreed to pay Mr. E. B. Stahlman thirty-five per cent. of what he could collect on the Publishing House claim.

(2) This agreement was a secret one.

(3) The Senators Bates and Pasco, who had charge of the bill in the Senate, heard the rumor that a fee was to be paid, and were satisfied it was false, and Senator Pasco wrote to Dr. Barbee stating the rumor, and expressing his opinion of its falsity, and requesting him to deny by wire that the agents were to pay Mr. Stahlman forty per cent.

(4) The agents promptly replied, saying, distinctly, "The statement is untrue, and you are authorized to deny it." They also wired the same Senator (Pasco) that they had wired Mr. Stahlman to call on him; that he was a gentleman, on whose statements he could implicitly rely, and that his interest for the bill reached above and beyond pecuniary consideration.

(5) Senator Bate, however, to make assurance doubly sure, sent them a telegram, asking "a reply to Senator Pasco's letter, saying whether 40 per cent., or any other fee, was to be paid to Stahlman, and said, 'In my judgment, if true, it will endanger the bill.'"

(6) The agents replied: "We wired Senator Pasco early this morning, as follows: 'The statement is untrue, and you are therefore authorized to deny it.'"

(7) With these assurances the Senators did deny positively that any fee was to be paid Mr. Stahlman.

(8) An amendment had been offered to the bill limiting the fee to $5,000, but when these statements were so positively made this amendment was withdrawn, and the bill was passed.

(9) The money was paid, and Mr. Stahlman received his fee of $100,800.

(10) The General Conference met after this, and made no utterance in opposition to the course of Mr. Stahlman and the agents, or of the Book Committee.

(11) A part of the Book Committee, consisting of Dr. Denny, Dr. Mason, Dr. Campbell, and laymen Hamilton, Reeves, Odel, Fete, Kendrick, and Morgan, after a careful review of the matter, vindicated the agents from any intention to mislead the Senate, and laid no censure on Mr. Stahlman for anything he had done.

(12) The Senate appointed a committee to look into the matter. The agents were both before it. They admitted they sent the telegrams, and admitted that they never gave the information about the fee asked for, but defended their conduct, and denied they had any intention to deceive or mislead the Senate.

(13) The Senate, in report 1410, after careful inquiry, said it had been deceived by the agents; that the bill, in its opinion, would not have passed without amendment but for this deception, but that no blame should rest on the Church because of the course of the agents, but that the agents were very censurable.

I do not think any one will question for a moment the correctness of this calm statement of facts. The Congressional document from which it is drawn is in reach of every one who is anxious to get a copy.

REMARKS.

This matter ought not to be passed over as settled. We have had no tribunal to which the matter could be referred, and will have none till the General Conference meets in May. It has original jurisdiction, and it must take the matter in hand.

There are different views held as to what the General Conference should do. One party apparently endorses the whole procedure of the agents and attorney. They do not, and cannot, deny that Mr. Stahlman admitted falsehood, nor shut their eyes to the fact that the agents did withhold information, and made the impression they had answered candidly and did deceive their friends in the Senate, but that party seems to say that as the claim was just, and the bill was in peril, these questionable methods were justifiable. To me it is humiliating beyond degree that any body of Christian men could for one moment tolerate measures like these, and yet when I asked one:

"Did the agents deceive the Senators?"

"They did."

"Did they intend to do so?"

"I think they did."

"Were they justified in practicing deception?"

"I think they were."

Alas! alas! Then there are those who, like the Book Committee, accept the agents' disclaimer of any intention to deceive, and believe that they gave what they thought was an honest answer to the questions proposed, and though they think they were not wise, they acquit them of blame.

Both of these parties are in favor of letting this matter pass without further comment. But there are those who believe that Mr. Stahlman spoke truly when he said, he practiced deception and uttered falsehoods. They believe with the Senate Committee and with Dr. Barbee himself, that the agents did withhold information they were asked to give, and yet left the impression that they had given it; that they did deceive, and did intend to deceive. This party is united in the opinion that the most solemn obligation rests on the General Conference, the first assembly which had jurisdiction meeting after the facts were known, to express its most decided condemnation of these questionable methods. They believe that, painful as it is the duty, there is no other course left it but not to re-elect the agents who have acted in this questionable way, and to express the decided disapproval of the course they pursued to collect this claim in so many words.

They recognize the high character of the Book Committee, and give it credit for an honest intention to do justice in acquitting the agents of any blame, but believing that their decision was incorrect, they reverse it, and refuse to re-elect the same men to the same place.

On this point we are all agreed. Knowing the men who compose the Book Committee as I do, I am sure no one of them could be induced to accept the position again. Is this enough? Upon that point there is difference. Some say "Return all the money." This, as Senator Hoar says, is impracticable. Any one acquainted with the way in which money is appropriated can see at a glimpse that it could not be done. It would be a reflection on the House and the President as well as the Senate if we should tender it. The Senate wants to be vindicated by our admitting that our agents prevented its giving us more money than we received, and only that.

There is a second party, who propose, as the money belonged to a trust fund, and as the Senate, and possibly the House, were anxious to prevent any diminution of the amount due the trust fund by paying out of it a large fee, and as an amendment to prevent this result was defeated by the misleading statements of our agents, that we, from other sources, shall restore to the trust fund all the money it would have possibly received if the Lodge amendment had passed. This plan seems to meet all the demands of all parties. The only trouble is to get the money needed, not much less than $100,000. I do not know that we old preachers for whose benefit this is to be done, are entitled a voice, but unless the people are much more liberal now than they used to be, they will not be over anxious to raise this money, but the Publishing House can well afford to give its bonds for $90,000 to trustees, and pay out of its earnings "in perpetuo" $5,000 for the Conference collection.

I have said nothing about the Bishops' proposal and the Senate's reply to it. The Bishops have not yet reported, and it would be discourteous to anticipate them or attempt to divide them in their suggestions. They can only suggest, and they can only suggest to the General Conference, and they will in good time make such suggestions as in their judgment they ought to make. We have only to do with the public acts of our officials. We have as a General Conference no jurisdiction over their private conduct. That matter belongs to other tribunals, but we must say what we think of their course as our agents, and say it without prejudice for or against.

I believe what Dr. Barbee never denied, that the agents did evade a direct answer to a direct question, and did deceive those who trusted them, but I believe that Dr. Barbee thought he was right in doing so. I am sure he was not, but I give him credit for his protestations.

We do not censure the Book Committee, we simply reverse them. We decidedly disagree with them, but recognize their cheerful and unpaid service and give them our thanks. They were honest but somewhat hasty in adopting a report written hurriedly on the knee of the chairman.

I am no partisan, and I hope all the members of the General Conference will rise above it, and act without fear or favor or affection. I have been a Methodist not far from 60 years, and a Methodist preacher for near 50 years. I am no officer, and never was. I do not belong to the delegation, and these remarks upon this mortifying matter may seem impertinent, but they are sent for them lovingly, fearlessly and honestly. I wear no man's collar. I call no man Rabbi! I love men and admire men who are bitter foes to each other. I am anxious to know the truth and to speak it. I do not believe there are any truer men than some men I know on the Book Committee. I do not believe there are any truer men than many who believe the agents should be retired and the Book Committee reversed in its decision, and I believe that those who stand opposed to me in this contention are as honest as I hope I am.

I trust God will guide us. I think He will.

DR. STEEL AND "LITTLE NOTTOWAY."

In the Recorder of March 6th, Dr. Steel relates an experience that he and I had together some two years ago. It is not that I pretend to excel or even to equal the Doctor in the art of description that I write about the experience of that day, but to set him right in one particular. As he remembers that part of our journey where we forded the "little Nottoway," he puts us both in a rather unenviable light. He says we put the horse and buggy into the car of a negro who chanced to pass at the time to drive across the swollen stream while he and I "cooned the log." However much or little concern we may have had for the safety of that "nigger," I had too much concern for my horse and buggy to do a thing like that. No sir. I did not thus recklessly send "Ned" and my buggy into that rushing river. His concern about the walking of the log and the outcome of that lecture will, perhaps, account for the Doctor's forgetfulness. It was this way: Just across the stream lived a young man who knew those waters better than I. Over to him I went for counsel. He said it was all right, kindly went back with me and took charge of the driving, while the Doctor and I "cooned the log" together. Thus we were saved the risk of a foot-wetting, at least, and then we pursued our journey in peace and in the rain.

Dr. Steel correctly says the lecture did not pan out. The trouble was the down-pour of rain. And I want him to know that I have never felt quite satisfied about it. I think he must try again. Not because we are so very anxious for such work at this time, but because it ought to be done. We no longer have on hand another new parsonage enterprise. We extend another invitation to Dr. Steel to come and give "Home Life in Dixie." Twice already I have heard the story, but I really want to hear it again, and will make an appreciative listener. I promise good drive in the same buggy, behind the same trusty "Ned," without the risk of a "log cooning," with the assistance of a hearty Mecklenburg Virginia welcome. Let my friend say when he will come.

WHAT A DEACONESS IS, AND WHAT SHE IS NOT.

As there are many erroneous ideas afloat as to the deaconess and her work, such as we hope to have it in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it may be well to give a little categorical statement of what she is expected to be when she comes into our Church life as an agency authorized by the General Conference.

WHAT IS A DEACONESS?

1. She is a consecrated Christian woman.
2. She is so circumstanced that she can give her whole time to the service of God.
3. She is a trained worker, and therefore a better worker than one who has had no preparation for it.
4. She is authorized and appointed by the Church, which gives her the right to do some things she could not otherwise do.
5. She is not to be supported by missionary money, she asks for no salary, only that her necessities be provided for when she has no means for self-support.
6. She is at liberty to retire from the work at any time if she wishes to marry, or family duties call her, or if for any reason she may desire to do so.
7. She wears an ordinary, simply made dress of a uniform color with those in the same office, with some distinctive mark of that office, possibly white strings to her bonnet. She thus secures economy, good taste, introduction and protection when needed.
8. She lives in a Deaconess Home, when there are a sufficient number of deaconesses in one community, for the sake of economy, convenience, and congenial companionship—an arrangement much more desirable than a cheap boarding house.
9. As a pastor's assistant she becomes a leader for the women of that congregation in church work. Instead of hindering them or doing the work they should do, they learn from her how to work more effectively, and are led out into lines of service they had not entered until she, as a skilled worker, pioneered the way.
10. She may be connected as a deaconess with her own home church, live in her father's house, and be supported by him, if he so desire, just as in the past, only she will now do better work.

WHAT A DEACONESS IS NOT.

1. She is not a preacher.
2. She is not ordained (her title is that of an office), therefore she is not a female deacon.
3. She is not "a Protestant nun" (does not "ape Romanism"), as she takes no vow of celibacy or of any other kind.
4. She does not wear "the habit of a nun." The distinctive mark in her dress is no nearer the habit of a nun than the "clerical cut" coat worn by some preachers is like a priest's cassock.
5. She is not "a Church beggar," haunting the stores and public places, her time being given to direct Christ-like service to the sick, the poor, and the sinful.
6. The Deaconess Home is not like "a nunnery," "expensive houses with brick or stone walls around the yard," nor has it "a Mother Superior." Usually it is a frame cottage, where several womanly women live a simple home life, with possibly one of more mature years and experience to advise and guide the less experienced and manage the affairs of the house.

WHAT IS THE WORK OF THE DEACONESS?

A deaconess ministers to the poor, cares for the sick, provides for the orphan, comforts the sorrowing, seeks the wandering, saves the sinning; a work so important and delicate that it would "fill an angel's hands"—a work that many Christian women long to do, yet shrink from because they feel its responsibility and their lack of preparation for it. Can any one reasonably deny them this preparation, or esteem them the worse for it? The growing importance of women workers in city evangelization is admitted by some who oppose the trained deaconess workers, saying that it should be done by the untrained women of the Church. If these last had done it effectively in the past, there would have been no call for any others. We all know how many men complain if their wives do "too much Church work." We also know that many times the binding duties of children and home render such service impossible to mothers. Sometimes even a single woman living in the home of another is not at liberty to visit infected and unsanitary parts of the city. A deaconess has none of these difficulties to overcome. Untrammelled, prepared by study and experience, a recognized worker, she goes with heroic courage and fortitude in and out among all classes and conditions of the great city's population, gathering into her arms the deserted waif, leading from the street the wayward girl, watching by the bedside of the dying, teaching in the kindergarten, leading a cottage prayer-meeting, teaching a mission Sunday school, conducting a mothers' meeting, training an industrial school—according to their "several ability," each one doing what her hand finds to do as "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," being "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—Our Homes.

EDUCATIONAL FACTS AND FIGURES.

A STATEMENT OF COMPARATIVE EDUCATIONAL CONDITIONS IN TEN SOUTHERN STATES.

In 1900 the ten States south of the Potomac and the Ohio and east of the Mississippi, including Louisiana, had 22 per cent. of the total population of the United States, and 25 per cent. of the school population; yet only 6 1-2 per cent. of the total expenditures for public schools was made in these States, and only 4.1 per cent. of the $538,623,736 of public school property was in these States.

The per capita expenditure for public schools varied from 50 cents in Alabama and 51 cents in North Carolina, to $4.93 in Massachusetts and $5.30 in Nevada. The average for the whole country was $2.83; for these ten States only 86 cents. The average per capita for these States was less than one-third the average for the whole country, and only a little more than one-fifth the average for the North Atlantic and Western States. The average salary paid teachers for the entire school year varied from $87 for males and $78 for females in North Carolina to $1,290 for males and $496 for females in Massachusetts. The average for the whole country, exclusive of these ten States, was $455.02 for males and $312.22 for females; for these ten States $175 for males and $150 for females. The average number of days of schooling for each child of school age varied from 22 in North Carolina to 107 in Massachusetts. For the North Atlantic States it was 87, for the North Central States 82, for the Western States 80, for these ten Southern States 43. It should be remembered also that only 154,000 of the 5,645,161 children of school age in these ten States were reported as enrolled in private schools, primary and secondary.

The total school fund of these ten States was only one million dollars more than the school fund of Ohio, and the total value of their public school property was only one-half the value of the public school property of Ohio.

A generation has passed since the close of the war between the States, and business men in the prime of life, whose children are now in the school, never heard the noise of battle or saw a wounded soldier sent to the rear. These States are rich beyond comparison in natural resources. They are peopled by a brave and noble race. Is it creditable to us that such comparisons as the above show such relative conditions as to education?—Atlantic Educational Journal.

HOW D. L. MOODY'S WORK GOES ON.

Back of D. L. Moody's home in Northfield, Mass., is the round hill well known as Round Top, on which for years the twilight meetings have been held during the sessions of the different summer conferences. Here in accordance with his last wishes, his body was laid to await the resurrection. On the simple marble stone that marks the spot are cut only his name and the words, "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." The full truth of these words as applied to Mr. Moody is more and more evident as days go by.

Especially is it true of the schools which he planted at Northfield, Mount Hermon, and Chicago, which promise to be his most enduring monuments. The school for young men at Mount Hermon, four miles across the Connecticut from Northfield, is just completing its twenty-first year. It is not merely a Bible training school, nor a school for the training of evangelists or mission workers, as many suppose. Mr. Moody believed in each man serving God in that particular line of life for which he is best fitted, so Mount Hermon aims to give an all-round education and training to fit its men for usefulness in life. It differs from other schools, as Mr. Moody himself differed from other men. It takes young men who cannot get an education elsewhere. It takes them without reference to age, except that they must be over sixteen, and without reference to knowledge of books. Its studies begin with elementary grades and take a man high enough to enter college. Many of its graduates have led their classes in college, and what is better, have stood as leaders of manly character in the Christian work of the colleges.

The largest number, however, of its thirty-five hundred students have not gone to college, but are out in life, weighing heavily on the side of righteousness wherever they are. It was one of Mr. Moody's favorite sayings that "a man should not count as one, but should weigh a ton."

Another principle of Mr. Moody's for which the school stands is that no young man should expect others to do for him what is in his own power. The student at Mount Hermon pays only $54 for each term of sixteen weeks, but this he must furnish, and when his money is gone he stops school and goes to work earning more. Another idea of Mr. Moody's was to keep the school going all the time. He abhorred an idle building as he did a lazy boy, so the year is divided in three terms of sixteen weeks each, and the course is so arranged that the student can drop out for one or more terms and come back and take up his studies where he left them.

The summer term, which begins May 1st and runs to the middle of August, was a new idea about which many were skeptical, but two years' experience has proved that it is one of the best terms of the year for the students. In northern Massachusetts it is not too hot in the summer for good study, and there is every attraction in the location of Mount Hermon for open air life and recreation.

Mr. Moody was an ardent believer in the teaching of the Bible as a part of each man's training for usefulness, and in the summer term this is specially emphasized. Beside the regular Bible courses of the school, a daily Bible class is held, in which visiting Bible teachers bring to the students, for two weeks each, the best they have to give them.

For the next summer term these teachers will include such men as the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, lately of London, now leader of the Northfield Extension Movement; Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, known the world over by his books; Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., Prof. E. I. Bosworth, of Oberlin; Prof. Elmore Harris, of the Toronto Training School; David McConaughy, late national secretary of the Young Men's Christian Associations in India, and Paul D. Moody, Mr. Moody's son, who graduated last summer at Yale, and is preparing himself in Edinburgh to assist in the Bible teaching at Mount Hermon.

During the summer term only provisions are made for young men who see no way of obtaining a fuller education, but would like to spend any period, from two weeks up, in special study of the Bible and other branches. In such an opening as this Mr. Moody is still saying to every earnest young man, "Do you want to serve God and your country better? If so, here is a helping hand toward doing it."

Young men who want to know more about Mount Hermon should write to the principal, at Mt. Hermon, Mass.

Growth in grace is not helped along very much by hunting for flaws in other people.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 30.

Text of the Lesson. John xv. 1-18.
Memory Verses. 13, 14—Golden Text. John xi. 25—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

1, 2. "They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulcher and we know not where they have laid Him." These were the words of Mary Magdalene to Peter and John on her return from the sepulcher early on the morning of the resurrection day. As all the lessons of the quarter have shown us the power and doings of the risen and ascended Christ, it is not amiss on this review day, which happens to be Easter, to consider again specially His resurrection. We see in these women, as in the apostles, true believers in and followers of the Lord Jesus, with life and the future all dark to them because they knew not the resurrection, and they knew not because they believed not. In the lessons of the quarter we have seen thousands upon thousands of men and women made new creatures in the power of His resurrection. We need to be often reminded that if Christ be not risen all preaching is vain and none has been saved or ever will be, but Christ being raised up from the dead and having all power in heaven and earth every purpose of the Lord shall be performed (I Cor. xv. 12-28).

3-5. The two disciples ran because of Mary's message, and John, the fleetest of the two, arriving first, stooped down and looked in and saw the linen clothes lying, but he did not go in. It may have seemed to him too sacred a thing to step into such a place, or it may be that he feared he might see the precious body, desecrated, lying elsewhere in the tomb. We cannot know fully his thoughts and feelings until he shall some day tell us himself, but this we surely know, that if he had believed his Lord's words he would not have been surprised to find an empty tomb, but might rather have joyfully exclaimed, "He is risen!"

6-8. Peter, more impulsive, when he comes, goes right into the sepulcher, then John follows, and they both see the linen clothes lying and the napkin that was about His head wrapped together in a place by itself and they believed Mary's testimony that the body was not in the tomb, but beyond that, as to what had become of the body, they were wholly in the dark, as the verses following testify.

9. "For as yet they knew not the Scripture, that He must rise again from the dead." Besides His own oft repeated words they might, with unopened eyes, have seen His resurrection in Ps. xvi. 10; Isa. xvi. 19; Eze. xli. 2, or at least a strong suggestion of it, but their hearts were set upon a kingdom which, according to their way of thinking, was to be established there and then, and being filled with their own thoughts they had no place for His thoughts and purposes.

10, 11. The disciples went to their own home, but Mary remained at the sepulcher weeping. Luke says that Peter departed wondering in himself at that which was come to pass (Luke xxiv. 12), not believing that Christ was risen, but believing simply that His body was not in the tomb and wondering what had become of it and what it all meant. We are reminded by the disciples and Mary of a time when "every man went to his own home. Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives" (John vii. 53; viii. 1). Did you ever see a precious body laid away from your sight, and the friends and relatives all went to their homes, but you, having left that which was the house in which the one who was dearer to you than life had lived in the tomb, felt that you no longer had what could be called home? If so, you can sympathize with Mary.

12, 13. "Woman, why weepest thou?" Thus spake the angels to her, and she answers in about the same words she had used to Peter and John. Words seem idle when there is this aching void in the heart unless they come from those who can truly sympathize, who have themselves experienced our sorrow.

14, 15. "Woman, why weepest thou?" This time the words are from Jesus Himself, and they mean more, for He can be touched with a feeling of our infirmities (Heb. iv. 15, 16). It would seem that as Mary faced the angels and they spoke to her she must have seen them looking at some one behind her, and as she turned to see whom or what they were looking at she, supposing she saw the gardener, speaks to him of the body she cannot find. I imagine her talking to Him whom she so loved and not knowing Him, but see also chapter xxi. 4, and remember the two who walked to Emmaus with Him and knew Him not till they saw His hands as He broke bread in the house. How grief and unbelief do blind us and how much sorrow we might escape if we would only believe God!

16. "Mary!" "Master!" What a heavenly "multum in parvo!" Just one word from each, but heart meets heart in those two words. The heart broken is comforted; the Father of mercies and God of all comfort has spoken. Whether it be as Frederic Whitfield says, the sorrowing, broken hearted Mary, or the tried and terrified disciples in the upper room, or doubting Thomas, or the weary, disappointed toilers on the lake, as Jesus shows Himself, the risen Christ, to each all is made right, and the all sufficiency of Christ for every state of man's heart is made manifest. The heart of man needs only to see Jesus. Let Him present Himself and all will be well, and the heart will be filled with joy and gladness and repose quietly in Him.

17. "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." The question is often asked, Why did our Lord not allow Mary to touch Him when just a little later the same morning He allowed the other women to hold Him by the feet and worship Him? (Matt. xxviii. 9.) Why not be content with the Lord's own reason, "For I am not yet ascended to my Father?" The inference is plain and easy that before the other women met Him He had ascended to His Father and returned. During the forty days He evidently ascended and returned many times before the visible ascension, since which he has not yet returned, but He will (Acts i. 11), and soon now.

18. Her tears were dried, her heart was glad and she went as His messenger to comfort others as they mourned and wept, but as she told them the wonderful story they would not believe her (Mark xvi. 9-14). Neither did they at first believe the two who saw Him later on the same day, and when, in the evening, He appeared unto the eleven He upbraided them with their unbelief.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 30, "The Risen Life,"
Christ's, Ours—Text, Luke xxiv. 1-12; Col. iii. 1-10.

EASTER.

The day of resurrection!

Earth, tell it out abroad!

The passover of gladness,

The passover of God!

From death to life eternal,

From earth unto the sky,

Our Christ hath brought us over

With hymns of victory.

So sang John of Damascus in the eighth century in the Greek tongue, and so has the church of Christ been singing through all the centuries since in all tongues in which the gospel is proclaimed.

No other religion the world has ever known has any such festival as this. All have their praises and prayers to the powers divine; all have their cries of woe and walls of death anguish. This Christianity only has an Easter anthem, a resurrection hymn, because it alone has a risen Lord of life and a hope of immortality. Of all days in the calendar this should be the brightest and gladdest. It is well that our churches should be made beautiful with flowers and resound with joyous music. Everywhere for Christmas, but illies for Easter. The perfume of blossoms in God's house is the best of incense to symbolize the gratitude and supplications of His people.

How varied are the ceremonies which express the worshipful spirit on this occasion, from the gorgeous ritual in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher at Jerusalem and in St. Peter's, Rome, to the simple forms of the mission hut in Africa or the sod house on the western prairie! The important thing is the heart adoration. Even the name Easter is not really Christian, but was adopted from a heathen goddess of the Anglo-Saxon whose festival came near the time of the Christian commemoration of the resurrection and the Jewish passover. The Jewish feast has passed with the destruction of the temple, but all its meaning is carried forward in the covenant through Christ. The Anglo-Saxon goddess has no worshipers, but a better hope than she could inspire has come to mankind, so that, while we say Easter, we no longer have her and her worship in mind, but we all think of the Christ hope and good cheer in prospect of eternal life.

Our hearts be pure from evil

That we may see aright

The Lord in rays eternal

Of resurrection light,

And, listening to His accents,

May hear so calm and plain

His own "All hail!" and, hearing,

May raise the victor strain.

Now let the heavens be joyful!

Let earth her song begin!

Let the round world keep triumph

And all that is therein!

Invisible and visible,

Their notes let all things blend,

For Christ the Lord hath risen,

Our joy that hath no end.

Self Betterments.

One motive for making gifts to Christ is obligation, another is gratitude, and still another is self betterment. All who loyally give themselves to Christ experimentally realize that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Consecrating to His service body, soul and spirit, being no longer conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of our minds, we daily "prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Loyalty to Him necessitates utter denial of self and persistent cross bearing, but it is rewarded even here by "manifold more and in the world to come life everlasting." Loyalty to Him necessitates the steadfast practice of His precepts. His law is treasured in the heart, and His will is wrought out faithfully. But "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart. More to be desired are they than gold—yea, than much fine gold—and in keeping of them there is great reward."—Evangelist.

Immortal Love.

"Can I tell you, can you tell me, why the sky is gray and the winds are chilly when only the other day the one had sunshine and the other warmth because those little arms were round my neck and those deep gray eyes looking love into mine or because that serious young voice asked me serious questions which I answered with my hand in blessing on a curly head?" No; it is all a mystery—labor, sorrow, love, life, all we have and are and suffer and enjoy, unless we regard them in the light of the cross of Him who was the Man of Sorrows and who is immortal love.—Churchman.

A Steadfast Faith.

A steadfast faith is necessary to steadfast conduct. According to the faith is the life. If that is uncertain and unsettled, fixed at no point, the result will be an unsteadiness in religious life. A lack of purpose in the man at the helm will make the course of the ship at sea very erratic and perhaps result in its ultimate destruction. The only safety for the soul, the only safety for the church, is to be found in accepting the true doctrine of salvation and continuing steadfastly in it, as did the New Testament Christians, doing the work of the Lord.—Independent.

Duty Is Ours.

It is needful that we form definite plans and that we concentrate endeavor on specific ends. It is not always needful that we get what we seek, and if we are faithful to the light we have and work with a consecrated spirit we may know that we cannot fail. If we miss what we seek, we miss only to attain something higher and better. Duty is ours; results are God's. It is for us to plant and water. Let God not only give, but elect what shall be the increase.—Christian Leader.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Seeds Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

A fashionable church is a godless church.—Rev. Dr. A. R. Holderby, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

The Only Anchor.

Cling to the cross. It is the only anchor for thy soul.—Rev. Elmer E. Helms, Methodist, Buffalo.

The Soul In Darkness.

A soul without a heaven is a soul living in the dark.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

The Unfaith of Selfishness.

The greatest unfaith toward Christianity is the unfaith of selfishness.—Rev. Dr. William J. Tucker, President Dartmouth College.

The Most Practical Thing.

The religion of Jesus Christ is the most practical thing for a practical life.—Rev. Dr. D. M. Skilling, Presbyterian, Allegheny City, Pa.

The Reality of Christ.

That Christ may be made real to the world he must be real to the church itself.—Rev. Dr. Sherman H. Doyle, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Stand For a Divine Purpose.

Each one of us stands in the thought of God for some definite and divine purpose.—Rev. E. George Sarkeys, Presbyterian, New Orleans.

True Eloquence.

There is more eloquence in a single gracious act than in the fiery breath of all world's orators.—Rev. Frank G. Tyrrell, Christian, St. Louis.

Chasing a Vain Delusion.

To live without God is to chase a vain delusion to hopeless ruin. No man should begin his business or professional life till he has seen and heard God.—Rev. T. C. Carlton, Baptist, St. Louis.

Germ of Good In All.

In every man there is a germ of goodness which only needs to be developed. It is there in the heart and needs only to be cultivated to bear fruit.—Rev. J. C. Barr, Presbyterian, New Orleans.

Majorities Not Always Right.

Crowds are not always right; majorities do not always stand for the truth. To stand alone requires another spirit; to follow the Lord fully quite frequently involves our standing alone against the multitudes.—Rev. Edmund Duckworth, Episcopalian, St. Louis.

Athletics and Morals.

The problem before us as Christians is to encourage and produce of a form of athletics which tends equally to the development of the highest spiritual and intellectual and physical manhood.—Rev. Dr. Henry C. McCook, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

The Cry of Today.

The cry of the people today is not for the heavenly manna, but for bread and something with it. The cry of the people is not for the white diaphanous garments, but for good, substantial clothing made of wool, which they can wear down here.—Rev. Marle St. Croix Wright, Unitarian, New York.

The Superlative Joy.

Anybody can receive; it is perfectly natural, but when you voluntarily, for the good of others, choose to give, to treat them as yourself, then you enter into superlative joy. The giver, through constraint or custom or reputation, can never appreciate this joy.—Rev. Joseph Stephan, Methodist, St. Louis.

God as a Partner.

In your duty of man toward man do not count God out. If you will not keep God as your partner, right soon your good work will be cut off of its sweetness, of its strength. No real brotherhood of man can be without the real fatherhood of God.—Rev. Dr. Daniel S. Tuttle, Episcopal Bishop of Missouri.

The Sunny Soul.

There is a flower that turns toward the sun, and it does so upon bright or cloudy days. It follows the course of the sun, seen or unseen. So the soul that is truly seeking God keeps in the course even when God seems to hide his face. That soul will be sunny on dark days.—Rev. John P. Brushingham, Methodist, Chicago.

Religion in the Home.

The musician touches the keys, and the response is away off amid the pipes and chords of the great organ. So in life the word spoken to the heart of childhood is echoed back from manhood and old age. The home and the church largely determine the destiny of the nation.—Rev. Dr. W. H. W. Reese, Methodist, Pittsburg.

The Optimistic Christian.

And I feel with all the depth and power of human conviction that the true optimist, he who rejoices in his portion, he whose world is sunlit and heaven spanned, is the lover of his kind, whose gladness is the gladness of many, whose abiding peace is drawn from the joys of the multitude.—Rev. Dr. Luccock, Methodist, St. Louis.

No Nation For Itself Alone.

The time will come when no man and no nation will live for himself or itself alone. God has prospered the mission work everywhere, and there have been great increases not only in the church membership and the number of baptisms, but in the donations, the interest in foreign work and in the number of workers abroad as well.—Rev. W. C. Mabie, Baptist, Boston.

The Everlasting Repose.

There is in every breast a continuous dissatisfaction with the present state of things that will never leave us till we ourselves leave this lower sphere—ceaseless aspirations after something higher and better than this world can give, humiliating ripples caused by a sense of our own imperfections. But in the new world the unrest of the children of God shall be succeeded by everlasting repose.—Rev. Dr. R. Marshall Harrison, Episcopal, Philadelphia.

It is as great a thing to keep men from coming under the power of sin as to deliver them from it.

THE MANN LICENSE LAW.

There was no real argument made by the speaker on the merits of the bill, but the time was consumed, and the hearing had to be adjourned until Friday morning.

All our readers are urged to stir about among their neighbors and send personal letters to their Senators and Delegates, calling upon them to support the bill. Do so at once. The special provisions of the bill are the requirement of police protection, the evidence that a majority of the qualified voters wish the saloon established, the further evidence that it will be in accordance with a sound public policy, and not contrary to the moral or material interests of the community.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Conference will convene at 2:30 P. M. on Tuesday. The opening sermon will be preached at night. Every delegate is urged to be present at the opening session.

J. C. REED,

Presiding Elder.

Danville, Va., March 13, 1902.

SPECIAL FEATURES COMING.

The Ram's Horn has special features in hand and in prospect which we believe will evoke as much enthusiasm as any which have heretofore appeared. A series of articles is now being prepared by a remarkably successful Gospel worker on "How to Reach Various Classes of People." He has done personal Christian work at home and abroad, and his suggestions will undoubtedly prove of great value to all Christian laymen, and ministers as well.

AN EDUCATION ADAPTED TO OUR NEEDS.

WE NEED AN EDUCATION THAT WILL MAKE SKILLFUL, HONEST WORKERS.

We need an education that will lead our people away from the beaten tracks into new fields, an education that will dignify honest, intelligent labor, says superintendent C. E. Vawter, of the Miller Manual Training School. We need to correct the evils that have come to us from a system that has been dead a third of a century. We need to have our people recognize that the highest type of manhood is found in him who, with a clear head, an honest heart, and a skilled hand, faithfully does the work that God has given him; and who can feel as he goes to rest at night that his own right arm has brought him to victory, and that his goods have been increased without detriment or loss to any other living creature. When such shall be the case then truly shall we say, "Happy is that people."—Atlantic Educational Journal.

Religion should be to every man not merely a creed, but an experience; not an insurance for the next world, but a programme for the present world.

Religious News.

Rev. Dr. H. M. Du Bose, of Nashville, Tenn., editor of the Epworth Era will be in the city next Sunday, and while here will be the guest of the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, pastor of the Broad Street Methodist church.

He will preach Sunday morning in the Broad-Street Methodist church, 8 o'clock in the evening at Park Place Methodist church, and 3:30 will address a mass-meeting of the Epworth Leaguers of the city in Union Station Methodist church.—Times.

Plans are being made by the Methodists of the city to conduct evangelistic services in this city shortly on a large scale. It is probable that soon after next month arrangements will be made to hold protracted meetings in every Methodist church in the city at the same time.

The matter was discussed Monday at a meeting of the Methodist ministers. It was hoped that the meetings could be held during April, but this was found to be impossible, owing to the fact that the Woman's Home and Pious Society will be in session here then for about ten days.—Leader.

A FIELD SECRETARY.

The Rev. J. W. West, of Southwest Virginia, has been elected field secretary of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia. His headquarters will be in this city, where he will also establish his residence.

The election of Mr. West occurred yesterday afternoon at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the League, called specially for the purpose of electing a field secretary. The function of this new officer will be to travel over the State, organizing branch Leagues and arranging for meetings. He will work in connection with the Rev. C. H. Crawford, the superintendent of the League, who, instead of travelling around himself, as heretofore, will now remain, to a great extent, at the office of the League.

Mr. West is one of the brightest young ministers in the State. Up to this time he has been conducting the work of a district superintendent of the League in Southwest Virginia. He was formerly the pastor of a church at Big Stone Gap, Va.—Leader.

PREACHER'S MEETING.

A very pleasant session of the Methodist Preachers' meeting of the city was held this morning and presided over by the vice-president, Rev. L. W. Guyer who called on Rev. J. A. Thomas, pastor of Wesley church, to make the opening prayer.

The usual reports of the pastors concerning their labors on the previous Sabbath were made. We note that at Ettrick two new Sunday school scholars were reported. At High Street 7 persons received into church membership. At West-Street 1 new Sunday school scholar and 3 additions to the church reported. At Washington-Street a good day's work was done the pastor preaching twice, attending two funerals and raising over $100 for a good cause.

Rev. R. T. Wilson, presiding elder.

was present, and stated that Sunday morning he preached at Smith's Grove, in Dinwiddie county, and at West-Street at night.

At Washington-Street this week revival services will be held, and the pastor will be aided by Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D., of Richmond. Similar services will be held at High-Street the present week.

The discussions touching the work indulged in at this meeting were highly interesting.

Pastor Guyer is already hustling to make the Buckley lecture in this city in April a success. This is the age to "button-hole" folks if we would make a success of enterprises, and Pastor Guyer, rotund in form, pleasant in manner, and a hard worker, will not fail to do his part.

The revival spirit noted before is still with us, and these pastors will carry "the war into Africa" to break down the strong holds of Satan and build up the Redeemer's cause. At the victories of the Gospel preacher their faces lighten up and their hearts kindle. The old time religion with us is still believed in, and its blessed saving power is what the city needs. In the preachers' meeting no pessimism is heard. Faith, hope and good cheer predominate.—Petersburg Progress.

Monumental Methodist church was well filled yesterday morning, the occasion being the anniversary of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society of the church. The anniversary sermon was delivered by the Rev. H. C. Cheatham, and was very interesting from start to finish. At the conclusion of the sermon a collection was taken up for missionary purposes, and quite a large amount was realized.—Star.

The Rev. C. L. Bane, of Cumberland-Street M. E. church, Norfolk, preached to a large audience at Memorial M. E. church last night. Much interest was manifested, and many predictions for a successful revival were heard.

Sunday night closed a series of revival meetings at Liberty-Street M. E. church that continued for two weeks. The pastor, the Rev. Mr. Lambeth, was assisted in the meetings by the Revs. Messrs. McGee and Latham. There were quite a number of conversions and several additions to the church.—Landmark.

"Standing by a Purpose" was the theme of a discourse delivered at Wright Memorial church last night by the pastor, Rev. Geo. M. McFaden, to a large and interested congregation. The reverend gentleman used as his text Daniel 1: 8, "But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank." His appeal to the young men and the boys was touching, and doubtless made a lasting impression upon them. The next of the series to young men will be "Absalom, or the Temptations of Young Men." One lady was received into membership of the church.—Star.

UNION OF MINISTERS.

The advisory committee of the various Protestant denominations met in the study of Epworth Methodist church at 12:30 o'clock yesterday to discuss the plan of the organization of a Union Ministerial Association, Rev. Dr. J. Ernest Thacker, of the Second Presbyterian church, presiding.

On motion of Dr. Albert Buxton, Rev. Dr. B. D. Tucker, of St. Paul's Episcopal church, and Rev. W. Asbury Christian, of Memorial Methodist church, Berkley, were appointed a committee to call a meeting of the ministers of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley and vicinity, to meet Monday, April 7th, at 12 o'clock, in the lecture room of Epworth church, for the purpose of organizing a Union Ministerial Association for conference and fellowship.—Virginian-Pilot.

METHODIST MINISTERS.

Rev. W. R. Proctor presided at the Methodist preachers' meeting yesterday morning, and prayer was made by Rev. Dr. J. H. Moss, of Smithfield, Va.

The greater part of the session was taken up in a discussion of the work of the church in the present age as compared with days of the early fathers of the church. The discussion was an animated one, and before its close it was developed that the conversions today were as large, if not larger, than fifty years ago, and that the ministry now were fully as well equipped and as thoroughly consecrated to their sacred calling.

The discussion also brought out the fact that the conditions were very different from what they were a half century ago. It was also shown that while the material interests of the church had grown with the times, they had also placed it in a position to enlarge the borders of Zion and to gather a greater harvest of souls into the church.

Those who participated in the discussion were Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith, Rev. H. C. Cheatham, Rev. W. Asbury Christian, Rev. C. L. Bane, Rev. Geo. Wesley Jones, Rev. W. C. Vaden, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, Rev. W. P. Jordan, Rev. C. H. McGhee, Rev. R. H. Bennett, Rev. Graham H. Lambeth, Rev. J. K. Joliff, and Rev. E. T. Dadmun.

The following churches reported for Sunday:

Huntersville—Rev. E. H. Rawlings, of Monumental church, Portsmouth, preached to a good congregation, which seemed to be deeply impressed. Two youths came forward and confessed Christ, and eight others who were in the audience requested prayers. The pastor, Rev. H. C. Cheatham, preached at night.

The services at Cumberland-Street church were of a most interesting character. The pastor, Rev. C. L. Bane, preached both morning and night. He received twenty-three new members on profession of faith, and seven by certificate.

At Monumental, Portsmouth, Rev. H. C. Chatham preached the missionary sermon before the missionary society of the church. In the afternoon Rev. E. H. Rawlings addressed the Rosebud Missionary Society at Wright Memorial and preached for his own congregation at night.

Rev. George Wesley Jones conducted a very fine Sunday school at Park Place in the morning, and preached to good congregations at Trinity church. He began his revival meeting at night.

Rev. D. B. Austin reported interesting services at Haygood Memorial and Bayside churches, and very fine Sunday schools at both places.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt held his usual services at Port Norfolk. He received two new scholars in the Sunday school and one member into the church by certificate, and baptized one infant.

Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder, at Central at 11 A. M., at Brighton in the afternoon, and at Owen's Memorial at night. He was heard by large congregations at all three services.

Rev. W. C. Cain preached at the South-Street Baptist church at 11 A. M. for the pastor, who is sick, and Rev. W. T. Green preached at Central Methodist church at night.

Epworth—Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith preached to a fine congregation at the morning service, and received three new members by certificate. He spoke at the Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon. He did not preach at night.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian had large and deeply interested congregations to hear him at Memorial, Berkley. These services were preparatory to the co-operative revival which began at his church last night. He reported the outlook highly favorable for a successful meeting. Rev. C. L. Bane, of Cumberland-Street church, Norfolk, will preach every night this week.

Park View—Rev. J. N. Latham had the largest congregation to hear him Sunday morning during his pastorate, and a deep religious interest was manifested. He began his co-operative revival meetings at night. Rev. Daniel T. Merritt will preach every night this week.

At Lambert's Point, Rev. C. H. McGhee had several accessions to the Sunday school. He preached to a good congregation at the morning service. Held a very interesting Sunday school Bible institute in the afternoon and preached at night.

The services at Centenary Sunday were interesting and instructive. The pastor, Rev. E. T. Dadmun, preached to a full house in the morning and to a fair audience at night. The Sunday school was largely attended and the exercises profitable.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at Epworth at night to a fine congregation, taking as his theme, "No Man Cares for My Soul." A profound feeling was manifested throughout the audience. Co-operative revival services were commenced last night. Rev. E. T. Dadmun preached, and will continue to do so every night this week.

Rev. J. K. Joliff had a very large congregation to hear him at Queen-Street Sunday morning and a fair sized audience at night. He discoursed on "The Man With One Talent" at the 11 o'clock service, and at night selected as his theme "What is Truth?"

McKendree—Rev. W. R. Proctor had a large congregation to hear him at 11 A. M., and received sixteen new members on profession of faith. At night he preached to a deeply interested audience.

Rev. D. Albert Buxton, of the Church of Christ (Disciples), and Rev. W. H. Riser, of the First Lutheran church, were introduced to the body, and were cordially received.—Virginian-Pilot.

LEAVES OUT THE ETERNAL.

Bishop A. W. Wilson preached at the morning and evening service yesterday at Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, South, Madison avenue and Preston street, Rev. Dr. C. M. Hawkins, pastor.

The Bishop spoke of a future life beyond the grave, and said that lives on earth are frequently filled with sacrifices, so that the future life may be attained.

"All lives," he said, "which are not surrendered to God are worthless lives. And in order to surrender our lives to God we frequently have to make sacrifices. Every great religion has had in it the elements of sacrifice. No form of faith can live without it. It is the central feature of our own faith, and it's the predominating element in the whole cause of history.

"We hear a great deal about practical sense, but for the most part practical sense in this world is doing what is most destructive. Practical sense takes no account of the invisible and eternal. It is simply the building up of selfishness and the accumulation of wealth."—The Sun.

METHODIST INSTITUTE.

The amount of human interest that centres about the Methodist Institution for Christian Work is very great. A most interesting class of people is being reached in Richmond in a systematic manner.

Rev. George H. Wiley, the superintendent of this institution, is accomplishing almost wonders. The ecclesial missions of the Bowery are not more prolific of the moral tragedies and real life stories, with a large proportion of the human interest feature in them, than come to the knowledge of Mr. Wiley almost daily.

It is not generally known that time and again men of Richmond who are prosperous clerks, book-keepers and others have come to the institution of a Sunday morning absolutely without money after a night of "rounding with the boys," and, after being fed and gotten into shape, go home. These men are not encouraged to do wrong again, but, having made the mistake, it is not the friend who stands off and says: "Look at you now," but the one who helps out of the plight. At least this is the philosophy of Superintendent Wiley.

"HAS HIS CLAIMS ALLOWED."

It is not generally known that this is the place where hundreds of the tramps and drunkards of the most abject type go, and are treated kindly, and for the first time probably in their lives get a taste of what Christianity is, having heretofore thought it was all talk and long sermons, fine churches, to which people wear their best clothes.

It is not generally known that the Sunday services are not infrequently attended by the keepers of some of the worst bars and dens in the city.

It is not generally known that many of the keepers of these disorderly places will send their children to the various entertainments and schools of

Talmage's Sermon.

WASHINGTON. This discourse of Dr. Talmage is a national congratulation over the achievements of brain and hand during the past twelve months. The texts are: 1 Corinthians ix, 10, "He that ploweth should plow in hope;" Isaiah xli, 7, "He that smootheneth with the hammer;" Judges v, 14, "They that handle the pen of the writer."

There is a table being spread across the top of the two great ranges of mountains which ridge this continent, a table which reaches from the Atlantic to the Pacific sea. It is the Thanksgiving table of the nation. They will come from the east and the west and the north and the south and sit at it. On it are smoking the products of all lands, birds of every aviary, cattle from every pasture, fish from every lake, feathered spoils from every farm. The fruit baskets bend down under the products plucked from the peachfields of Maryland, the apple orchards of western New York, the orange groves of Florida, the vineyards of Ohio and the nuts thrashed from New England woods. The bread is white from the wheatfields of Illinois and Michigan, the banqueters are adorned with California gold, and the table is agleam with Nevada silver, and the feast is warmed with the fire grates heaped up with Pennsylvania coal. The hall is spread with carpets from Lowell mills, and at night the lights will flash from bronzed brackets of Philadelphia manufacture.

Welcome, Thanksgiving day! Whatever we may think of New England theology, we all like New England Thanksgiving day. What means the steady rush to the depots and the long rail trains darting their lanterns along the tracks of the Boston and Lowell, the Georgia Central, the Chicago Great Western, the St. Paul and Duluth and the Southern railway? Ask the happy group in the New England farmhouse; ask the villagers whose song of praise in the morning will come over the Berkshire hills; ask all the plantations of the south which have adopted the New England custom of setting apart a day of thanksgiving. Oh, it is a great day of national festivity! Clap your hands, ye people, and shout aloud for joy! Through the organ pipes let there come down the thunder of a nation's rejoicing! Blow the cornet! Wave the palm branches! "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

Victories of Peace.

For two years and a half this nation has been celebrating the triumph of sword and gun and battery. We have sung martial airs and cheered returning heroes and sounded the requiem for the slain in battle. Methinks it will be a healthful change if on this year's Thanksgiving in church and homestead we celebrate the victories of the plow, the hammer and the pen, for nothing was done at Santiago or Manila that was of more importance than that which in the last year has been done in farmer's field and mechanic's shop and author's study by those who never wore an epaulet or shot a Spaniard or went a hundred miles from their own doorsill. Come up, farmers and mechanics and literary men, and get your dues as far as I can pay them.

Things have marvelously changed. Time was when the stern edict of governments forbade religious assemblages. Those who dared to be so unloyal to their king as to acknowledge loyalty to the Head of the universe were punished. Churches awfully silent in worship suddenly heard their doors swung open, and down upon the church aisle a score of muskets thumped as the leaders bade them "Ground arms!" This custom of having the fathers, the husbands, the sons and brothers at the entrance of the pew is a custom which came down from olden time, when it was absolutely necessary that the father or brother should sit at the end of the church pew fully armed to defend the helpless portion of the family. But now how changed! Severe penalties are threatened against any one who shall interrupt religious services, and annually, at the command of the highest official in the United States, we gather together for thanksgiving and holy worship. Today I would stir your souls to joyful thanksgiving while I speak of the mercies of God and in unconventional way recount the conquests of the plow, the hammer and the pen.

Most of the implements of husbandry have been superseded by modern inventions, but the plow has never lost its reign. It has furrowed its way through all the ages. Its victories have been waved by the barley of Palestine, the wheat of Persia, the flax of Germany, the ricefields of China, the rich grasses of Italy. It has turned up the mammoth of Siberia, the mastodon of Egypt and the pine groves of Thessaly. Its iron foot hath marched where Moses wrote and Homer sang and Aristotle taught and Alexander mounted his war charger. It hath wrung its colter on Norwegian wilds and ripped out the stumps of the American forest, pushing its way through the savannas of the Carolinas and trembling in the grasp of the New Hampshire yeomanry. American civilization hath kept step with the rattle of its clevises, and on its team hath ridden thrift and national plenty.

I do not wonder that the Japanese and the Chinese and the Phœnicians so particularly extolled husbandry or that Cincinnatus went from the consulship to the plow or that Noah was a farmer before he became a shipbuilder or that Elisha was in the field plowing with twelve yoke of oxen when the mantle fell on him or that the Egyptians in their paganism worshiped the ox as a tiller of their lands.

To get an appreciation of what the American plow has accomplished I take you into the western wilderness. Here in the dense forest I find a collection of Indian wigwams. With belts of wampum the men lazily sit on the skins of deer, smoking their feathered calumets, or, driven forth by hunger, I track their moccasins far away as they make the forest echoes crazy with their wild halloo or fish in the waters of the still lake. Now tribes challenge, and council fires blaze, and warwhoops ring, and chiefs lift the tomahawks for battle. After awhile wagons from the Atlantic coast come to those forests. By day trees are felled, and by night bonfires keep off the wolves. Log cabins rise, and the great trees begin to throw their branches in the path of the conquering white man. Farms are cleared. Stumps, the monuments of slain forests, crumble and are burned. Villages appear, with smiths at the bellows, masons on the wall, carpenters on the housetop. Churches rise in honor of the Great Spirit whom the red men ignorantly worship. Steamers on the lake convey merchandise to her wharf and carry east the uncounted bushels that have come to the market. Bring hither wreaths of wheat and crowns of rye and let the mus and the machinery of barn and field unite their voices to celebrate the triumph, for the wilderness hath retreated and the plow hath conquered.

Triumph of Husbandry.

Within our time the presidential cabinet has added a secretaryship of agriculture. Societies are constantly being established for the education of the plow. Journals devoted to this department are circulated through all the country. Farmers through such culture have learned the attributes of soils and found out that almost every field has its peculiar preferences. Lands have their choice as to which product they will bear. Marshy lowlands touched by the plow rise and wring out their wet locks in the trenches. Islands born down on the coast of Peru and Bolivia are transported to our fields and make our vegetation leap. Highways by this plow are changed from boggy sloughs into roads like the Roman Appian way. Fields go through bloodless revolutions until there the farmhouse stands. In summer honeysuckles clamber over the trellises. On one side there stands a garden, which is only a farm condensed. On the other side there is a stretch of meadow land with thick grass, and as the wind breathes over it it looks like the deep green ocean waves. There goes a brook, tarrying long in its windings, as if loath to leave the spot where the reeds sing, and the cattle stand at noonday under the shadow of the weeping willows. In winter the sled comes through the crackling snow with huge logs from the woods, and the barn floor quakes under the thumpings of the flail or the deafening buzz of the thrashing machine. Horses stand beneath mow poles bending under loads of hay and whinny to the well filled oat bins. Comfort laughs at the wind rattling the sashes and clicking the icicles from the eaves.

Parts of our country, under industrious tillage, have become an Eden of fruitfulness, in which religion stands as the tree of life and educational advantages as the tree of knowledge of good and evil, not one of them forbidden. We are ourselves surrounded by well cultured farms. They were worked by your fathers, and perhaps your mothers helped spread the hay in the field. On their headstones are the names you bear. As, when you were boys, in the sultry noon you sought for the harvest field with refreshments for your fathers and found them taking their noon spell sound asleep under the trees, so peacefully now they sleep in some country churchyard. No more fatigued. Death has plowed for them the deep furrow of a grave.

Agricultural Prosperity.

Although most of us have nothing directly to do with the tillage of the soil, yet in all our occupations we feel the effect of successful or blighted industry. We must, in all our occupations, rejoice over the victories of the plow today. The earth was once cursed for man's sake, and occasionally the soil revenges itself on us by refusing a bountiful harvest. I suppose that but for sin the earth would be producing wheat and corn and sweet fruits as naturally as now it produces mullein stalks and Canada thistles. There is hardly a hillock between the forests of Maine and the lagoons of Florida, between the peach orchards of New Jersey and the pines of Oregon, that has not sometimes shown its natural and total depravity.

Praise God for the great harvests that have been reaped this last year! Some of them injured by drought or insects or freshets were not as bountiful as usual, others far in excess of what have ever before been gathered, while higher prices will help make up for any decreased supply. Sure sign of agricultural prosperity we have in the fact that cattle and horses and sheep and swine and all farm animals have during the last two years increased in value. Twenty million swine slaughtered this last year, and yet so many hogs left. Enormous paying off of farm mortgages has spoiled the old speeches of the calamity howlers. If the ancients in their festivals presented their rejoicings before Ceres, the goddess of corn and tillage, shall we neglect to rejoice in the presence of the great God now? From Atlantic to Pacific let the American nation celebrate the victories of the plow.

I come next to speak of the conquests of the American hammer. Its iron arm has fought its way down from the beginning to the present. Under its swing the city of Enoch rose, and the foundry of Tubal Cain resounded, and the ark floated on the deluge. At its clang ancient temples spread their magnificence and chariots rushed out fit for the battle. Its iron fist smote the marble of Paros, and it rose in sculptured Minervas and struck the Pentelican mines until from them a Parthenon was reared whiter than a palace of ice and pure as an angel's dream. Damascus and Jerusalem and Rome and Venice and Paris and London and Philadelphia and New York and Washington are but the long protracted echoes of the hammer. Under the hammer everywhere dwellings have gone up, ornate and luxurious. Schoolhouses, lyceums, hospitals and asylums have added additional glory to the enterprise as well as the beneficence of the American people. Vast public works have been constructed, bridges have been built over rivers and tunnels dug under mountains and churches of matchless beauty have gone up for him who had not where to lay his head, and the old theory is exploded that because Christ was born in a manger we must always worship him in a barn.

Goodness of God.

Railroads of fabulous length have been completed, over which western trains rush past the swift footed deer, making the frightened birds to dart into the heavens at the cough of the smoke pipes and the savage yell of the steam whistle. In hot haste our national industry advances, her breath the air of 10,000 furnaces, her song the voice of uncounted factories, her footstep the flash of wheel buckets and the tread of the shaft and the stamp of foundries. Talk about antediluvian longevity! I think the average of human life is more now than it ever was. Through mechanical facilities men work so much faster and accomplish so much more in a lifetime that a man can afford to die now at forty years as well as one of old at 900. I think the average of human life in point of accomplishment is now equivalent to about 800 years, as near as I can calculate. In all our occupations and professions we feel the effect of a crippled or enlarged mechanical enterprise. We all have stock in every house that is builded and in every public conveyance that is constructed and in every ship that is sailed. When we see the hard-working men of the land living in comfortable abodes, with luxuries upon their table that once even kings could

WHAT ONE SHERIFF HAS DONE.

By Geo. T. B. Davis.

There is at least one large city in the United States where it is practically impossible to buy liquor. Portland, Maine, enjoys this enviable distinction through the pluck and perseverance of its sheriff, Samuel F. Pearson. In less than fourteen months he has transformed a city with three hundred blind pigs into one where liquor cannot be bought to-day.

Without previous experience in the enforcement of law, he has proven a veritable nightmare to law-breakers. At the time of his election he was superintendent of a Gospel mission in Portland, and immediately received the nickname of "the parson-sheriff." His rousing victory over the liquor dealers and his success since then is rapidly giving him a national reputation.

Sheriff Pearson is fifty-nine years of age—a white-haired, faultlessly dressed, energetic little man with the pluck and determination of a giant. When he accepted the nomination of the Prohibition party for sheriff of Cumberland county, little more than a year ago, the politicians laughed. The Prohibitionists had cast so few votes in the previous election that they were not entitled to a place on the official ballot. Electing a county officer with nothing but "stickers" had been up to that time unknown. The office of sheriff was yielding a revenue of about $10,000 a year, and gradually the succeeding sheriffs had been paying less attention to enforcing the prohibitory laws.

Two years ago the prohibition leaders of Portland, seeing the open saloons run in defiance of the law, were almost in despair. Finally they held a day of prayer and fasting, and decided on Mr. Pearson to run for county sheriff. He refused at first, but at length, after much prayer, he consented to the nomination. To the surprise of everybody, he swept the county and had several hundred votes to spare over the Republican and Democratic candidates. Since his election Mr. Pearson has discovered and raided over four hundred public places and private houses where liquor was being sold.

The parson-sheriff has been offered a bribe of $75,000 to let the liquor interests alone; his life has also been threatened many times; and once a mob of five hundred attempted violence, but after a few words from him they quietly dispersed. There is now talk of Mr. Pearson running for Governor of Maine.

The sheriff recently visited Chicago, and before an enthusiastic audience described his experiences. We are pleased to present to our readers the story of his campaign as narrated by himself:

"I was never placed in such a position as I was on the afternoon I was nominated for sheriff of Portland. My wife was lying at the point of death, and had been ill for many weeks. I knew what it meant; I knew what a responsibility it was. I knew the effort that had to be put forth in order to accept the nomination with any degree of propriety whatever. I asked that I might be excused for a time. I went across the way to our mission. I went into my private room, locked the door, and fell on my knees, and I asked God to show me my duty and to give me strength and courage to do whatever it might be, and if God ever spoke to Saul of Tarsus as he lay prostrated while on his journey to Damascus, God Almighty spoke that day to Samuel F. Pearson. I went back to that convention, accepted that nomination, and said in closing, 'Friends and brethren, I am the next sheriff of Cumberland county.' Perhaps I was the only one that believed it.

"I little knew then what four months' campaign meant. Ours is a large county, it covers a great deal of territory, and there were three strong candidates—Republican, Democratic and Socialist. It was a hard prospect and a hard fight to encounter or to engage in, but God from that moment began to let His healing power rest upon my companion. She began to improve, and during the whole of that campaign she steadily but slowly gained in strength so that she could sit up again. That gave me an opportunity to get out upon the stump and speak, and I spoke fifty-seven times in that campaign to the people of Cumberland county that I had met and mingled with daily for thirty-two years. I began to see that my prospect was even brighter than I thought it was.

"But they began to import stump speakers against Pearson, who had no party whatever behind him. There was one man, by the name of Butterick, one that they had imported from New Hampshire. After one of his meetings, in which he called me a crank with wheels, I told my man to harness my horse, and I drove to where he was stopping, and I said, 'I have come over this morning on a peculiar errand.' He said, 'What is it?' I said, 'I have come to challenge you to meet me in debate in the city of Westbrook, seven miles from here, in this county.' He looked up and said, 'Who are you?' I said, 'I am the man that's got the wheels.' He accepted. As I was the challenging party, the committee arranged that I should speak three-quarters of an hour, and he should have an hour to reply to me, and I should then have fifteen minutes to reply to him. I only wanted fifteen minutes any way. It was all right. So I went on, and I was very good—very. I left that fellow an opportunity to chop me all into mince meat. I had fifteen minutes coming.

"I said, 'Ladies and Gentlemen,—I have only fifteen minutes now to reply, but I want to have your undivided attention. This man said I am a crank (for he had repeated his old story). I do not know a more useful thing for a washing machine than a crank, and I am in the washing and wringing-out business. This man has given me the credit of having wheels, and if I only keep them well lubricated and revolving in the right direction, I can run them in the right direction. He has come to our city an entire stranger. He has told us of the great calamities that would befall us if I should be sheriff. He has told this story better than I could. I tell you, before God, that if I am elected, I will tear all the bars out of the hotels in Cumberland county, not only in Portland, but every county. And then this man says the hotels will shut up and what will become of our summer tourists? I have been down and examined the jail, and there are 280 prisoners there, and 181 are there for intoxication, and so I will shut up the hotel bars and saloons, and I will empty the jail, and then you can put all your summer tourists down there if you want to. There is another terrible thing that he has brought up here to frighten you. He said the grass would grow in our streets. Just this morning, before I left Portland, I drove down to a hay-yard and I inquired the price of hay, and cheap hay is worth $21 per ton, and I would rather have a crop of grass than a poor lot of drunkards.' You ought to have seen the fellow by that time. He was almost all withered away.

"On the 31st day of December, a year ago, I went to the Cumberland county jail, and there in the presence of the county commissioners I was told to hold up my right hand, and I did so. The proper officers said, 'You will repeat after me:

"I, Samuel F. Pearson, do solemnly swear before Almighty God (it was the solemnest moment of my life) that I will enforce the laws of the State of Maine, and support and maintain its Constitution according to the best of my ability, so help me God.'

"I was bound by an oath; there was no will for Pearson in it and around it. It was a matter now in dealing honestly with my God. Going from that place as hurriedly as the carriage could drive me home, I went into the room of my dying wife. God gave her consciousness for a few moments. She called me to the bedside, and with her weakness she pulled me down to her. Her burning lips pressed mine. She said, 'Some one has told me you are now the sheriff—be a good one—be a true one; close the rum shops.' She closed her eyes, never to speak again in this world. Her lips moved, but she could not articulate the sentiments, but by the grace of God, I will hear the balance of that sentence by and by.

"I engaged in the work, and the first day of my term of office we seized sixty-one rum shops. I immediately drove to every hotel in Portland and told them that they could have twenty-four hours to get their rum and liquors out of the way, and out of the city, not to be stored on the premises nor within the limits of Cumberland county. Every hotel-keeper said to me, 'Mr. Sheriff, we have got the best of you; we sent it away yesterday.'

"After I had been in office for six months I thought I would like to know how true the prophecies of this Mr. Butterick were, so I took a carriage and drove over the city, taking two of the leading officials with me. I went across to the largest retail boot and shoe dealer in the State of Maine. I said, 'Brother Lane, I have come to ask you how business has been since I have been enforcing the law.' He said, 'Look down through that store—there are four more clerks on that floor than ever before since I have been in business, and my trade has increased sixty per cent., and I am selling the worst men and worst drunkards in Maine boots and shoes every Saturday night.'

"A man in one of the hotels told me only a short time ago that his trade had been from $300 to $500 a week better since I had been sheriff and had torn the bar out of his premises than it had ever been since the time of hotels.

"Our city of 55,000 inhabitants had been alarmingly cursed by three hundred saloons for the last eight years. Our taxes had gone from $16 on the thousand up to $22, and the first year of my administration I turned back into the city treasury of the city of Portland forty per cent. of the entire pauper fund, because we had no need of it. We have expended money on engines in the work-shops, we have paid more than $16,000 for repairs in the Supreme Court room, and to-day, for the first time in the history of Cumberland county, after this large expenditure, Cumberland county owes no man on earth a single dollar, and the first day of January we had $64,000 in our treasury.

"There are twenty-five cities and towns in Cumberland county besides Portland, and there is no such thing in existence as an open saloon or an open bar. It does not exist, and for that reason I claim with all the power that I possess that Prohibition prohibits.

"You ask some experiences: There is a nice old lady in Portland who pats me on my shoulder when I drop in. She would sell a little rum, and I could not catch the old lady. I said, 'Mrs. ———, you are selling whiskey.' 'Do you think I would sell whiskey to such a fine man as yourself?' I went in one day (my men had been in several times, but had not been successful), I said I just wanted to look through her place for I had a warrant. There was a large shelf in one of her rooms, and upon it I found soap, saleratus, and such things, and by and by I began to smell whiskey, but could not find it. I picked up a cocoa box, but I did not expect to find it there, and so went on, but finally I came back again and picked up the cocoa box, and there was a gallon of whiskey, and that old woman had sold it for almost three months in that way. Prohibition does not prohibit—no, oh no, not a bit.

"Now, imagine one of those old-fashioned rocking chairs like they used to have, and around the bottom is a curtain. In this chair is sitting an old lady eighty-three years of age. We had received complaints from this house. This was what you would call a 'kitchen bar-room.' We would go there and search and search, but we could not find anything. There was a certain manufacturer who came up to me and said his men were getting intoxicated. So we used to go there sometimes two or three times a day, and could not find anything. I said one day, 'Now, you go into court and get a warrant, and we will search those premises. We got one and hunted the whole house through, and were coming out, when I turned and looked at that old lady. She was sitting there with a white cap around her face—had had a very severe stroke of paralysis. I looked at that old lady and said, I was never in that house but what that old lady was in that very same place. I turned and said, 'Do you sit there all the time. Granny?' 'Yes,' said she, 'all day.' 'Cannot get up and around,' I asked. 'You don't sleep there, do you?' She said, 'Oh, no; some one comes and helps me into bed.' I said to one of the men to get hold of her arm and we will put her to bed. He took hold of one side and I the other, and she kicked and screamed and made an awful noise, and we lifted her up and there was a jug right there with whiskey under that curtain, and that is where those men had been getting whiskey every day. Prohibition does not prohibit—oh, no.

"There was a man who had a place fitted up very nicely. It was the corner of a parlor floor. That parlor was elegantly furnished. Up in a corner was a large table, and on it a twenty dollar Bible. We could not find anything there, but, by and by, I conceived the idea that we clean the parlor out, take the furniture out, and take the carpet up; but in walking over the floor I happened to step on a corner piece and it tipped a little. It was fastened under the mop-board and bound with a piece of iron and with a large steel frame. There was a spring to it, and it proved to be a trap-door. Under that there were forty-five gallons of liquor, between that floor and the cellar.

"The best thing that every one of us can do is to go forward with the determination that, God being our helper, we will do all that we can to annihilate the saloon for the elevation of our country."—Ram's Horn.

NOTICE.

The Woman's Home Mission Society of the Virginia Conference will hold its twelfth annual session at Blackstone, Va., April 24-25, 1902.

KATE E. WALL,
Recording Secretary.

Delegates and visitors expecting to attend the meeting will please send names promptly to the chairman of Committee on Entertainment, Miss Cornelia Adams, Blackstone, Va.

One in close touch with the Mohammedan world says that "as soon as the power of Turkey is broken, thousands of Mohammedans will, at once, confess Christ, for some of them are worshipping Him in secret now."

THE ILL WIND that blows nobody good is bent on errands of mischief in the fall and winter. It produces that most dangerous of common complaints a bad cold. Your cold will not become bronchitis nor consumption if you make timely use of Allen's Lung Balsam. Take it frequently until the cough and the stopped-up feeling in the chest are gone. Contains no opium, and will not disturb digestion.

MEETING SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION, ASHEVILLE, N. C., MAY 8-15, 1902.

For the above occasion the Southern Railway announces one fare for the the round trip, tickets to be on sale May 6th to 10th, inclusive, with return limit May 21st, except that by depositing tickets with joint agent at Asheville on or before May 10th, and upon payment of 50 cents an extension of limit until June 2d may be obtained. This offers a rare opportunity to those wishing to visit the favored section (Land of the Sky).

METHODIST INSTITUTE.

the institution, and punish them if they won't go.

Every week hundreds of men come to the home, scores spend the night.

ARRAY OF FEATURES.

Here are some of the features of the work:

Breakfast every Sunday morning for the homeless—the W. C. T. U. furnishes this meal. That is an interesting fact. In nine cases out of ten the homeless of a Sunday morning has been the drunkard of the evening before. When he is sodden with drink, disgusted with himself, and friendless, the Temperance Society steps in with a good hot breakfast. As the men finish this meal the organ in the chapel begins some familiar and stirring hymn. No one is urged to go in, but nearly all do so. They are in the frame of mind for penitence and humility. The children, the dirty little Arabs of the streets, come in fearlessly. Mr. N. H. Forbes is the superintendent of the school. Rev. Mr. Wiley preaches when the lesson is said. Mr. Wiley also preaches every Sunday night. Exercises of some nature are also held Sunday afternoon.

WEEK-DAY EXERCISES.

The free night school is held on Monday and Friday nights. Mr. Lewis Jenkins is the superintendent. The boys have a military company. Mr. Wiley found that the boys' love of being soldiers, or rather playing soldiers was the only thing that would draw them from the streets. So he got uniforms and guns, and has collected a company of nearly fifty lads, who probably never saw the inside of a church. Mr. Morrell, of the Blues, drills them.

One of the most interesting departments is the sewing school for little girls. This meets twice a week, with Mrs. Creer as superintendent. The girls have their penny banks, and thus save and learn to save money.

Then the institution has the Mothers' club, of which Mrs. Maybee is the president. The mothers of the little Arabs are invited to this, and some one from the Nurses' Training School is always present to give talks of interest to mothers.

The Saturday night entertainments are set up in opposition to the bar-rooms. They are, of course, free, and a first-class entertainment is provided, with plenty of live music and not a bit of the religious service suggested.

The circulating library and free reading-room are excellent and popular features, but of all these none are more useful and popular than the lodging-rooms and lunch counter. Beds are five and ten cents. The best bed in the house is only ten cents a night. Two slices of bread, a big slice of ham and a mug of coffee, equal to a schooner of beer in size, is given for five cents. H. M. Kendall has charge of the lunch department.

Three new features are the wood yard, the dispensary and the board of visitors. The wood yard is for the penniless. If he hasn't any money he can get his sandwich by sawing wood.

The Church Hill Medical Society has agreed, beginning with this week, to have a physician at the institution for one hour every day in the week. A hamperful of medicine was contributed by one physician.

The board of visitors consists of some of the best known ladies of Richmond, who go to the homes of the poor and talk with the mothers, and in every way in their power, by their refinement, advice, financial aid, when it is needed, aid them. Among the ladies who are doing this work, thus extending the influence of the institution to a remarkable degree, are Mrs. Michaels, Mrs. Dibbrell, Mrs. McBain, Miss Doggett and others.

It is real experience just to go through that building, once the United States Hotel, and let Mr. Wiley tell what is being done and how Christianity is reduced to practice.—Times.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., March 11, 1902.

Diplomacy moves slowly, but officials of this government are confident of their ability to eventually compel the sultan of Turkey to punish the brigands who kidnapped Miss Stone, the American missionary, as well as to repay the money paid for her ransom, although the Sultan in the diplomatic correspondence that has been exchanged since Miss Stone's release vigorously denies his responsibility for the acts of the Bulgarian brigands. It will be remembered that the Sultan also denied responsibility for the destruction of American missionaries' property by a mob several years ago. In that case this government compelled him not only to acknowledge responsibility, but to pay for the property destroyed, although European diplomats were certain that our efforts in that line would fail. That is one of the reasons that our officials feel confident of ultimate success in the diplomatic efforts that were started as soon as Miss Stone was free.

Events move rapidly in the business world. The gentleman who bought the old Foundry M. E. church building and ground, paying more than $200,000 cash therefor, desired immediate possession; consequently farewell services had to be held this week, and, as I write, workmen are engaged in tearing the edifice down to make room for the office building that is to be erected on the ground, and the congregation is for the time being without a permanent home. The farewell services were conducted in the morning by Dr. Luther B. Wilson, who devoted his sermon to a review of the history of the church, which is nearly a century old, and in the evening by Bishop E. G. Andrews, of New York, who spoke on the religious history of the last hundred years, and paid an eloquent tribute to the congregation of Foundry M. E. church for its part in that history, and closed by expressing the hope that the same success would follow the congregation in its new home, yet to be chosen, that it had since its organization. An incident connected with the selling of the church building is worthy of note and of commendation, as showing the cordial relations existing between our religious denominations. As soon as it was known that the sale of the property necessitated an immediate vacation of the church building, the board of trustees of Columbian University, which, although not a denominational institution, is closely affiliated with and dominated by the Baptists, held a meeting and unanimously adopted a resolution tendering the use of the largest lecture hall of the university to the Foundry congregation until they secured a new church.

CONFEDERATE VETERAN RE-UNION, DALLAS, TEXAS, APRIL 22-25, 1902.

For the above occasion the Southern Railway begs to announce one cent per mile in each direction for the round trip from all stations on its lines to Dallas, Texas, and return short line mileage. Tickets to be on sale April 18th, 19th, and 20th, with return limit May 2d, except that by depositing ticket with joint agent at Dallas on or before April 30th and payment of 50 cents an extension of return limit until May 15th will be granted. Stop overs will be allowed within transit limit of ticket within S. E. P. A. territory west of and including Chattanooga and Atlanta. The rate from Richmond to Dallas and return will be $28.65, and correspondingly low rates from all other points.

The Southern Railway has short routes through Asheville (Land of the Sky), Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain and Memphis; through Atlanta, Birmingham and Memphis; or Atlanta, Birmingham and Shreveport. The far famed "Land of the Sky" route is without equal, and is the most interested offered.

Don't miss the opportunity of passing through "Land of the Sky"—the Switzerland of America.

A HURRY-UP MEDICINE.—Every housekeeper recognizes the need of effective remedies to be used in emergencies: when something must be done right away. Such a remedy is Perry Davis' Painkiller, for sprains and bruises, for strained muscles and for the aches and pains resulting from blows and falls. Its mission of mercy began sixty years ago. It is used in all countries. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH, RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 18-23, 1902.

For this occasion the Southern Railway announces fare and one-third for the round trip on certificate plan, from all stations on its lines.

VERY LOW RATES TO THE NORTH-WEST MARCH 1ST TO APRIL 30, 1902.

The Norfolk and Western Railway will sell tickets to Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Coast Points at exceeding low rates from all stations. It is possible rates to the West will never be so cheap again; choice of three routes. Write for rates and schedules, say to what point you are going and your nearest station to this line. (Continued from page 10.)

not afford, having the advantage of thorough education, of accomplishment and art, we are all ready at this season to unite with them in praise to God for his goodness.

You shall yet see American labor rising up with a stronger arm and a stouter heart and a swarthier frame. New cities will be built. Commerce on the lakes will take new wings. Where now stand unbroken forests great capitals of business and affluence will rise, and streams that have idled away 6,000 years will be harnessed to ponderous machinery and compelled to toil and sweat like the Chattahoochee and the Merrimac. At one of our great dry-docks we shall yet build the model ocean steamship. It will come together under the chorus of a thousand American hammers. She shall start amid a great national hurrah and move far out at sea as though an island had been unanchored with its forests of masts or as if some one had said in Scripture phrase unto a mountain, "Be thou cast into the sea." The volcano in her heart will sprinkle on the sea a baptism of fire, and as she goes up the channel of St. George among the ship-yards of the old world and among the wheels of Liverpool and Manchester shall be announced the skill and the glory of the American hammer.

Conquests of the Pen.

Now I come to speak of the conquests of the pen. This is the symbol of all intellectuality. The painter's pencil and the sculptor's chisel and the philosopher's laboratory are all brothers to the pen, and therefore this may be used as a symbol of intellectual advancement. There are those disposed to decry everything American. Having seen Melrose and Glastonbury by moonlight, they never behold among us an impressive structure, or, having strolled through the picture galleries of the Louvre and the Luxembourg, they are disgusted with our academies of art. It makes me sick to hear these people who have been to Europe come home talking with a foreign accent and aping foreign customs and talking of moonlight on castles by the sea. I think the biggest fool in the country is the traveled fool.

But, considering the youth of our nation and the fact that comparatively few persons devote themselves entirely to literature, I think we have great reason to thank God for the progress of our American literature. As historians have we not had in the past such men as Bancroft and Prescott, as essayists Irving and Emerson, as jurists Story and Marshall and Kent, as theologians Edwards and Hodge, as poets Pierpont and Sprague and Longfellow and Bryant, as sculptors Powers and Crawford and Palmer, as painters such men as West and Cole and Inman and Kensett? And among the living Americans what galaxies of intellectual splendor and power! Edward Eggleston and Will Carleton and Mark Twain and John Kendrick Bangs and Marion Harland and Margaret Sangster and Stockton and Churchill and Hopkinson Smith and Irving Bacheller and Julia Ward Howe and Amelia Barr and Brander Matthews and Thomas Nelson Page and Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and William Dean Howells and a score of others, some of them fixed stars and some meteors.

As the pen has advanced our colleges and universities and observatories have followed the waving of its plume. Our literature is of two kinds—that on foot and that on the wing. By the former I mean the firm and substantial works which will go down through the centuries. When, on the other hand, I speak of literature on the wing, I mean the newspapers of the land. They fly swiftly and vanish, but leave permanent results upon the public mind. They fall noiselessly as a snowflake, but with the strength of an Alpine glacier. This unparalleled multiplication of intelligence will either make or break us. Every morning and evening our telegraph offices, with huge wire rakes, gather up the news of the nation and of the whole world, and men write to some purpose when they make a pen out of a thunderbolt.

Progress of Education.

It needs great energy and decision and perseverance for a man to be ignorant in this country today. It seems to me that it requires more effort for him to keep out knowledge than to let it in. The mailbags at the smallest post-offices discharge large packages of intelligence for the people. Academies with maps, globes and philosophic apparatus have been taking the places of those institutions where thirty or forty years ago you were put to the torture. Men selected for their qualifications are intrusted with the education of our youth instead of those teachers who formerly with a drover's shout and goad compelled the young generations up the hill of science. Happy childhood! What with broken tops and torn kites and the trial of losing the best marble and stumping your foot against a stone and somebody sticking a pin into you to see whether you will jump and examination day, with four or five wise men looking over their spectacles to see if you can parse the first page in Young's "Night Thoughts" until verbs and conjunctions and participles and prepositions get into a grand riot worthy of the Fourth ward on election day.

How things have marvelously changed! We used to cry because we had to go to school. Now children cry if they cannot go. Many of them can intelligently discuss political topics long before they have seen a ballot box or, teased by some poetic muse, can compose articles for the newspapers. Philosophy and astronomy and chemistry have been so improved that he must be a genius at dullness who knows nothing about them. On one shelf of a poor man's library is more practical knowledge than in the 400,000 volumes of ancient Alexandria, and education is possible for the most indigent, and no legislature or congress for the last fifty years has assembled which has not had in it rail splitters and farmers and drovers or men who have been accustomed to toiling with the hand and the foot.

The pen which Moses dipped in the light of the first morning, and Jeremiah filled with tears, and Ezekiel thrust in visions of fire, and Matthew touched with the blood of a cross, and St. John dipped in the splendors of beatific glory—that pen has wrought marvels for all classes of our people. Today our libraries and colleges and schools and publishing houses and churches celebrate the ever growing conquests of the American pen, and our prospects are all the time brightening.

Fullness of the Harvest.

The grainfields have passed their harvests above the veto of drought and deluge. The freight cars are not large enough to bring down the grain to the seaboard. The canalboats are crowded with breadstuffs. Hark to the rushing of the wheat through the great Chicago corn elevators! Hark to the rolling of the hogheads of the Cincinnati pork packers! Enough to eat, and at low prices; enough to wear, and of home manufacture. If some have and some have not, then may God help those who have to hand over to those who have not!

Since that time the demand for them has steadily increased every year, and we believe that the reason for this increased demand for the goods is due to the fact that all of these Brands have every year exceeded their guaranteed analysis in commercial value. ### THE MIDLAND METHODIST AND LORDS ECCLESIASTICAL.

[The above is the title of an article sent for publication by one of the brethren, a constant reader of the Recorder. The article follows below, but it has seemed best to the editor to say what he has to say in connection with the article, and so it is said now as a parenthesis. In the Recorder of February the 27th, in an editorial entitled "Nothing But News," comment was made upon an editorial in Midland Methodist on the subject of quarterly conference notices. We gave the exact language used by the editor of the Midland, who, by the way, is one of the few who issued the decree forbidding the copying of his appointments by the "guerrilla." In about two weeks Presiding Elder-Editor Burrow came out, and attempted to justify his puerile paragraph. He first showed his lack of knowledge by classing the Recorder as a "guerrilla" newspaper. Not even by his own standard is that correct. The Recorder has had official endorsement from the beginning of its career to the present time. The editor has never requested any conference to endorse it that the request has not been granted. The editor did not, therefore, jump out of the "guerrilla bushes," as Bro. Barrow declares. The Midland editor showed his lack of fairness by giving to his readers an incorrect condensation of the editorial in the Recorder. The tenor of the editorial was expressed in the title, "Nothing But News," and the editorial demonstrated that it was nothing but puerile pomposity to demand that presiding elders' notices should be treated differently from any other news. The article which follows shows that as news these notices belong to all of the papers.]

The editor of the Midland does not give to his readers any of the editorial in the Recorder. This editor is willing for the readers of the Midland to judge him after they have read his article, but not from reading Bro. Burrow's description of it. The truth is that the presiding elders of Bro. Burrow's spirit magnify their office unduly. They imagine that they fill a larger space in the work of the church than they really do. Their endorsement of a paper is not of the supreme importance that they think it to be.

And their demand that the regular rules governing the publication of news be changed in reference to items with which they are temporarily concerned is but another symptom of the swollen condition of their caput.

Since the editorial of the 27th was written, the editor has seen a copy of the Holston Christian Advocate, which is published at Knoxville, and which is evidently the "guerrilla" that was specially referred to by the Midland. The "Holston" is a 16-page paper, the same size as the Recorder, and has Rev. R. N. Price as one of its regular correspondents. It has a reply to the paragraph in the Midland which seems to cut every inch of ground from under Presiding Elder-Editor Burrow. It quotes the paragraph in the Midland, and then says:

"My attention has been called to the above paragraph which appeared in the Midland Methodist of February 5th. In answer I will say that, with the exception of the Cleveland and Chattanooga notices, we either get copy direct or have permission from the presiding elders to use from the Nashville paper. The Holston Christian Advocate does not wish to do any one an injustice, and has not done so in this instance: it would not print the notices at all if its patrons did not request it. Some time since Messrs. Burrow and Shuler declined to allow us to use their announcements, and for more than a year they were left out; but their appointments for the first quarter of the present year were used in an unofficial way and without their names appearing. I have never had a word from any presiding elder (with the above exceptions) forbidding the use of his "round," and any statement to that effect is absolutely false. To the contrary, we have always been treated with the greatest courtesy by the gentlemen composing the Holston Cabinet.

"GEORGE E. COOLEY,
"Managing Editor."

There has been no reply to this in the Midland up to this date. The Midland editor evidently prefers to leave its readers in the dark and to say what he pleases, because he knows that they will not see any answer.

The article following discusses a number of symptoms of the disease which afflicts the Midland editor.—Ed. Recorder.]

THE MIDLAND METHODIST AND LORDS ECCLESIASTICAL.

Mr. Editor,—The attack of the Midland Methodist on "guerrilla papers" for publishing quarterly meeting notices without the consent of the presiding elders shows an utter contempt for the rights of pastors and people. It seems to think that all the rights of the Church belong to the presiding elders, and the pastors and people have no rights. He denies to pastors and people the right of knowing when the quarterly meetings are to be held, unless they receive the notice through a paper selected by the presiding elder. Suppose the elder selects a paper that is standing by the cause of a despotic presiding elder against all the rest of the Church, yet the "Midland" and its abettors demand that preachers and people must show the spirit of the man that kissed Gregory's toe and do his bidding. Alas! all the Gregorys are not yet dead, and the toe-kissers are still in the land.

Why do not these men issue a Papal bull forbidding preachers and people to read any papers, except those published in the interest of the presiding elders?

It is appalling to the Church to think that men of such a spirit should be retained in the eldership, and sit in the Bishop's cabinet and guide the hand of the Bishop in making the appointments. No wonder that a storm of opposition is rising up against the office in every part of our Church! It will be hard to convince preachers and people that such men do not carry their prejudice and personal feeling into the Bishop's cabinet. Preachers and their families are put at the mercy of men who are making war upon them. No man should be allowed to sit in the Bishop's cabinet who is not on good terms with all the preachers. If the Bishops fail to keep such men out of their cabinet, their office will come into disrepute and forfeit the respect of the Church. The Midland Methodist seems to be the mouthpiece of one man. It advocates his views and repeats his very words. When he says "guerrilla," the Midland says "guerrilla."

This and other things indicate that the officials of our Church are drifting toward high-churchism and despotism. Some of them are already claiming that there are three orders in the ministry. This is the foundation stone of high churchism. Some of them seem to think that they are the masters of the Church, when really they are only the servants of the Church. Yet in some cases the servant arrogates the right to dominate his master.

Our Church is groaning under the burden of superlative officialism. The Church is paying more than three hundred thousand dollars annually to Presiding Elders. What a sorry set Methodist preachers must be! The Church pays over three hundred thousand dollars annually to supervise them and keep them in the right track and make them efficient. But to be serious, are not the pastors the peers of the Elders? They are? Some are not equal to the Elders. Many are superior to the Elders. But average up and you will find that the pastor is the peer of the Elder. Then to pay this large sum for supervision is a farce.

Some of these men follow strange methods in controlling their districts. They seek to man their districts with men who have the best gifts for raising money. They seem to think that to be the greatest of all gifts. Hence the men who can gather shekels are advanced before the men who save souls. No wonder our Church has recently shown a decrease in membership!

Yet efforts are made to suppress criticism. Men who have the courage to stand by the rights of the people and the interest of the Church must be intimidated and silenced. Cowards truckle and fawn to men in power. Mendicants bend the knee to those who have favors to bestow. Men will not. Hence, mendicants and cowards are often favored and independent men are made to suffer.

The vigor with which a certain committee pursued Dr. Steele and the tenderness it showed Barbee and Smith opened the eyes of the Church. Such action seemed to say that the man who dared to criticize a Bishop or other officials of the Church would be branded roughly, but grave offenses in other matters would receive great indulgence. The history of the past shows that it is hard to get the General Conference to act on a charge of maladministration against a Bishop. Committees appointed to meet the issue fail to do so, though the rights of the pastors are walked over roughshod. All the candidates for the episcopal office are calling for the election of more Bishops. If the Bishops are confined strictly to episcopal work half the present number can do the work. To elect Bishops and pay them five times as much as the average pastor to do work that pastors can do as well is a waste of the Lord's money and a piece of red tapeism. I do not mean to reflect on the Bishops. Some of them are burdened with work that does not necessarily belong to the office. Every dollar that is paid to the Bishop's fund is at the expense of the other collections.

Besides, this spirit that tries to suppress all criticism of Church officials has brought the Church to grief

In the first place, he was unusually stirred by the fact that the president had spoken to him in such a personal way. Every day since the new president had taken charge of college affairs Edward had been obliged to add to the feeling of respect for him that was now rapidly filling the minds of all the students. The president was inspiring enthusiasm for the best ideals of scholarship. He was becoming noted for several contributions he had made within the year to educational reviews. He was much more than an average teacher. His scholarship and classroom abilities were of a very high order. That this man, at the head of a growing and famous school, should care anything personally for a raw, inexperienced, undeveloped student like himself, struck Edward forcibly and compelled him to give special weight to what the president said about the Christian life.

And still, in spite of all that, Edward was deeply proud of one thing in his life, and that was his morality. As he looked back on the incidents that already marked his college life he found himself complacently patting himself on the back for his moral conduct in the matter of the paper route, the football episode, the theater temptation and his escape from it. And even as he went out from his interview with the president he was praising himself for his decision in regard to the football trips and congratulating himself that he had the sense to know what was good for him, in comparison with some of the other fellows who evidently did not care so long as football flourished. Have a care, Edward Blake! You are unconsciously, but none the less surely, perhaps, growing self righteous, proud that you are not as other men are, not even as these Christian association fellows. You tell the truth and keep pure. You are ready to fight the whole college, if necessary, in defense of your definitions of what is good for a college student. But how much silent contempt and criticism are you beginning to carry around with you for other men who do not live up to your standard! Are you quite sure there is no better, higher plane of life? Have you found the best yet, or is the president right when he says he longs for you to be a Christian rather than a moral man?

The very next day the football manager called together the members of the team and had a long talk with them about the remaining games of the season.

The manager took a gloomy and anxious view of the financial situation.

"Fact is, fellows, we are a good $200 in the hole. The only way out of it that I can see is to make this closing trip. We can contract games with Rowland, Quincy and Lafayette teams. They are anxious to play and offer good terms. Remember, last season we cleared $150 on the last game of the season. That nearly let us out. If we can do as much this time, it will be a good boost. The college is disappointed over the last trip, and it would pay our debts as it feels now. But if you win two out of three games, even if we don't clear ourselves, the money will come easy by contribution."

There was a significant silence as the manager paused. Edward broke in by saying quietly:

"I've done with these long trips away from home. I simply will not go again."

Two other members of the team said the same thing. A storm of indignant protest rose from the rest of the team.

"But see here!" the manager's voice finally rose over the angry clamor, and he was as angry as the others. "See here, Blake! We can't stand a ghost of a show to beat Quincy without you. Besides, how shall we make up the deficit if we don't play these games?"

"I don't know," replied Edward, with his dogged obstinacy. "The one thing I do know is that I will not go on any such trip. If you want to know my reasons, I can give them."

Half the team angrily declared they didn't care to hear any reasons. The manager, however, asked Edward to give them, and he did so, summing up the whole matter just as the president had done.

"But the president advised you to go on last week's trip."

"On condition that I give him a fair and honest account of the result of it, as I did. And there's no question in my mind that he is opposed to these football trips and will say so very soon in one of his chapel talks."

"I don't believe it," said the manager roughly. "The president is an old football player himself. I was looking over his record at Fairfax the other day. He was captain of their team when he was a junior. Besides, the president has no right to say what the team shall do."

"I guess you'll find out that he thinks he has some rights," said Edward, calling to mind certain expressions the president had made.

"The college athletics are under the management of the association. The president has never interfered with it heretofore, and I don't believe he will now. But all this is aside from the question that faces us. It looks to me like a mighty mean, sneaking kind of a thing for a college man to back out of a proposition like the one that faces us now."

The manager looked directly at Edward as he spoke, and Edward lost his temper and boiled over.

"Do you refer to me as 'mean and sneaking'?" he shouted, walking up to the manager and stretching out a brawny hand, the fingers of which were trembling as if with eagerness to take the manager by the throat.

The manager was not an athletic man, and he was a good deal shorter than Edward. But he was a senior, he had no fear of physical injury, and he looked into Edward's inflamed face and said:

"Any man is a mean sneak who hasn't enough college spirit to stand by the college at such a time as this."

For a second Edward hesitated, while his usual slow, deliberate nature was fused to a white heat of wrath. Then he suddenly drew back and said savagely, "You're too small to lick anyway." He looked at the rest of the boys, who had not ventured to interfere either way, and then, turning around slowly, he went out of the room without a word.

When he was gone, the team had a stormy meeting. The members were mad at Edward, and at the same time they were not able to overthrow altogether his reasons for refusing to play. One of the two players who had sided with Edward at first at last yielded and consented to go out on the propos-

"Do you refer to me as 'mean and sneaking'?" he shouted. But the bitterness roused by Edward's refusal was shared by a great many of the students, and it made him sore to see and hear evidences of this bitterness in very many ways that fall and winter.

It was Friday of that week that President Royce gave the college his first plain talk on athletics. Once a week in chapel since his induction into office he had given the students a chapel talk. These talks were beginning to receive good attention, although at first not even the president's general popularity could sweep away a great deal of the irreverence that had become a habit at Hope college during chapel exercises.

Even this morning, after several months of the president's masterful administration of affairs, Edward was impressed as he never had been before with the lack of respect and courtesy shown to the president during the reading of the Scripture, the prayer and the singing. Something in the president's face and manner had reminded him of their talk in the office, and Edward's mind was directed especially to the college exercises.

He was annoyed during the reading by the sight of a dozen members of his own class who were studying not only during the Bible reading, but also during the brief prayer. At least half of the students, it seemed to Edward, were either sitting with their class-books open on their laps or whispering together while the exercises were going forward. It made his blood stir for the first time in chapel, not from any religious reverence he himself had for the chapel service, for he did not have it, but because his admiration and respect for the president had grown so strong that it seemed like a gross insult to him that the students should pay him so little respect at such a time. He could not help wondering if the president himself knew how much studying and irreverence there was during the chapel service and what he would do about it in case he did know its full extent.

But if the student body had paid little attention to the religious exercises of the hour there was no lack of excited interest on the part of every one when the president announced his subject for the chapel talk to be "The Relation of College Athletics to the Rest of the College Development."

He had not definitely put himself on record as he now began to do. And over the faces of many of the students and even the professors a shade of expression deepened as the president went on and made his own position very clear.

"I believe in athletics," he said after defining the term as it was applicable to college, and every football player in college could not help admiring the manly form that towered up on the platform. "During my college life I played football and baseball and enjoyed the games. I believe in encouraging the athletic spirit in Hope college because I believe healthy, vigorous physical life must always go hand in hand with a vigorous mind and spirit."

"After I have said all this heartily and gladly I must insist on a definition of college athletics that puts it in its proper place in a college course. It ought to be evident to every young man and woman in a college like ours that the main business of our lives while here in this institution is to develop the best all around men and women possible, especially on the side of intelligent Christian character. Let me say it frankly, this development could probably go on just as satisfactorily if football were not played here at all. We could easily find and use other forms of physical development that would take its place. But it would be impossible to find anything to take the place of the intelligent, intellectual Christian training that you are here to get. In other words, you are not in this college to play football as the first or even the secondary purpose of a college course. You are here to make of yourselves men and women such as the world needs to make it a better world."

"This definition of the object of a college course puts athletics in a subordinate place, and rightly so. The minute the sport side of a college becomes so emphasized that the intellectual side is neglected or underestimated that minute it is out of proportion. It is assuming more than its share of a student's time and thought. So whenever a game like football in a college becomes a means of money making to carry on athletics it is demoralizing. Or again whenever the game demands too much time from a student's studies or repeatedly breaks into his Sunday rest and worship it is harmful and should be changed and modified if not absolutely dropped."

Here the president summarized the results of the recent trip made by the college team, calling attention to the same points he had made in Edward's presence.

MRS. JAMES CANNON, SR.

(The following letter explains the resolutions which follow it.—Ed.):

Dear Brother Cannon. Last night memorial services to your now sainted mother were held in the church. I wish your father and you could have heard the loving tributes that were paid by Brothers Jesse D. Price, Harry Brewington, and William B. Tilghman. Not having the privilege of a personal acquaintance with her myself, I requested these brethren to speak in behalf of the congregation, after brief remarks by myself. Resolutions were then presented, which the entire congregation adopted by silently rising and standing for a moment with bowed heads.

Now, we wish to request you to publish in the Recorder not only the resolutions, but the tributes of Brothers Tilghman and Brewington, which were written out and read. Do not hesitate because it is your own mother, but say 'hat the request for their publication comes from her old home church at Salisbury.

I soon found your mother's name a household name throughout this whole community. The church has missed her so much. She was indeed the pastor's fellow-laborer in the work of the Gospel. The blessing of such a life! There were many tears unbidden last night as the brethren were speaking. * * *

Faternally yours in Christ,

J. C. C. NEWTON.

RESOLUTIONS AND REMARKS

Mr. Jesse D. Price read the following resolutions, adopted by the membership of Trinity church, which were drafted by a committee composed of Messrs. J. D. Price, William B. Tilghman, Harry L. Brewington, Levin W. Dorman, Geo. W. Phillips, and William A. Crew:

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, in His all-wise providence, has removed from this earth our sister, Mrs. Lydia Cannon, consort of Mr. James Cannon, who with him was one of the founders of this church; therefore be it Resolved, 1. That we bow in humble submission to His will, for though we mourn our great loss, we know that she has gone on to a wider field of action and to higher joys in her Saviour in the life beyond.

Resolved, 2. That we are profoundly thankful for the life she led amongst us. Her strong faith, her readiness to see both her duty and privilege in Christ, her beautiful devotion to her church, her untiring zeal in doing good, giving sympathy and help to all, being always a most welcome visitor in every home, especially in the homes of affliction or adversity; in all these she has been a benediction to us as individuals and as a church.

Resolved, 3. That we will ever cherish the fondest recollections of her good name and sweet fellowship, and strive to imitate her example, in confident hope of seeing her again in the brighter world above.

Resolved, 4. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved husband and family in this dark hour, praying for sustaining grace in their behalf.

Resolved, 5. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Brother James Cannon, and spread upon the minutes of this Church Conference, and sent to the papers for publication.

The following resolutions, prepared by Mrs. Margaret A. Rider, Mrs. Rebecca Dove, Mrs. Levin M. Dashiell, Mrs. W. A. Crew, and Miss Emma Powell, representing the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Trinity church, were read by Mr. Harry L. Brewington:

Whereas, we have heard with profound sorrow of the death of our dear sister, Mrs. Lydia R. Cannon, one of the charter members of our Auxiliary, who, though separated from us the past three years, still continued her membership with us, retained her interest in, and gave her prayers for this part of the Master's work; therefore be it Resolved, 1. That we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will in this bereavement, feeling assured that our loss is her gain, and while we sorrow because of the separation, we give thanks that she has entered into the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

Resolved, 2. That we shall always cherish the most affectionate recollections of our sister's association with us, and her readiness always to promote the welfare of her church and the spread of the Gospel of all nations.

Resolved, 3. That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Society; that a copy be sent to the sorely bereaved husband and family, with an expression of our deepest sympathy; also to our town papers, to the Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate, and the Southern Methodist Recorder.

After the reading of these resolutions brief remarks were made by Mr. Price, Mr. Tilghman, and Mr. Brewington, who spoke feelingly of the deceased, and paid glowing tributes to her lofty character and high ideals.

Mr. Price's remarks were not written out, and cannot be reproduced.

Mr. Tilghman said:

I am at a loss for words to express my sorrow on this occasion or fittingly eulogize the life and character of Sister Lydia R. Cannon.

She, with her husband, Bro. James Cannon, and myself, were among the charter members of Trinity church in its organization in 1867. Our sister was a devoted Christian and a consistent follower of her Lord and Master. She loved her church, and contributed largely of her means and time to its sustenance and advancement. "She was a mother in Israel" in her efforts in behalf of the Sunday school work, in the gathering of the children into its fold, and instructing them in the way of everlasting life; and many of our church members can look back to Mrs. Cannon as their first instructor in the plan of salvation. She was the "Good Samaritan," the "Angel of Mercy," in visiting the poor, the fatherless and widows in their affliction."

Sister Cannon was bereft of her only daughter, Mrs. I. N. Jackson, and eldest son, George, some years ago, which loss seemed only to draw her closer to her Saviour and her Church, and it seemed to be her chief delight to be visiting the membership of the church, contributing to their necessities, and pointing them heavenward.

Sister Cannon has gone to her just reward, leaving behind husband, son, and grandchildren to mourn their loss. She leaves to us a life of noble deeds, which we would do well to emulate and practice, for we read, "If we do these things we shall never fail."

Our sympathies go out in condolence to our brother, James Cannon, Sr., Rev. James Cannon, Jr., and family in their sad bereavement. Let us hope, however, in accordance with the promise given in Scripture (I go to prepare a place for you, * * * that where I am ye shall be also), that in the golden summer of another life we may all gather again in a sweet reunion, where parting is no more.

Mr. Harry L. Brewington then spoke as follows:

The resolutions which have been read in your hearing, and any remarks I might add will be but feeble expressions of the sorrow of this Church because of the demise of Sister Cannon, whose life and character is so well known to all of you. But I cannot let the opportunity pass without saying a word in praise of a life so unselfish, so thoroughly consecrated to the service of the Master, and to the good of humanity.

Her presence was, indeed, a benediction to those who came in contact with her. Whether in the church, the home circle, or in society, she was the same lovable Christian character, never letting the opportunity pass to drop a good word for the cause she espoused with so much love and devotion. Many a wayward one has been brought to realize his condition and seek a better life through the earnest pleadings of this good woman; and many a young Christian has been cheered and comforted by the blessed words which fell from her lips. The seed sown by a life and example so precious have ripened into a harvest of redeemed souls, who in the last day will rise up to call her blessed.

Sister Cannon spent the larger part of her life in our midst, and from the very organization of Trinity church, in 1867, until she removed three years ago to Blackstone, Va., was one of the most ardent members of this church. No work was too hard for her to do that would advance the interests of the Church she loved so tenderly. In the Sunday school she labored for the training of the young mind and heart, and was loved by every scholar. Not a few of the younger members of Trinity church can look back and recall the noble Christian character of Sister Cannon, and the effect it had upon their own lives, in stimulating them to a nobler and higher life. To the sick and afflicted she ministered with untiring devotion; in the home where gloom had entered she was the messenger to shed comfort and consolation. In the home of poverty and distress her hand was open to relieve. Truly it can be said that a great one has fallen in Israel!

But her passing from our midst is only to enter upon that new life beyond, whose endless happiness she sought during the long years of pilgrimage here. She has gone to join those older members of Trinity church—Hugh Jackson, Sallie Fish, Isaac Jackson, William Gordy, Henry Brewington, and others who preceded her—in that Eternal City, whose habitation is made glorious by the presence of God and the holy angels.

The noble example left by this saintly woman should be an inspiration to all of us, that we, like her, may be able to say at the last moment, "It is well!"

The fragrance of that life will ever remain a pleasant memory to those who knew her intimately, and will for years to come prove a blessed heritage to the family she has left.

Truly, it can be said of her:

"None knew her but to love her,
None named her but to praise."

The funeral services were held at the Institute chapel at Blackstone. They were conducted by Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, a former pastor and intimate family friend, assisted by Revs. G. F. Greene and J. B. DeBerry. The interment was in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, in the lot of her only surviving child, Rev. James Cannon, Jr. Rev. John T. Bosman, another old pastor, assisted Mr. Lipscomb in the services there.

NOT "A SHORN SAMSON."

Dear Bro. Cannon:—I enclose you a copy of a letter I have written to Dr. Lafferty on the work of the Church last year. Please give it place.

Dear Dr. Lafferty:—In an editorial that appeared in the Advocate of March 13th, I believe a great injustice was done to the ministers and members of our Church in the Virginia Conference. It is entitled "A Shorn Samson." I do not believe the injustice was intended, but still the effects will be the same, and, with a view of correcting this injustice, I write this open letter.

The trend of the editorial is that with our large equipment the work done, as measured by certain results, is such "that we cannot give an account to God, our consciences, and the Christian public without a shudder of shame," and this in comparison to a certain Conference, I wish you had given the name, and to the former days of Methodism.

In the first place the figures are not correct. You speak of the number of conversions in a "Southern Conference" while you mention only the net increase in ours. Every pastor knows that if he gets sixty per cent. of the conversions into his Church he is doing well; for many go to other Churches, many move out of the community, and some do not join any Church. When a membership reaches over ninety thousand the net increase is small, because the loss by death and otherwise is so great. Now what are the figures? The gains on profession of faith were 4,468, an average of nearly 500 for each district in the Conference. The net increase on profession is 1,641. What you put down as 174 should be, you will notice, 1,174, the net increase for the year 1901 over 1900. The reports from two districts in "a Southern Conference" are phenomenal, the others are but little than were reported in the Virginia Conference last year. The Norfolk District reported 738 received on profession, Richmond 644, Rappahannock 538.

We wish they had numbered thousands in every district, but that they do not does not argue that the Church or the preachers are backslidden or shorn of strength. It is as much our duty to feed the flock as to work to bring in new members, for salvation is not merely conversion, that is the first step, the soul must be built up in the faith and nourished. Too many are prone to make the mistake of thinking that the work of the ministry is only to persuade men to be converted, and then pay little attention to them afterward; hence, many backsliders and many lean souls within the pale of the Church. We are commanded "to feed the flock of God." Is it nothing to feed over ninety thousand souls on the meat of the Word?

I have some knowledge of the past, from what I have read and heard, and I am ready to say that never has the work of Christ been more faithfully done than at this time, nor by men more fully consecrated to their work than the men of to-day. And I believe if the work of "the fathers" were fully known the work of the present day would compare favorably with it. I say this with the full consciousness that every true man longs for a deeper spiritual life and a greater usefulness in the service of our Lord, but I do not believe that the way to bring this about is to disparage the good already done.

Our large property interests are the accumulations of over a hundred years. Our contributions of over a half million argues a deep interest on the part of both preachers and people in the Church and in her great work. I believe it is an evidence of faith shown by works. These are some results, but there is a great danger in measuring the faithfulness of a man by visible results. There have been cases in which men made results by counting too rapidly, and this to the great detriment of the Church. The faithful man will try to do his full duty and have faith enough to leave the results with God. The human will is free, and if men will not hear we cannot make them. Some of our most learned and consecrated men number few conversions in a long life-time, and yet their ministry has been a benediction to the Church. The Master himself preached and few followed Him; they "would not come unto Him that they might have life." No, sir, our Conference is not a "Shorn Samson" nor are the faithful ministers and laymen ashamed to give an account; many have tried to do their best, and yet they regret that their best is not larger both in work and in result.

Yours truly,

W. ASBURY CHRISTIAN.

TROUBLE IN VIRGINIA W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. of every State has at least two kinds of society—those of the older women, commonly called "W's," and those of young women and men, called "Y's." By the constitutions of the National Union and that of the State of Virginia the "Y" delegates to the Annual Convention have equal rights with the "W's." The organization and special supervision of the "Y's" is in the hands of a "Y" Secretary, annually elected by the Convention. In Virginia the "W's" number about 1,400, and the "Y's" almost 1,000 young women and two-thirds as many young men.

At the Annual Convention of 1901 the beloved Secretary, who has in six years quadrupled the strength of the "Y's" of the State, was denied renomination by the Executive Committee, largely of "W's," and the "Y" delegates were not allowed to nominate a Secretary with whom they were willing to work. A motion made and seconded by them to refuse the nomination was ruled out of order by the State President. Although they protested in a body against the nominee of the Executive Committee, it availed them nothing except abuse from the older branch, and made them the victims of joint executive discourtesy. "Y" delegates addressing the chair in perfectly proper manner and time were denied recognition by her in favor of "W's" who rose later and who had already spoken to the question under discussion. Only the loyalty to the State and National Union of the ex-Secretary, who was, and still is, the leading spirit of the majority, kept the "Y" delegates from leaving the Convention.

Recently delegates from the "Y's" of the State were invited to meet in conference in Petersburg. There is nothing in the letter or spirit of either National or State Constitution which forbids such a meeting if the young women provide for it without making any tax upon the State treasury, as they did in this case.

The accompanying statements need little explanation. Number one expresses the wishes of the Petersburg Conference. It is a commentary upon the present conduct of affairs, that nearly half the membership of the State W. C. T. U. is forced to petition the majority for its constitutional rights.

M. C. FAVILLE,

Chairman Committee of Four.

The following papers give the facts:
Norfolk, Va., Feb. 24, 1902.

My Dear Sister:—Pursuant to a call sent from the Jennie Casseday and Guyer Y's of Petersburg, to every Y Union in the State of Virginia, delegates met in Market Street M. E. church, Petersburg, February 20th, to consider the action of the Virginia State Convention W. C. T. U. (1901) regarding the Y branch in the State.

Many Y Unions could not send delegates, because they had no available funds, but a large majority wrote the committee assurances of their support of the actions of the Conference.

As the members present were sure that the action of the W. C. T. U. delegates to the Convention of 1901 was not understood by a large proportion of the membership at home, a statement of the case was drafted and ordered sent to every Union in the State. The statement is accompanied by three requests which the Y's of the State will make of the Convention of 1902.

The work of presenting the statement of the wishes of the Conference to the W. C. T. U. membership, and of putting the signatures to the requests in a form of a petition, to be presented to the Convention of "1902," was put in charge of a committee of four.

In considering the request of the Y's, it must be remembered that the Y dues for last year were more than $200, over $125 of which remained in the State Treasury, also that after all bills were paid, a balance of more than $300 (the largest in its history) remained to the credit of the State. This year for the first time the State President is paid a salary, $100. The motion to pay the salary came from a Y, and the Y's of the State are glad it is paid; the fact is here pointed out as evidence that the State Treasury is in an unusually healthy condition.

A copy of the statement is sent by the Committee of Four to you and to one other member of your Union. We ask you to bring it up for consideration at the next meeting of your Union, and to return it to us with the signatures of all those who think the requests we make should be granted by the Convention of 1902. Please return with your opinion, whether favorable or otherwise, to the chairman of the undersigned committee:

MRS. M. C. FAVILLE,

Anna Gordon Y, Norfolk, Chairman;

MISS JENNIE WATTS,

Portsmouth Y, Portsmouth;

MRS. JONES,

Jennie Casseday Y, Petersburg;

MRS. W. H. JENKS,

Hannon Y, Richmond.

To the W. C. T. U. of Virginia in Convention assembled:

At the 1901 Convention of the W. C. T. U. of Virginia, a Y Secretary was elected by the "W's" present, in opposition to the outspoken protest of a large majority of the "Y" delegates present, and the State President repeatedly refused to recognize Y delegates.

No explanation was given, except that "it was the will of the Executive." It was charged that the ex-Secretary had exceeded her allowance for annual expenses, although she has always paid the excess over her allowance out of her own purse. Although she had been too expensive a Secretary her successor received an allowance of $75 per year for expenses, and the general officers, at a meeting immediately after the adjournment of the Convention, granted her traveling expenses to Fort Worth, something never granted a "Y" Secretary before.

We make the following requests of you:

1. That the paragraph on p. 17, State Minutes for 1901, be corrected in the Minutes for next year, as the typewriter referred to was Mrs. Jobson's private property, and she has the dealer's receipts for money paid him.

2. That "Y" delegates have equal privileges with the "W's" upon the floor of the Convention, proportionate representation in the Executive and among the general officers, and proportionate representation upon all committees appointed, and have a whole day immediately preceding the Convention for a "Y" conference.

3. That the by-laws be so changed at this Convention as to allow the election of the "Y" Secretary and L. T. L. Secretary by ballot in open convention.

We ask for these reforms because we believe, that unless they are righted, the wrongs pointed out will result in injury to our work and to the Christian character of individual members.

STORIES OF JACKSON.

In his "Memories of a Hundred Years," now being published in The Outlook, Dr. Edward Everett Hale (who, by the way, reaches his eightieth year on April 3d), recounts some of the tales which were circulated in Boston in derision of the rough-and-ready President. He says:

I remember very well the anecdote in which Mrs. Jackson was supposed to give an account of a lung fever of which, I think, she died. It was declared and believed in Northern circles that she said, "The General kicked the kiverlit off, and I kotched cold." I should not tell the story but to record the resentment of a true lady, a relative of my . . . who had seen all the elegancies of the best Courts of Europe, and who protested to me that Mrs. Jackson was a lady through and through, in breeding as in daily manners. My friend quoted the anecdote which I have told, only as illustration of the bitterness of partisanship at that time. On the other hand, if any story can be received at the distance of one person from the spot of which the story is told, the story which I will now record is true: The daughter of a Massachusetts Senator told me that in her younger life she went with her father to one of the regular dinners at the White House. General Jackson himself took her out to the dinner table. There was some talk about the light of the table, and the General said to her, "The chanticler does not burn well." She was so determined that she should not misunderstand him that she pretended not to hear him and asked him what he said. To which his distinct reply was, "The chanticler does not burn well."

NOT A MINUTE TO LOSE, if you are wet and feel chilled to the bone, after a tramp through the storm. Get into dry clothes at once and warm your insides with a teaspoonful of Perry Davis' Painkiller, in hot water, with a little sugar. Thus you will avoid a cold, and, possibly, a long sickness. The precaution is worth while. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

LESSON I, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 6.

Text of the Lesson. Acts ix, 1-20.
Memory Verses. 3-5—Golden Text,
Acts iii, 19—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

1, 2. Saul yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord.

What an evil breath he had! The word translated "breathing out" is used only this once and means to breathe in or out, to breathe, to live. His very life was to hate Christ and Christians, and yet the time came when he could truly say, "For me to live is Christ" (Phil. i, 21). Our first introduction to him is in chapters vii, 58; viii, 1, 3, in connection with the death of Stephen and the persecution following, which at this time was still going on. Saul's own account of his life in those days is found in chapters xxii, 3, 4; xxvi, 9-11; Gal. i, 13, 14, but in Eph. ii, 1-3, he speaks of it all as being under the prince of the power of the air.

3, 4. Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

Thus spake Jesus of Nazareth to him in the Hebrew language (xxvi, 14) and arrested him in his mad career, for God had determined concerning him, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further" (Job xxxviii, 11). Whoever touches a Christian touches Christ Himself, but not even the devil can go one step beyond God's permission (Job i, 10; Dan. iv, 35; Zech. ii, 8). Though it was midday, this light from heaven was above the brightness of the sun, and Saul could not see for the glory of that light (xxvi, 13; xxii, 11).

5, 6. The Lord said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest.

He recognizes a superior and asks, "Who art Thou, Lord?" The answer fills him with trembling and astonishment, for Jesus of Nazareth is actually speaking to him. Seeing Him to be indeed the Christ, the Messiah, whom the prophets had foretold, he at once acknowledges Him as Lord and meekly asks what he is now to do. Thus suddenly shall Israel as a nation be surprised some day, and, looking upon Him whom they pierced, they shall be filled with true penitence and, accepting Him as their long expected Messiah, shall say: "Lo, this is our God. We have waited for Him, and He will save us" (Zech. xii, 10; Isa. xxv, 9). Saul's conversion was a pattern or type of the conversion of the nation (I Tim. i, 16).

7-9. He was three days without sight and neither did eat nor drink.

The men who were with him fell to the earth, seeing the light and being afraid. They also heard the voice of some one speaking, but did not hear the words, for those were for Saul only. Compare xxii, 9; xxvi, 14. It was somewhat like the experience of Daniel and of our Lord as recorded in Dan. x, 7; John xii, 28, 29. That Saul really saw Jesus is evident from verse 17 and I Cor. xv, 8. What Jesus said to Saul as He commanded him to rise and stand upon his feet is fully stated in Paul's testimony before Agrippa in xxvi, 16-18. Consider him three days blind and fasting, the world shut out, the body mortified, dying to self, God dealing with his soul. It is the period of death preceding resurrection (Gen. xxii, 4; xlii, 17; Jonah ii, 17; Hos. vi, 2; John ii, 19; Rev. xi, 11).

10-12. Inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul of Tarsus, for, behold, he prayer.

Thus said the Lord to Ananias, a devout disciple and one who had a good report of all the Jews at Damascus (xxii, 12). He, like Philip in a previous lesson, is prompt and obedient, one on whom the Lord could rely to do His bidding. His reply reminds us of Samuel and Isaiah (I Sam. iii, 4, 6, 8, 10; Isa. vi, 8). These three days find Saul and his Lord in intimate communion. Saul talks with the Lord, and the Lord in vision reveals Himself more fully to Saul. From Jesus Christ by revelation he received the gospel and from Him also all his future instruction (Gal. i, 11, 12, 15, 16).

13-16. He is a chosen vessel unto me to bear my name.

Ananias hesitates just a little as he thinks of Saul's reputation and authority and his madness against Christians. The Lord graciously bears with Ananias in his objections, but repeats His command to go and assures him that Saul is to be His special messenger to the gentiles. One would think that the Lord's first assurance to Ananias that the persecutor was praying would have been sufficient encouragement, but we are so slow to expect wonders from Him whose name is Wonderful. Saul is not only chosen to bear the name of Christ, but also to suffer, for faithfulness to Christ and suffering for His sake are inseparably connected in this present evil age, while the whole world lieth in the wicked one (Gal. i, 4; I John v, 19, R. V.). See also John xv, 18, 19; xvi, 33; Phil. i, 29; II Tim. ii, 12; iii, 12, but be encouraged by Rom. viii, 18; I Cor. x, 13.

17-20. Receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

Thus said Ananias to Saul as, having found him just where the Lord said he would, he put his hands upon him and told of the Lord's commission. He received sight, both natural and spiritual, confessed Christ in baptism, took food for the body and was strengthened and immediately preached in the synagogues that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of God. Old things are passed away, all things are become new, the Spirit has clothed Himself with Saul (Judg. vi, 34, R. V., margin) and now henceforth he does but one thing, knows but one Master, and for Him is ready to lay down his life.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 6, "Growing in Grace"—Text,
II Pet. iii, 17, 18; I Pet. ii, 1, 2; Eph. iv, 12-15.

A dwarfed or deformed body is a pitiful sight. It speaks so plainly of pain, it tells so much of crushed hopes, of checked activities and privations, that it awakens sympathy even if it cannot command help.

How much more pitiable is a pinched soul! Some one asked John B. Gough what was the most pathetic sight he ever saw. In his temperance work he had seen the deep misery of great cities. Without hesitation he answered, "An old face on a little child." It is not the years which make age so much as it is experience. We grow old from hardships and hopeless miseries. Soul pain is hardest to bear and breaks the strength more than work and privation of food.

We ought to be strong. We need to be good. We wish to be beautiful. Ugliness ought to be conquered. We must grow. How shall that growth be—for the better, purer, sweeter, or for the worse?

Physical strength cannot always be had as we would wish. Some inherit traits which can never be changed

One constitutionally small of stature may earnestly desire to be tall, but wishing is hopeless in such a case. The best that can be done is to develop all the strength possible in the body one has and exhibit a great soul's traits until the little body is forgotten or, if remembered at all, is ennobled and honored as the home of a noble man or a gentle woman.

Soul growth is more fully under our control than bodily development. Inherited traits are to be found in all persons, to be sure, in the spirit nature as well as in physical things, but need not prevent our growth. Too many never set before themselves seriously the task of becoming in the inner nature the best possible kind of being. Yet that is the real work of life. All things that come to us are given for this purpose. God has the deepest interest in having us grow into the fairest, finest type of creaturehood. All our highest prospects are grounded here. Our goal is the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

To reach this end we must repress, cut off and deny ourselves in certain things, enlarge, develop and grow in certain other respects. Whatever our inclinations to malice, envy, jealousy, enmities, evil speaking and evil thinking, no degree of nobleness can be had from their cultivation. They must be overcome and cast out from us resolutely, continuously, until they have no place in us. Have you done this yet? There must be no shamming in the matter, no posing, no playing at or acting the part. All must be sincere and deadly earnest; rather call it living earnest. "The sincere milk of the word" must be used and relished to nourish this life. We must constantly be aware of the error of the wicked, must see the wrong course and shun it persistently, or we shall fall from our steadiness. And if we waver and grow dizzy we invite disaster.

We must know more, increasingly—not more of the evil, but of the good. Practice brings proficiency. We must use our knowledge. We must do the good, and we shall become efficient in it and graceful in the doing. "Grow in grace and knowledge of Jesus Christ."

Easiness of Spirit.

The fully sanctified have an easiness of manner and spirit that they never would have had but for the operation of the Holy Spirit on their hearts. True easiness of spirit is not the work of culture, but the work of the grace of God. It is quietness of soul, but it is that quietness of soul that is wrought only by the grace of God. The grace of God checks our natural haste, frees us from the activities of nature and curbs our impulsive spirits, so as to keep us quiet and make us easy in our manners and ways even in time of excitement. Let us seek to get this easiness of spirit. This easiness of spirit will not rob us of zeal and earnestness in our religious work. It will rather make us more in earnest. There is what may be called an easy earnestness of soul which frees us from awkwardness in our work. This easiness of spirit should be seen in our homes, in the church, in company, in our business life and everywhere else.—Christian Standard.

Cannot Reap the Benefits.

We well know in what spirit some affect to ignore and even to decry the value of the church. If a person never crosses the threshold of the house of God, yet there is a reflex influence which is of untold value to the individual. He cannot reap the entire benefits even if he performs the moral and spiritual obligations resting upon him.—Universalist.

In Enduring Unity.

Between the mortal and immortal worlds no gulf is fixed. Above all and binding all in enduring unity is the community of aim and spirit which keeps those who love and are loyal hand in hand and foot in foot; though seas divide, there hangs between the impenetrable veil of death.—Christian Union.

He Keeps Me.

There's One—and there's none other—
That cheers me in the way;
'Tis He, my elder Brother,
That keeps me day by day.

This Jesus in the manger,
This Christ upon the sea,
He keeps His own from danger
And makes them truly free!

This God who rules in kindness,
We bask within His love;
He heals us of our blindness
And lifts our souls above.

Coming as a Little Child.

Let us pray that love shall come as a little child to our households.—Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

The Worth of Ideals.

Ideals rule the world. Life without an ideal may not be immoral, but it is sadly unmoral.—Rev. Dr. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, New York.

The Grandest Inspiration.

The grandest inspiration that comes to us is the inspiration to be derived from the life of Christ.—Rev. E. Reifsnider, Universalist, Danvers, Mass.

God and the Universe.

God's throne is in heaven. The earth is his footstool. The stars are jets in the chandelier of his cathedral.—Rev. H. G. Henderson, Methodist, St. Louis.

God's Revelation of Himself.

As we see the sun by means of the sun's own light, so we know God by the revelation which he makes of himself.—Rev. Dr. W. S. Fulton, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

Unwilling to Pay the Price.

What a lot of people there are who don't take care of their souls because they don't want to pay the price!—Commander Booth-Tucker of the Salvation Army.

Love Begets Love.

Not law, but love, begets love. No man can love the lawgiver except as the lawgiver becomes known as friend, father, savior.—Rev. L. A. Crandall, Baptist, Chicago.

Change of Mind and Heart.

Repentance must be a change of mind as well as of heart, and if it is to do any good it must be as deep as the mind and the soul.—Rev. Dr. Frederick Burgess, Episcopal Bishop of Long Island.

The Right Use of Money.

No lesson is more needed today than such a use of our money as will strengthen and develop our souls and bring life and hope and love to all.—Rev. Alonzo J. Turtle, Lutheran, Allegheny City, Pa.

Man Working With God.

God gives into man's hands a seed, and man turns it into a sheaf. To the husbandman he gives the root, and man turns it into a clustering vine.—Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Permeates the Whole Being.

God's life in the Christian is not something that merely lies along the circumference of the Christian life, but something which is imbedded in it, alive through it and one with it.—Rev. Dr. Charles Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York.

Changelessness of Christ.

Man's belief in Christ grows. No man of sixty sees the same Christ as he did at sixteen. But it is the man who changes. The changelessness of Christ is a most precious reality.—Rev. Dr. Henry C. Minton, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Christ the Sinner's Friend.

Christ is the sinner's friend, even, and especially of those whom we usually despise and condemn. Woe unto us if we condemn those whom Christ condemns not! It is better to be such a sinner than such a saint.—Rev. E. T. Coyner, Lutheran, St. Louis.

How We Should Live.

Christ's gospel teaches us how we should live, but if it went no further than this it would be an imperfect gospel. When sorrow, sickness and death come to us, we need the comfort of the hope of a life hereafter.—Rev. Dr. Patton, Presbyterian, President Princeton (N. J.) University.

The Perfection of Religion.

Religion is the source of inspiration out of which have come every adornment and excellence of human life. It is the perennial fountain from which flow the propelling, uplifting and ennobling forces and influences which have ever been at work in human history.—Rabbi Samuel Sale, St. Louis.

The True End of Law.

The true end of all law is to further God's aim in behalf of human advancement. The law abiding man is essentially the one who seeks the voice of truth in the law and obeys it because it is right. He curbs his own passions, represses his own evils, guides his positive conduct and shapes his life in obedience to law.—Rev. S. E. Eby, Episcopalian, St. Louis.

Regeneration, Not Patchwork.

We belong to a race of patches. Much of civilization is patchwork. Reformations that do not begin in regenerations are only patches of new cloth on the old life. Jesus declared against the unwisdom of all such endeavors. "Ye must be born again." Commence to live over. The keynote of the Bible is "regeneration."—Dr. J. M. Thorburn, Jr., Methodist, Allegheny City, Pa.

The Price of Salvation.

No, salvation is not free. I am very far from admitting the commercial theory of Christ's atonement, but before he could plead for his brethren he had to go through a life of struggle, suffering, anguish, death itself! Salvation must be worked for, struggled for, agonized for, if necessary died for. What, then, can be said about it? This: The price that must be paid for it is not beyond any one's comprehension. Salvation, then, may be had by every one, but only for the highest price that each can pay.—Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Do not dare to live without some clear intention toward which your living shall be bent. Mean to be something with all your might.—Phillips Brooks.

Pain-Balm Stops the Tickling, and quickly allays inflammation in the throat.

So act that your principle of action would bear to be made a law for the whole world.—Kant.

What a man can do best, that is the task given to him by God. What his neighbors most want, that is the path to which he should direct his talents. No scorn is to be tolerated toward those every-day duties which God has given to us.

SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER.

A Weekly newspaper devoted to the spread of Scriptural holiness.

"First pure, then peaceable."
"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

"Abstain from every form of evil, and the very God of peace sanctify you wholly."

THE MIDLAND METHODIST.

through the Publishing House. The House brings us reproach, but no dividends. The Church feels that there is something wrong. But the facts are kept from the Church. And a certain element tries to suppress criticism. What is the trouble? Is it mismanagement? The truth ought to be known. Has human covetousness consumed the substance of the superannuated and the substance of the widows and orphans of deceased preachers? It should be rooted up. Four years ago the Church was surprised when men paid from the proceeds of the House claimed that they could not live on twenty-five hundred dollars a year. Imagine a Methodist preacher standing before Asbury and stating that he could not live on that sum. That old apostle would have faintest, saying, "Now lettest Thy servant depart in peace." A Methodist preacher that cannot live on twenty-five hundred dollars a year either lacks capacity or he sets an example of extravagance that he should not.

Yet the salaries of these men were increased at the expense of our superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers. These worthy and needy claimants upon the Church were receiving but a pittance. And a part of this pittance was taken from them that the salaries of certain men might be increased from twenty-five hundred to three thousand dollars. For the House ceased paying dividends after this increase of salaries. If this is not consuming the substance of widows' houses what is it?

The colportage system also is run at the expense of the superannuated preachers and at the expense of the widows and orphans of deceased preachers. The House makes large discounts to Conference colporteurs, enough to pay a handsome dividend to the Conference claimants. The House and the claimants lose these amounts and the Church gets no colportage. I do not believe that the present system of colportage has increased materially the sales of the House. The discounts given have absorbed the increase brought by the colportage system many times over.

The Church needs a new law on this subject. The Book Agents should not be allowed to nominate the Conference colporteurs. As the law now is the agents can nominate editors, and thus influence the papers on the question of the management of the House, or they can nominate men who are giving their whole time to something else and collecting the discounts given by the House, while they are giving the Church no colportage. Put a clause in the Discipline forbidding the appointment of any man to the office of colporteur who will not give it his whole time.

The General Conference should ascertain how much money the House has paid out for advertisements and to whom paid. Also how much has been paid to contributors to publications and to whom paid. The Church has some curiosity to know if we have any paid mourners, who fill the air with their sad tones every time a Church official is criticised. Do away with Presiding Elders. They are becoming arrogant and consuming the substance of the Church. The thing of supervising is overdone. It is plain that the man who kissed Gregory's toe did not believe in a "guerrilla," as he had become one before consenting to his own degradation. OBSERVER.

REV. R. N. PRICE ON "GUERRILLAS."

The editor greatly regrets that Bro Price will not be a member of the coming General Conference. He was a member of the last two General Conferences, and stood up bravely for the right. He is now engaged in writing the history of the Holston Conference, and writes also for papers. The editor hopes to have something from him for the Recorder.

The following in the Holston Advocate is in reference to the incident referred to in another column:

"If I were publisher of an official church paper, I should prefer that independent papers should not be run; but, at the same time, I would not forget that we live in America, and that the Constitution secures to every man the right of pursuing life, liberty and happiness, without molestation; that the publication of a religious newspaper is an honest, useful calling, and no man should be censured for engaging in it. Indeed, I am inclined to the opinion that the Church ought to have no official papers. An editor of an official paper cannot be free to follow his convictions of truth. If all our papers were independent, it might be better for the cause of truth. Such papers might not always be orthodox, and they might not always please the authorities; but, in the long run, truth would be promoted by untrammelled discussion. Public sentiment and self-interest would be sufficiently powerful restraints upon publishers. These things would regulate themselves—water must be agitated to be pure. I am not afraid of free speech. I do not dread heresy so much as a stupid orthodoxy that opens its mouth and swallows everything you choose to ram down its throat. If I were publisher of a Church paper I would not apply the term "guerrilla" to independent papers. This course is not calculated to promote the peace of the Church, and Holston Conference don't like a paper which is not doing that—you know, or, at least, I know."

Religious News.

A very interesting and successful religious revival has been in progress for some days at Washington Street Methodist Episcopal church. The pastor, Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, is ably assisted in the conduct of the meetings by Rev. Dr. Henry E. Johnson, of Laurel Street church, Richmond. On last Sunday there were twenty professions of faith among the young people. Dr. Johnson will remain here during the week, and his preaching is producing profound effect.—Dispatch.

The beautiful spring weather of yesterday brought out a large attendance at the Methodist ministers' meeting at 10:30 A. M., twenty-five pastors being present. The meeting was called to order by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, and after devotional exercises, the regular order of business was taken up.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian, appointed at the last meeting to meet with committee of pastors from the Protestant denominations and arrange for a general meeting having for its purpose the organization of a union ministers' association, reported that he had met with their committees in joint session, and there was a unity of feeling in the matter, and they had decided on Monday, April 7th, at noon, as the time for holding this meeting, and the lecture room of the Epworth church as the place. It is desired, he said, that all the ministers of Protestant churches in Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley and vicinity, be present at that time. The report was received and ordered to be spread on the minutes of the meeting.

Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., reported that the revival in progress at Epworth church was one of deep spiritual power. Rev. E. T. Dadmum has been preaching.

Dr. Smith conducted a meeting in the Sunday school Sunday morning.

At Denby's church, Norfolk county, Rev. W. R. Crowder preached morning and afternoon to very large congregations. The Sunday school is growing in interest.

Rev. J. B. Merritt reported a busy week at the Seamen's Bethel, and all of the services well attended.

Huntersville—Rev. H. C. Cheatham preached morning and night. He reported the Sunday school in a most encouraging condition.

Rev. C. L. Bane attended the Sunday school exercises at Cumberland Street church, and preached morning and night to large congregations.

At Port Norfolk, Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had a good congregation to hear him at the morning service, and a very large one at night. There were three requests for prayer. He contemplates beginning a protracted meeting soon.

Wright Memorial—Rev. George H. McFaden reported that there were 380 names on the Sunday school roll, and of that number 287 were present Sunday morning. He preached morning and night to large congregations. He attended the Junior Epworth League in the afternoon.

Two new scholars were received in the Sunday school at Lambert's Point.

The pastor, the Rev. C. H. McGhee, preached morning and night.

Rev. D. J. Traynham, of Norfolk circuit, preached three times Sunday—at Olive Branch in the morning, Indiana in the afternoon, and at Deep Creek at night. He reported all of these churches in an improved spiritual condition.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached at Epworth church Sunday morning, and at Centenary at night. He reported that he had closed the canvass on the church debt, and that there was $35,000 in sight, and that the full returns will be reported next Sunday.

There were 300 scholars present at the Sunday school at Queen Street church Sunday morning. The pastor preached to large and deeply interested congregations morning and night.

Rev. W. R. Proctor conducted the usual services at McKendree, and received one new member by certificate.

Rev. George Wesley Jones reported that large congregations had attended the revival services at Trinity Methodist church. Rev. Graham H. Lambeth had been preaching nightly.

Central—Rev. W. T. Green reported several new scholars received in the Sunday school. He preached morning and night, and in the afternoon at Cottage Place.

Rev. Paul Bradley reported a fine Sunday at Churchland, and the addition of several new scholars. The attendance on the regular church services is steadily on the increase.

At Monumental, Rev. E. H. Rawlings preached morning and night, and spoke at the Portsmouth Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon.

Owens' Memorial—The Rev. Ernest Christian reported a steady increase in the congregations and a good spiritual feeling among the church membership. The services Sunday were interesting and profitable.—Virginian-Pilot.

METHODIST PREACHERS' MEETING.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, president, called the Methodist preachers' meeting to order this morning, and Rev. C. F. Comer, of Ettrick, led in the opening prayer.

The busy West Street pastor, Rev. L. W. Guyer, reported 97 per cent. in Sunday school attendance, a good collection in the same, one person uniting with the church and one profession of faith. As usual, large congregations greeted the pastor at the two services.

Three new Sunday school scholars and a good collection for missions was reported from Ettrick by the pastor, Rev. C. F. Comer.

Rev. S. C. Hatcher, reporting for his charge—Market Street—had only good things to say. Rev. J. A. Duncan, on a visit to the city, preached for him Sunday morning. The usual services held, and things moved on smoothly and pleasantly.

A good day at Blandford was reported by the pastor. Good congregations and Sunday school growing. The outlook encouraging for the Lord's work.

A fine Sunday school, a good collection, and three new Sunday school scholars enrolled was what the pastor, Rev. J. A. Thomas, said of Wesley.

The revival services in progress at High Street has filled the heart and hand of the pastor, Rev. G. E. Booker, for some time. About seven conversions during the week were reported, and five received into the church membership. Fine attendance on these special services, which will continue the present week.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, pastor of Washington Street church, reported about twenty conversions among the young people so far in the special services now in progress. Rev. Dr. H. E. Johnson, of Richmond, is doing the preaching in these services, and his discourses have been very strong, clear, and searching. The meetings will continue this week.

These reports from the pastors were sandwiched with interesting and helpful thoughts, hints, etc., from some of our brethren touching the reading of books, etc. Pleasantry and humor were not lacking to give spice to our meeting. Swapping ideas is like bartering in merchandise—good for all concerned—and preachers find contact with each other mutually helpful.—Petersburg Progress.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The next Virginia Conference Epworth League gathering will be held in the city of Danville June 12-15, beginning Thursday night and closing Sunday night.

The Conference President recently visited Danville and met with the city union, and also with the pastors and Presiding Elder. After thorough discussion it was unanimously decided that the above date was the best under the circumstances.

It was advised that our own home talent be used as far as possible in the preparation of our program, and our Executive Committee will be pleased to have suggestions from pastors and Leaguers both as to topics which should be discussed and as to available speakers.

It is planned to make the coming gathering as practical and helpful as we can. Especial emphasis will be laid upon our country work.

We ask for the cordial co-operation preparation of our programme, and our cers that our meeting may become a real inspiration to our young people throughout our Conference.

EDWARD T. DADMUN,
President.

EPWORTH LEAGUERS, TAKE NOTICE.

For over a year our Executive Committee of the Virginia Conference Epworth Leagues has been without funds in its treasury. Whatever necessary expenses have occurred have been met by its officers.

Our Biennial Conference will be held in Danville June 12-15, and there are many necessary expenses in arranging for this gathering. In order that these expenses may be fully provided for, your committee has decided to make a voluntary assessment upon each League in the Conference, asking that each League which can afford so to do contribute two dollars, and that the weaker ones give one dollar each to this object; to be paid not later than April 1st, 1902.

Our faithful Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. W. Reginald Walker, has resigned owing to the press of other work, and Mr. Charles M. Graves, Jr., P. O. box 613, Norfolk, Va., has been elected in his stead.

Will you kindly bring this matter before your League and let us know what we can count on from them.

Will you also kindly send us the names of your Leagues, their presidents and corresponding secretaries, with postoffice addresses, and so greatly aid us in the important work committed to our care.

If you have any suggestions in regard to topics you think ought to be discussed at our Conference gathering, we will be glad to receive suggestions, or if there be any way in which we can help your Leagues it will give us pleasure to try to do so.

Faternally yours,

EDWARD T. DADMUN,
President.

CHARLES M. GRAVES, Jr.,
Secretary and Treasurer.

All contributions should be sent to Charles M. Graves, Jr., Secretary and Treasurer, P. O. box 613, Norfolk, Va.

MULTIPLYING SCHOOL HOUSES. BETTER CARRY THE CHILD TO THE SCHOOL HOUSE THAN THE SCHOOL HOUSE TO THE CHILD.

In his first message to the Legislature Governor A. J. Montague, of Virginia, devotes much attention to the question of good schools and good roads. He forcibly states some wholesome truths in regard to the rural schools, and what he says applies in large measure to every State in the South.

"The tendency to multiply the rural schools," he says, "has greatly impaired the efficiency of the system. We need stronger schools and with longer terms. Such schools will command better teachers and admit of the classification necessary to the best educational results. It is quality rather than quantity that counts in education. The State can better afford, as respects cost and efficiency, to transport its children to one good school than to put an indifferent school near the door of every patron. Such transportation has been found economical and beneficial in several of the States, and in time doubtless will be introduced into all sparsely-settled communities. Some central authority should be established in each county to fix the number of schools under such limitations and regulations as the State Board of Education may prescribe."

Dr. J. L. M. Curry has shown that out of 1,705,293 illiterates of voting age in this country, 1,132,337 are found in the eleven late Confederate States.

TENT FOR SALE

We have bought a larger tent, and must sell at what it will bring the one used last summer in revival work. It is in good condition, having been used only for three series of revival meetings; is circular in shape and fifty feet in diameter. Will sell for half cost. Address GEO. H. WILEY, Methodist Mission, Richmond, Va.

WASHINGTON. — In this discourse Dr. Talmage discusses a much talked of subject and one in which all are interested. The text is Joel ii, 28: "I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh. Your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions."

In this photograph of the millennium the dream is lifted into great conspicuity. You may say of a dream that it is nocturnal fantasia, or that it is the absurd combination of waking thoughts, and with a slur of intonation you may say, "It is only a dream;" but God has honored the dream by making it the avenue through which again and again he has marched upon the human soul, decided the fate of nations, and changed the course of the world's history. God appeared in a dream to Abimelech, warning him against an unlawful marriage; in a dream to Jacob, announcing, by the ladder set against the sky full of angels, the communication between earth and heaven; in a dream to Joseph, foretelling his coming power under the figure of all the sheaves of the harvest bowing down to his sheaf; to the chief butler, foretelling his imprisonment; to the chief baker, announcing his decapitation; to Pharaoh, showing him first the seven plenty years and then the seven famine struck years, under the figure of the seven lean cows devouring the seven fat cows; to Solomon, giving him the choice between wisdom and riches and honor; to a warrior, under the figure of a barley cake smiting down a tent, encouraging Gideon in his battle against the Midianites; to Nebuchadnezzar, under the figure of a broken image and a hewn down tree, foretelling the overthrow of his power; to Joseph, of the New Testament, announcing the birth of Christ in his own household, and again bidding him fly from Herod's persecutions; to Pilate's wife, warning him not to become complicated with the judicial overthrow of Christ.

We all admit that God in ancient times and under Bible dispensation addressed the people through dreams. The question now is, does God appear in our day and reveal himself through dreams? That is the question everybody asks, and that question I will try to answer. You ask me if I believe in dreams. My answer is, I do, but all I have to say will be under five heads.

Bible a Sufficient Guide.

Remark the First.—The Scriptures are so full of revelation from God that if we get no communication from him in dreams we ought, nevertheless, to be satisfied.

With twenty guidebooks to tell you how to get to New York or Pittsburg or London or Glasgow or Manchester do you want a night vision to tell you how to make the journey? We have in this Scripture full direction in regard to the journey of this life and how to get to the celestial city, and with this grand guidebook, this magnificent directory, we ought to be satisfied. I have more faith in a decision to which I come when I am wide awake than when I am sound asleep. I have noticed that those who give a great deal of their time to studying dreams get their brains addled. They are very anxious to remember what they dreamed about the first night they slept in a new house. If in their dream they take the hand of a corpse, they are going to die. If they dream of a garden, it means a sepulcher. If something turns out according to a night vision, they say, "Well, I am not surprised; I dreamed it." If it turns out different from the night vision, they say, "Well, dreams go by contraries." In their efforts to put their dreams into rhythm they put their waking thoughts into discord. Now, the Bible is so full of revelation that we ought to be satisfied if we get no further revelation.

Sound sleep received great honor when Adam slept so extraordinarily that the surgical incision which gave him Eve did not wake him, but there is no such need for extraordinary slumber now, and he who catches an Eve must needs be wide awake! No need of such a dream as Jacob had, with a ladder against the sky, when ten thousand times it has been demonstrated that earth and heaven are in communication. No such dream needed as that which was given to Abimelech, warning him against an unlawful marriage, when we have the records of the county clerk's office. No need of such a dream as was given to Pharaoh about the seven years of famine, for now the seasons march in regular procession and steamer and rail train carry bread-stuffs to every famine struck nation. No need of a dream like that which encouraged Gideon, for all through Christendom it is announced and acknowledged and demonstrated that righteousness sooner or later will get the victory.

If there should come about a crisis in your life upon which the Bible does not seem to be sufficiently specific, go to God in prayer, and you will get especial direction. I have more faith ninety-nine times out of a hundred in directions given you with the Bible in your lap and your thoughts uplifted in prayer to God than in all the information you will get unconscious on your pillow.

I can very easily understand why the Babylonians and the Egyptians, with no Bible, should put so much stress on dreams, and the Chinese in their holy book, Chow King, should think their emperor gets his directions through dreams from God, and that Homer should think that all dreams came from Jove, and that in ancient times dreams were classified into a science, but why do you and I put so much stress upon dreams when we have a supernal book of infinite wisdom on all subjects? Why should we harry ourselves with dreams? Why should Eddystone and Barnegat lighthouses question a summer firefly?

Proof of Immortality.

Remark the Second.—All dreams have an important meaning. They prove that the soul is comparatively independent of the body. The eyes are closed, the senses are dull, the entire body goes into a lethargy which in all languages is used as a type of death, and then the soul spreads its wing and never sleeps. It leaps the Atlantic ocean and mingles in scenes 3,000 miles away. It travels great reaches of time, flashes back eighty years, and the octogenarian is a boy again in his father's house. If the soul before it has entirely broken its chain of flesh can do all this, how far can it leap, what circles can it cut when it is fully liberated! Every dream, whether agreeable or harassing, whether sunshiny or tempestuous, means so much that, rising from your couch, you ought to kneel down and say: "O God, am I immortal? Whence? Whither? Two natures. My soul caged now—what when the door of the cage is opened? If my soul can fly so far in the few hours in which my body is asleep in the night, how far can it fly when my body sleeps the long sleep of the grave?" Oh, this power to dream, how startling, how overwhelming! Immortal, immortal!

Remark the Third. The vast majority of dreams are merely the result of disturbed physical condition and are not a supernatural message. Job had ear-buncles and he was scared in the night. He says, "Thou scarest me with dreams and terrifiest me with visions." Solomon had an overwrought brain, overwrought with public business, and he suffered from erratic slumber, and he writes in Ecclesiastes, "A dream cometh through the multitude of business." Dr. Gregory, in experimenting with dreams, found that a bottle of hot water put to his feet while in slumber made him think he was going up the hot sides of Mount Etna. Another morbid physician, experimenting with dreams, his feet uncovered through sleep, thought he was riding in an Alpine diligence. But a great many dreams are merely narcotic disturbance. Anything that you see while under the influence of chloral or brandy or hashish or laudanum is not a revelation from God.

The learned De Quincey did not ascribe to divine communication what he saw in sleep, opium saturated, dreams which he afterward described in the following words: "I was worshiped, I was sacrificed, I fled from the wrath of Brahma, through all the forests of Asia. Vishnu hated me. Seeva laid in wait for me. I came suddenly upon Isis and Osiris. I had done a deed, they said, that made the crocodiles tremble. I was buried for a thousand years in stone coffins, with mummies and sphinxes in narrow chambers at the heart of eternal pyramids. I was kissed with the cancerous kiss of crocodiles and lay confounded with unutterable slimy things among wreathy and Nilotic mud."

Dyspeptic Christianity.

Do not mistake narcotic disturbance for divine revelation. But I have to tell you that the majority of the dreams are merely the penalty of outraged digestive organs, and you have no right to mistake the nightmare for heavenly revelation. Late suppers are a warranty deed for bad dreams. Highly spiced salads at 11 o'clock at night, instead of opening the door heavenward, open the door infernal and diabolical. You outrage natural law, and you insult the God who made those laws. It takes from three to five hours to digest food, and you have no right to keep your digestive organs in struggle when the rest of your body is in somnolence. The general rule is eat nothing after 6 o'clock at night, retire at 10, sleep on your right side, keep the window open five inches for ventilation, and other worlds will not disturb you much. By physical maltreatment you take the ladder that Jacob saw in his dream, and you lower it to the nether world, allowing the ascent of the demoniacal. Dreams are midnight dyspepsia. An unregulated desire for something to eat ruined the race in paradise, and an unregulated desire for something to eat keeps it ruined. The world during 6,000 years has tried in vain to digest that first apple. The world will not be evangelized until we get rid of a dyspeptic Christianity. Healthy people do not want the cadaverous and sleepy thing that some people call religion. They want a religion that lives regularly by day and sleeps soundly by night. If through trouble or coming on of old age or exhaustion of Christian service you cannot sleep well, then you may expect from God "songs in the night," but there are no blessed communications to those who willingly surrender to indigestibles. Napoleon's army at Leipsic, Dresden and Borodino came near being destroyed through the disturbed gastric juices of its commander. That is the way you have lost some of your battles.

Mission of Dreams.

Another remark I make is that our dreams are apt to be merely the echo of our daytime thoughts. I will give you a recipe for pleasant dreams. Fill your days with elevated thought and unselfish action and your dreams will be set to music. If all day you are gouging and grasping and avaricious in your dreams you will see gold that you cannot clutch and bargain in which you were out-shylocked. If during the day you are irascible and pugnacious and gunpowdery of disposition, you will at night have battle with enemies in which they will get the best of you. If you are all day long in a hurry, at night you will dream of rail trains that you want to catch while you cannot move one inch toward the depot. If you are always oversuspicious and expectant of assault, you will have at night hallucinations of assassins with daggers drawn. No one wonders that Richard III., the iniquitous, the night before the battle of Bosworth Field dreamed that all those whom he had murdered stared at him and that he was torn to pieces by demons from the pit. The scholar's dream is a philosophic echo. The poet's dream is a rhythmic echo. Coleridge composed his "Kubla Khan" asleep in a narcotic dream and, waking up, wrote down 300 lines of it. Tartini, the violin player, composed his most wonderful sonata while asleep in a dream so vivid that, waking, he easily transferred it to paper.

Waking thoughts have their echo in sleeping thoughts. If a man spend his life in trying to make others happy and is heavenly minded, around his pillow he will see cripples who have got over their crutch, and processions of celestial imperials, and hear the grand march roll down from drums of heaven over jasper parapets. You are very apt to hear in dreams what you hear when you are wide awake.

Now, having shown you that, having a Bible, we ought to be satisfied not getting any further communication from God, and having shown you that all dreams have an important mission, since they show the comparative independence of the soul from the body, and having shown you that the majority of dreams are a result of disturbed physical condition, and having shown you that our sleeping thoughts are apt to be an echo of our waking thoughts, I come now to my fifth and most important remark, and that is to say that it is capable of proof that God does sometimes in our day and has often since the close of the Bible dispensation appeared to people in dreams.

Warned by God.

All dreams that make you better are from God. How do I know it? Is not God the source of all good? It does not take a very logical mind to argue that out. Tertullian and Martin Luther believed in dreams. The dreams of John Huss are immortal. St. Augustine, the Christian father, gives us the fact that a Carthaginian physician was persuaded of the immortality of the soul by an argument which he heard in a dream. The night before his assassination the wife of Julius Cæsar dreamed that her husband fell dead across her lap.

It is possible to prove that God does

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.,

March 25, 1902.

While none of our religious denominations, except the Episcopalians, Lutherans, and Catholics, formally observe "Holy Week," there is something about the week before Easter Sunday—some indefinable feeling of awe and reverence—that affects all who believe in the general tenets of Christianity. This can be seen by even the most indifferent who attend services in the churches of any denomination during the week. Perhaps it is because the observance of the week by the three denominations named serves to vividly recall to all of us the history and incidents of the crucifixion and resurrection of our Lord and Saviour—a history in which the whole Christian world is deeply interested. Who can hear the Easter morning greeting, now almost two thousand years old—"Our Lord is risen!"—without a quickening of the pulse? And who can think of Easter without thinking of the scenes before the sepulchre in the garden of Gethsemane? It is a "holy week," which is felt in the heart of every Christian.

Secretary Hay thinks the danger of a war over China that will involve several European nations and Japan has been exaggerated by recent publications in the daily papers, although he fully realizes that the situation in the East is grave. The one encouraging thing about the news from Europe is the statement that European diplomats think that it is in the power of this government by its official action to preserve peace. If that be true, there will be no war. This government is for peace first, last, and all the time, and it is absolutely certain that if it can control the situation there will be no war over China. The policy of this government has been and will be to maintain the territorial independence of China. This is dictated not only by our inherent love for peace, but by the strongest commercial reasons. We have a large and growing trade with China, which it is important that we should keep, and it can be best kept by peace.

Bishop Galloway, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, preached at Mount Vernon Place church Sunday to one of the largest congregations ever gathered in that edifice, which is one of our largest churches. His subject was "The Pre-eminence of Christ," and he did it full justice and added to his reputation as one of the foremost pulpit orators of the South.

Those who regard the poultry and egg industry of this country as a small affair will find some figures in a bulletin issued by the Census Bureau several days ago that will probably astonish them, just as the statistics of many small things, including small sins, would astonish the most of us if they were as carefully tabulated and the totals placed before us. In all 5,096,352 farms reported poultry as one of their industries to the census enumerators, and following are the totals of fowls on these farms: Chickens, 233,567,863; ducks, 4,807,358. All of 598,085; turkeys, 6,599,367; geese, these fowls were over three months old when the census was taken. The value of poultry on hand June 1, 1900, was $85,794,996, and the value of poultry raised and sold during the previous year was $136,891,877, while during the same period the value of the eggs was $144,286,158, making the enormous total for poultry and eggs for the year $281,178,035; and the figures do not include the poultry and eggs produced outside of farms and ranges. These figures are interesting in more ways than one.

The War Department has issued a special order to officers commanding troops in the Philippines, enjoining upon them not only the strictest scrutiny over the habits and morals of the troops, but to endeavor by personal example to influence the men to preserve their health, both by abstaining from drink and the liability of contracting preventable disease. Following is an extract from the order: "The only really efficient way in which to control the diseases due to immorality is to diminish the vice which is the cause of these diseases. Excessive indulgence in strong drink is absolutely certain to ruin any man, physically and morally; while disease due to licentiousness produces effects which are quite as destructive and even more loathsome. It is the duty of regimental, and particularly company, officers to try by precept and example to point out to the men under their control, and particularly to the younger men, the inevitable misery and disaster which follow upon intemperance and upon moral uncleanness and vicious living. The officers should, of course, remember always that the effect of what they say must largely depend upon the lives they themselves lead."

Dr. Wallace Redcliffe preached an interesting sermon on the power and influence of men after death this week, based upon the miracle performed by Elijah more than a year after his death, as told in the third chapter of Second Kings, in which he said: "Many a man is stronger after his death than in his life. Every day men succeed in their graves and accomplish that which they could not on earth. Many men die apparently failures, in poverty, and without, to all appearances, doing what they had set out to do. It is not until after they are dead that the real purposes of their lives are comprehended, and the fact realized that they are great, successful men. A man's influence will often increase after he dies. He has to be put off the stage before he is appreciated. Calvin is greater to-day than he was when he lived, and his fame and glory go ringing down the corridors of history, and they will never grow dimmer. The Pilgrims were all men such as this, sturdy, strong, determined. Their wives stood hardships, famine, toil, pain and peril. Their fame is greater to-day than it was."

The historical St. John's church across Lafayette Square from the White House, where so many Presidents have worshipped, was the scene this week of the annual meeting of the Washington Branch of the American Tract Society. Rev. Judson Smith, Field Secretary at New York, presented a brief review of the year's work, and Right Rev. Alexander Mackay-Smith preached the sermon. Dr. Mackay-Smith's discourse was earnest and eloquent, setting forth the needs and objects of the Tract Society. The Secretary made a striking review of its history and work, and dwelt on the splendid advances it had made among immigrants and the inhabitants of our new island possessions, as well as on the general line of service that has made it so useful in this and other countries. During the past year there were thirty-seven new publications added to the list of the Society's books, twenty of them in English and the rest in German, Spanish, Italian, and Dutch, while the whole number of distinct publications make a grand total of 13,386 in the seventy-seven years that the Society has been in existence. The actual number of copies printed, including books, tracts, and periodicals, amounted to about 8,000,000, which does not include the millions of tracts that have been issued at missionary stations in foreign countries. The number of periodicals circulated during the past twelve months was 2,632,400. Rev. Mr. Smith also stated that during the past year 487,000 immigrants landed in the United States, and the Tract Society, having published the Bible in 153 languages and dialects, is fully prepared to reach this multitude and to give them the advantages which they probably never had in their own country. The Spanish war greatly increased the field of the Society, as there have been distributed 2,639,520 of Christian literature since the beginning of that struggle in our island possessions alone, and 5,669,925 in other Spanish-speaking countries, making a total of over 8,000,000 pages in all in the Spanish language. The good work of the Society has been accomplished by untiring effort. Concerted action, and generous donations have made the success possible and the success itself has been the greatest encouragement to those engaged in the work. The figures given show coldly and inadequately how the Gospel has been borne to millions and the vast amount of good that has crowned the efforts of the organization.

Another organization's work was presented in Washington this week by Mr. Marion Lawrence, of Toledo, Ohio, who is Secretary of the International Committee of the Sunday-School Association. He addressed a meeting of the Sunday-school workers of the city and urged the great importance of the Sunday-school as the foundation of Church work. He referred to the different organizations connected with the Churches and Church movements—the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, Y. M. C. A., and others—and said that there were plenty of these, but that they needed more members to support them—more active members whose spirit was wholly in the work. He said that the activity of the Mormons, and especially in their Sunday-schools, was an object lesson to the world in successful methods, no matter what opinion we might have as to the creed promulgated. "The best missionary in any home," said Mr. Lawrence, "is the little child, and I would rather see a child of ten taken into the Sunday-school than a man of sixty into the Church. The child will do the most good." He compared the Sunday-school to the Gulf Stream that enlivens and warms everything that it touches. Mr. Lawrence's remarks are especially significant in the light of the figures just compiled by Rev. E. M. Stephenson, of Chicago, who has for years been asking Church members the question: "At what age were you converted?" In 1,000 answers he finds that 5 per cent. were converted before nine years of age, 7 per cent. from nine to twelve, 14 per cent. from thirteen to fifteen, 50 per cent. from fifteen to eighteen, 16 per cent. from nineteen to twenty-one, 7 per cent. from twenty-two to twenty-five, and 1 per cent. from twenty-six to thirty. The facts thus revealed should be a guide to Church workers as to the age at which people are the most open to religious instruction.

Earl Gray, a British nobleman, made an address in this city recently in connection with a plan he has for temperance reform, and he is now in New York urging the social reformers there to adopt his plan for the modification of the liquor evil in that city. His scheme is in operation on a large scale in England, and is practically nothing more or less than a temperance trust, whose purpose is not to wholly prevent the selling of liquor, but to so regulate the business that the consumer shall have pure liquor in moderate quantities and at a fair price. The trust as it exists in England is capitalized by persons interested in the cause of temperance. It has large funds and bids for licenses, being generally successful, and places new establishments in the hands of reliable men who make the places clean and wholesome. These men are not paid anything for the alcoholic liquor sold, but get a percentage on beverages other than intoxicants. No liquor is sold to minors or to drunken men, no one is allowed to drink enough to cause intoxication, and inducements are offered for the use of "soft" drinks over the more harmful kinds. A small percentage of the profits go to the trust and the rest is used in the improvement of the places, for the maintenance of reading rooms, bowling alleys, and the like, which are regarded as effective substitutes for the saloon. In England public houses are limited according to areas, and whether the plan would succeed in this country, where there are saloons everywhere, is a question. It might be an interesting experiment to set one of the comparatively wholesome public houses next to an ordinary saloon and to watch the results of a fair rivalry. Lowering of rates and raising of quantities of drinks sold would be resorted to by the bar-room to drive out the dangerous competitor, and under these circumstances some missionary work would doubtless be necessary to prove to the people that their interests would be served by patronizing the establishment which turned its profits into substantial betterments for its patrons.

Under the American system it is doubtful whether the "sanitary saloon" has any place, and while there has been a drift of sentiment among some temperance workers along the lines suggested by Earl Gray, most of them believe the problem in this country needs a more radical treatment and solution. A number of the New York churches have tried public resorts of the character suggested, but their success has been ephemeral. The temperance workers of Washington feel that there can be nothing gained by temporizing with the drink evil, and that all efforts to make attractive saloons are apt to render its infamy less apparent at first, gradually leading to the evils of the worst form of saloons and dives.

Three members of Congress participated in the anniversary exercises of the Missionary Society, held this week at Mount Vernon Place M. E. church, South. They were Hon. J. L. Burnett, of Ala., who presided over the meeting and made an address on the great need of home missionary work in the South; Hon. James T. Lloyd, of Missouri, who called attention to the fact that only about one-twelfth of the people in the world had heard the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and closed his address with a plea for the thousands of men and women in the city of Washington, the Capital of the world's greatest and most progressive Christian nation, who never enter a church; and Hon. C. W. Thompson, of Alabama, whose address was largely devoted to the missionary work of Methodists in his State. I would not go so far as to charge that Congressmen are more indifferent than other men toward Christian missionary work, but the fact that the participation of three of them in a meeting intended to aid that work was generally regarded as a notable event speaks for itself.

Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson, U. S. N., gave the Y. M. C. A. cadets and several hundred of the younger members of that organization a stirring talk this week on "Our Country," during which he said: "This country has 80,000,000 inhabitants—more than any country of Europe. It has 200,000 miles of railway, and the next largest mileage of any other country, that of Germany, is but 35,000 miles. Its wheat fields and granaries supply the world with food. When there is a famine in Russia, it is the United States that supplies the famished with the food they crave. When any dread calamity descends upon a nation where money is needed to keep the poor from starving, it is the United States that furnishes the money and the sympathy, comforts the sick, and nourishes the young. The United States is a peace-loving nation. While the other nations of the world are strapped down by the curses of militarism, America alone stands free and untrammelled. Her army is made up of people who voluntarily offer their services to the country, and when war comes—and we never look for or try to bring about a war—the number of volunteers is greatly in excess of the number of men needed for service. We conduct war on a different basis from the other nations of the earth. At Santiago the people of the city were threatened with a famine as the army of the United States gathered around the city and cut the people off from their food supplies. Did the American statesman take advantage of the additional weapon that starvation was about to throw in their hands and keep the food supplies from the people? No. From my prison window I saw 18,000 women, children, and old men march out of the city to the American lines, where they were fed by our troops with rations that were brought a thousand miles over the seas, and at a time when the soldiers in the field were going on half-rations and needed the food. This action stands unique in the war history of the world and stamps the American nation as a true exponent of the Christian doctrine. At the end of the war we had a fleet of such strength as has never yet been gathered under the Stars and Stripes lying in Guantanamo harbor. The coast of Spain was lying open, without protection just across the Atlantic. Did the American navy hurry across the seas and harass the sea-coast towns of that old monarchy, as any other country on the face of the earth would have done? No. The fleet remained where it was, and instead of demanding indemnity from Spain, we paid her $20,000,000. No other country in the world was ever so magnanimous."

Dr. E. B. Pollard, of the First Baptist church, preached a strong and interesting sermon this week on "Are the Heathens Worth Saving?" Following is a short extract therefrom: "Sometimes out of the darkness and gloom of heathenism have been snatched the brightest and most fragrant flowers for Christian life. Even in those most steeped in sin and ignorance are possibilities of truth and righteousness. God has laid hold of them and made them the most delightful of characters. He has implanted good in the human heart in the most unexpected places. When we think of the magnificent power of men like Gladstone and John Bright, the descendants of those old northern pagans and rovers, we begin to understand what the Gospel of Christ has done for man and is able to do."

A HERO OF PEACE.

In a sketch of Admiral Kempff, who is about to return to this country after long foreign service, Mr. W. E. Griffis asks in The Outlook: "Is the moral grandeur of a fighter, who for his country's sake refuses to fight, less than that of him who sinks an enemy's fleet?" Dr. Griffis explains and comments as follows:

A hero and patriot, who stood true to all our noblest traditions in the hour of temptation, when the highest judicial poise and practical wisdom were necessary, is Rear-Admiral Louis Kempff, a veteran of forty years' service. In command of the American naval forces in China on the night of June 16, 1900, he refused, because it was un-American, to join the Russian, British, German, French, Italian, Austrian, and Japanese allies in bombarding the Taku forts. Such an act wantonly declared war on China. It was not with the American a question of size or armament, for he had the Newark and the Monocacy, and of the thirty-six ships in the combined fleet only eight small ships could and did operate. It was upon Kempff's wise and patriotic action that President McKinley and Secretary Hay could and did base their diplomatic action, the wisdom and propriety of which, amply vindicated before the world, have given the United States a leading position in China.

EDUCATION AND PRODUCTION

AS ILLITERACY GOES OUT, WEALTH COMES IN—THE SITUATION IN NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

In Norway and Sweden only one adult in a thousand is unable to read and write; in Denmark only five in a thousand. This remarkable state of affairs has been brought about principally by the educational activity of the last seven years. In the mean time, the wealth of these countries, with few natural resources, has increased in a most remarkable degree. From being one of the poorest countries in Europe, Denmark has come to be the second country in the world with regard to national wealth in proportion to the number of inhabitants, and first in regard to the even distribution of wealth among all the people. The Scandinavian peasants have taxed themselves for education until they have banished illiteracy and made themselves rich in spiritual and material life. Let the States of the South learn the lesson.

If during the last fifty years we had taken the same interest in education that these people have taken; if through good schools and adequate attendance laws, we had reduced our illiteracy to two or three in a thousand instead of the average 150 in a thousand white people and 300 in a thousand of the total population, these Southern States would now be among the wealthiest and most powerful in the world.—Atlantic Educational Journal.

BEAUTIFYING THE HOME GROUNDS.

The old-fashioned gardens of half a century ago, with no thought of effect, gave decorative plants their proper position by relegating them to some corner of border location. Oftentimes they were planted near the old-fashioned well-sweep with a clump of trees beyond, simply because they grew so thriftily there under the frequent dashes from the old well bucket. Naturally they form a picture still fresh in the memory of many a wanderer from the old homestead, who is now shut in by towering walls of brick and stone. Some of the pleasing effects that one can arrange in planning the home garden are indicated in the April Delineator, where the directions are given by a well-known authority on gardening.

With the accession of the three West India islands from Denmark will come accessions to the religious forces of the United States. About 16,000 of 30,000 population of St. Thomas, St. Croix and St. John islands are actively identified with the churches. The Moravian and Dutch Reformed are the strongest in membership and influence. From the Moravian body there come to America every year large numbers of young people, especially young married people, and in some Eastern cities there are Moravian churches made up wholly of colored West Indians. Ministers of churches on these islands are white or black without regard to the color of those who attend their churches, there being no color line. Church schools abound to the number of five, and education in the public schools is compulsory. The dominating Church influence is Protestant, and general intelligence is high, quite unlike that of the neighboring Porto Rico.—Ram's Horn.

CONFEDERATE VETERAN RE-UNION, DALLAS, TEXAS, APRIL 22-25, 1902.

For the above occasion the Southern Railway begs to announce one cent per mile in each direction for the round trip from all stations on its lines to Dallas, Texas, and return short line mileage. Tickets to be on sale April 18th, 19th, and 20th, with return limit May 2d, except that by depositing ticket with joint agent at Dallas on or before April 30th and payment of 50 cents an extension of return limit until May 15th will be granted. Stop overs will be allowed within transit limit of ticket within S. E. P. A. territory west of and including Chattanooga and Atlanta. The rate from Richmond to Dallas and return will be $28.65, and correspondingly low rates from all other points.

The Southern Railway has short routes through Asheville (Land of the Sky), Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain and Memphis; through Atlanta, Birmingham and Memphis; or Atlanta, Birmingham and Shreveport. The far famed "Land of the Sky" route is without equal, and is the most interested offered.

Don't miss the opportunity of passing through "Land of the Sky"—the Switzerland of America.

appear in dreams to warn, to convert and to save men. My friend, a retired sea captain and a Christian, tells me that one night while on the sea he dreamed that a ship's crew were in great suffering. Waking from his dream, he p... about the ship, tacked in different direction—surprised everybody on his vessel—they thought he was going crazy—sailed on in another direction hour after hour and for many hours until he came to the perishing crew and rescued them and brought them to New York. Who conducted that dream? The God of the sea.

In 1635 a vessel went from Spithead for the West Indies and ran on the ledge of rocks called the Caskets. The vessel went down, but the crew clambered up on the Caskets, to die of thirst or starvation, as they supposed. But there was a ship bound for Southampton that had the captain's son on board. This lad twice in one night dreamed that there was a crew of sailors dying on the Caskets. He told his father of this dream. The vessel came down by the Caskets in time to find and to rescue those poor dying men. Who conducted that dream? The God of the rocks, the God of the sea.

A Remarkable Dream.

The Rev. Dr. Bushnell in his marvelous book entitled "Nature and the Supernatural" gives the following fact that he got from Captain Yount in California, a fact confirmed by many families: Captain Yount dreamed twice one night that 150 miles away there was a company of travelers fast in the snow. He also saw in the dream rocks of peculiar formation, and, telling this dream to an old hunter, the hunter said: "Why, I remember those rocks. Those rocks are in the Carson valley pass, 150 miles away." Captain Yount, impelled by this dream, although laughed at by his neighbors, gathered men together, took mules and blankets and started out on the expedition, traveled 150 miles, saw those very rocks which he had described in his dream, found the suffering ones at the foot of those rocks and brought them back to confirm the story of Captain Yount. Who conducted that dream? The God of the snow, the God of the Sierra Nevadas.

God has often appeared in resource and comfort. You have known people—perhaps it is something I state in your experience—you have seen people go to sleep with bereavements inconsolable, and they awakened in perfect resignation because of what they had seen in slumber. Dr. Cranage, one of the most remarkable men I ever met—remarkable for benevolence and great philanthropies—at Wellington, England, showed me a house where the Lord had appeared in a wonderful dream to a poor woman. The woman was rheumatic, sick, poor to the last point of destitution. She was waited on and cared for by another poor woman, her only attendant. Word came to her one day that this poor woman had died, and the invalid of whom I am speaking lay helpless upon the couch wondering what would become of her. In that mood she fell asleep. In her dreams she said the angel of the Lord appeared and took her into the open air and pointed in one direction, and there were mountains of bread, and pointed in another direction, and there were mountains of butter, and pointed in another direction, and there were mountains of all kinds of worldly supply. The angel of the Lord said to her: "Woman, all these mountains belong to your Father, and do you think he will let you, his child, hunger and die?" Dr. Cranage told me by some divine impulse he went into that destitute home, saw the suffering there, and administered unto it, caring for her all the way through. Do you tell me that that dream was woven out of earthly anodynes? Was that the phantasmagoria of a diseased brain? No; it was an all sympathetic God addressing a poor woman through a dream.

Furthermore, I have to say that there are people who were converted to God through a dream. The Rev. John Newton, the fame of whose piety fills all Christendom, while a profligate sailor on shipboard, in his dream thought that a being approached him and gave him a very beautiful ring and put it upon his finger and said to him: "As long as you wear that ring you will be prospered. If you lose that ring, you will be ruined." In the same dream another personage appeared and by a strange infatuation persuaded John Newton to throw overboard that ring, and it sank into the sea. Then the mountains in sight were full of fire, and the air was lurid with consuming wrath. While John Newton was repenting of his folly in having thrown overboard the treasure another personage came through the dream and told John Newton he would plunge into the sea and bring that ring up if he desired it. He plunged into the sea and brought it up and said to John Newton, "Here is that gem, but I think I will keep it for you lest you lose it again." And John Newton consented, and all the fire went out from the mountains, and all the signs of lurid wrath disappeared from the air, and John Newton said that he saw in his dream that that valuable gem was his soul and that the being who persuaded him to throw it overboard was Satan and that the one who plunged in and restored that gem, keeping it for him, was Christ. And that dream makes one of the most wonderful chapters in the life of that most wonderful man.

Come to Judgment.

A German was crossing the Atlantic ocean, and in his dream he saw a man with a handful of white flowers, and he was told to follow the man who had that handful of white flowers. The German, arriving in New York, wandered into the Fulton street prayer meeting, and Mr. Lamphier, the great apostle of prayer meetings, that day had given to him a bunch of tuberoses. They stood on his desk, and at the close of the religious services he took the tuberoses and started homeward, and the German followed him and through an interpreter told Mr. Lamphier that on the sea he had dreamed of a man with a handful of white flowers and was told to follow him. Suffice it to say that through that interview and following interviews he became a Christian and is a city missionary, preaching the gospel to his own countrymen. God in a dream!

John Hardonk, while on shipboard, dreamed one night that the day of judgment had come and that the roll of the ship's crew was called except his own name and that these people, this crew, were all banished, and in his dream he asked the reader why his own name was omitted, and he was told it was to give him more opportunity for repentance. He woke up a different man. He became illustrious for Christian attainment. If you do not believe these things, then you must discard all testimony and refuse to accept any kind of authoritative witness. God in a dream!

Rev. Herbert Mendes was converted to God through a dream of the last judgment, and many of us have had some dream of that great day of judgment which shall be the winding up of the world's history. If you have not dreamed of it, perhaps tonight you may dream of that day.

The Blackstone Guano Company commenced the manufacture of their celebrated brands of Fertilizers in 1884.

Since that time the demand for them has steadily increased every year, and we believe that the reason for this increased demand for the goods is due to the fact that all of these Brands have every year exceeded their guaranteed analysis in commercial value. For instance, the guaranteed analysis on—

Blackstone Standard	is $15.20,	but it actually runs $16.54
Alliance	" 15.20,	" " " 17.71
Hard Cash	" 16.70,	" " " 18.96

AN EXCELLENT PAPER.

On another page our readers will find an excellent paper by Mr. M. C. Faville on Norfolk as a mission field. The article will repay careful reading, as it is like all that Mr. Faville writes—strong in facts.

ON THE WING AGAIN.

Mr. Editor,—A line of lecture engagements took me straight through central Illinois, from the Ohio river to Chicago, where, as a base, I abode several days, running out to lecture at night in adjoining towns, and returning in the day to study the variegated and wonderful life of this vast metropolis. Chicago apes Europe, and prides herself on copying continental customs. In one of the finest cafes in the city hundreds of ladies and gentlemen were at luncheon, and yet the room was filled with a fog of smoke from cigars. Men were smoking at the tables where ladies were eating beside them. As I paid the lady cashier, I remarked: "This looks ugly." "What?" she asked. "To see men smoking with ladies in the room," I replied. "Well," she said, "you know that is the way they do in Europe, and Chicago thinks that she must do whatever they do in Europe." "Oh," I replied, "that is it, is it? Then both Europe and Chicago ought to come to my country to learn good manners." "And where is your country?" she asked. "Dixie," I answered, proudly. "Why, of course," she said, "I suppose this does look strange to a Southern gentleman." And it did. God save us from European manners. We have imported its Sabbath desecration, its infidelity, its Nihilism, its diabolism in a hundred forms, until a tremendous strain has been put upon our American system, and the nobler ideals of life planted on these shores have been blurred and almost destroyed by the foreign element that has come in. That many people in the North realize this, is evident from the lusty applause that almost invariably greets the statement I make in one of my lectures, that "the traditions and spirit of genuine American life are found in their greatest purity in the South today, and by the grace of God we'll maintain them." To the extent that she copies Europe, Chicago is a menace to America.

But it is a great city, and growing larger by leaps and bounds in every direction. Not content with expanding to the north, the south, the west, with that wonderful energy and constructive enterprise that has always characterized Chicago, it is pushing eastward, and making land along the lake-front. The heart of the city is occupied by lofty buildings from sixteen to twenty stories high. In one of these buildings, the "Monadnock," 7,500 people are housed. In another, the Masonic Temple, 300,000 people come and go on business during the day. Everything is on a scale here that dwarfs our ordinary notions of life, and bewilders an occasional visitor. One of the greatest modern engineering achievements is the great canal that connects the Chicago river with the Illinois river, and drains the waters of Lake Michigan into the Mississippi river. I am told that the Chicago river, which meanders through the heart of the city, carries a heavier tonnage than the Thames. Before this canal was built, it was a foul and revolting stream, over which Charon might have held his nose as he ferried his barge; but now it is filled with clear, limpid, beautiful green water, fresh from the depths of the lake, and a gondola might be at home on its bosom.

The University of Chicago, Rockefeller's big school house, over which that modern educational colossus, Dr. Harper, presides, stands not far from the site of the World's Fair, and is on the Chicago scale of bigness. I enjoyed a pleasant visit there as the guest of Rev. J. A. Rice, of South Carolina. He and Rev. J. E. Cuninggim, of North Carolina, are there taking special courses of study in the divinity school. Some weeks ago I took occasion to say in the New Orleans Christian Advocate that it was not the wisest thing for our young men to go to the Chicago University for theological equipment. These loyal sons of the University took me to task for it. It was, perhaps, a little unfair to make a sweeping statement of that kind, without defining the danger, I fear. I think the first paragraph of this letter will explain what I mainly fear—namely, that our young men will become inoculated with the Chicago spirit, imbibe a false liberalism, and return home out of sympathy with those higher and nobler social and religious ideals which it has been the glory of our Southern civilization to cultivate and maintain. It is mighty hard to live long in Rome and not come to think as Rome thinks and to do as Rome does. I want to say distinctly and emphatically that I do not fear the new learning and broad cosmopolitan culture for which Chicago University stands. I make no pretensions to scholarship, but I have too much sense to butt my brains out against such solid scientific facts as "evolution" and such a formidable reality as "Higher Criticism." Criticism, in its technical meaning, is simply the historical interpretation of the Bible, and it is a perfectly legitimate sphere of knowledge. It is conveniently divided into "lower" and "higher" criticism. "Lower criticism" is concerned with the text, whether this rendering or that of the Greek or Hebrew is the best; "higher criticism" deals with everything that concerns the history of the books, by whom, when, where, and under what circumstances they were written. Every intelligent man who studies the Bible wants to know all he can learn about these things. But if he studies them at all, he becomes a "higher critic," because they belong to that department of Bible study known as "higher criticism." Wesley was a "higher critic," so was Adam Clarke, Dr. Whedon, Dr. Summers, and every other great Bible student. And you can't study the Bible thoroughly without becoming a higher critic. I believe in the method, and I accept the results of conservative "higher criticism." And I am ashamed of some of our prominent men who take occasion before our Annual Conferences to denounce the "Higher Criticism" as though it were something hostile and dangerous. Either they are ignorant of what Higher Criticism is, or else they are guilty of a miserable piece of clerical demagoguery. In either case, they put us as a Church in a false relation to the higher scholarship of the age. The advantages offered for exhaustive Biblical study in the Chicago University are, perhaps, unexcelled in this country; and we sorely need men who have the thorough equipment they may acquire there. But when they come away I want them to have sense enough not to spout their learning in the pulpit. I believe it was the great Dr. John A. Broadus who advised a young minister to study Butler's "Analogy" and preach to the negroes. That was wise. By studying Butler's "Analogy" he would think great thoughts, and by preaching to negroes he would be compelled to simplify them.

I was seated in the elegant office of a friend, in the thirteenth floor of the Masonic Temple, when he came in, accompanied by a gentleman who wore a prodigious moustache, and said to me: "Sam Steel, I want to introduce you to Sam Steel." At first I thought he was joking, but I found the gentleman with the flowing moustache had my name, or, rather, we both had the same name. And he told me a great deal about the Steel ancestry I never knew. "They belong to the oldest and purest English stock," he said "and their original home was in Cheshire, England. It does not appear that there were any nobles among them, but in the fourteenth century no one could get through that part of England without running upon sturdy country squires by the name of Steel." I told him that my immediate ancestors came from the north of Ireland. "Yes," he said, "and they went there from Cheshire. They were inveterate Puritans and Independents, and flocked to Cromwell. When he conquered Ireland, we must admit he sold some Irish real estate at a rather less figure than it was worth, and our Cheshire kin who had fought under his banner didn't scruple to buy it. So they went to Ireland; but wherever you find them they bear a strong family likeness, both in physiognomy and in character. You can lead a Steel with kindness, but you can't drive him an inch." All of this was very interesting to me, and I thought that last remark might explain some of the bumps and thumps that one of the "Sams" had experienced in recent years. I'm not much on ancestry, but I'm proud to find out that I had kin in Cromwell's ranks, as well as among the heroes who followed the glorious Lee in Virginia and the invincible Forrest in Mississippi. They were always on the side of independence, thank God. I never heard of a Steel acting the flunkey to anybody.

The proposed settlement of the unhappy war claim suggested in your "Open Letter" by restoring to the treasury of the Church the amount paid for its collection does not promise to settle it. It seems to me, as the claim was due us, and the complaint of the Senate was, not that we had been paid what did not belong to us, but that we had not received it all, that it would meet all the demands of honor to make good this loss, and repudiate the methods and the parties by which it was sustained. But I have found no one who agrees with me. To get rid of the wretched incident, I would restore the whole amount, if it was necessary to sell the Publishing House, lock, stock, and barrel, to do it. What we have to fear now is that this division of sentiment as to what ought to be done will enable the Book Committee, and the Bishops who sustain them, to carry out their plan and prevent anything at all being done. This will

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

COPYRIGHT, 1909, IN U. S. A., BY ADVANCE PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO.

"I wish to say frankly that I am not in favor of these long trips of the football team away from the college. I have heard it said that it is a good advertisement for the college to have the team go out. But I am sure Hope college could well afford to miss this advertisement, especially that part of it which turns night into day and disturbs the slumbers of innocent citizens on college hill, many of whom, I must frankly tell you, are indignant with the college for permitting scenes like those of last Sunday morning. May I ask the football team how much good advertising the college receives when some of its best friends at home are growing hostile to it on account of the conduct of the men who go away to advertise the college to strangers?"

Here there was a slight attempt at applause on the part of a few students who enjoyed the way the president was "rubbing it into" the football team. He instantly and with some sternness checked it and continued:

"Hereafter I wish it to be distinctly understood that every football and baseball player in the college shall be held as strictly to account for his grades in all class and laboratory work as any other students. I also wish it to be understood that if these trips of the football team away from the college are continued to the evident loss of time that belongs to the college work steps will be taken by the college authorities to consider the advisability of dropping football out of the college altogether. This is not in the nature of a threat, but it is simply a statement which I am authorized by the trustees and faculty to make. At our last regular meeting together we were almost unanimously agreed that there has been in the past too much prominence given to athletics and not enough to other forms of development. As I said personally I am not opposed to football if it is rightly played. But I feel very strongly my responsibility as the head of this college to make its purpose as a Christian institution plainly felt. If anything, whether it be athletics or something else, assumes more than its rightful share of a student's time and strength, to the danger of his intellectual and moral life, I shall, as now, always speak frankly to the college for its own good."

The president stopped rather suddenly, as his habit was when he thought he had said enough, nodded to the senior class, and the students went out. But that was only the beginning of his attempt to revolutionize the athletics of Hope college. It met with a determined resistance from the mere thoughtless element in the college, and Edward Blake was not the only student that year and next to feel the effect of the president's action. The air cleared up considerably for many of the students, however, and a better condition of things began to exist in the department of physical culture. The college had discovered that the president, after all, did have some rights in the matter and did not intend to have them ignored.

So the fall passed on, and Edward was fairly into his year's work, every day of it now filled with some new experience. His literary work on the paper at this time began to absorb some of the best of his time. If he was very unpopular with one class of men in college, he was equally popular with an opposite group and was beginning to find compensation in the society of students who had so far been strangers to him. He began at this time to take a special pleasure in debates on current questions in the debating society. He soon came to be recognized as a good thinker and a careful speaker, not brilliant, but safe and exact.

It was not surprising, therefore, that by the end of November he was chosen by his society to lead the debate with the rival society on the question of the war in the Philippines. The question was, "Resolved, That the United States is justified in carrying on the present war in the Philippines." Edward was assigned the negative of the question. He had been hard at work on it for several weeks. During the time between the date of the debate and his assignment to the place as the society's debater a movement had been begun in the college by the Christian association, heartily seconded by the president, to increase the Christian life of the college. A prominent college evangelist had been called to conduct meetings for two weeks. These meetings were now in progress. Edward had been in to one or two of them. He was so far not much influenced by them.

He came up to his room one evening during the second week of these meetings. As he came in he found a letter in his box from Willis. He at once sat down at his table and began to open the letter, and as he did so he was conscious of a curious excitement in his mind over the coming debate on the question, the character of the religious meetings now being held in the college and the probable contents of Willis' letter. His mind still felt this suppressed excitement as he opened the letter and read it.

CHAPTER VII.

Willis began his letter by a description of some fighting on the main railroad line running out of Manila.

Talk about excitement—he went on. Football is nothing to it. We crossed the stream near Outawa and came pretty near being ambuscaded on the other side, for, after forcing our way through one of the meanest swamps you ever saw, where the mosquitoes were all on the side of the Filipinos, we suddenly came out of the brush upon the village. At first we thought it was deserted, everything was so quiet, but the minute we came out from cover we got it slap in the face from a lot of the natives, who were behind the huts, and then another volley from another lot the other side of a broad ditch just outside the village limits.

Half a dozen in our company fell, among them Perkins of the university. You remember him. Played in the Thanksgiving day game—the one you didn't play in. Well, I saw him dive head first to the ground, arms up and gun going every way, just as you see in pictures of battles. And I had a queer, sick sort of feeling, as if my turn would be next; but it wasn't, and then a thing happened that made me sicker yet. The natives came to the front of the huts in fives and threes, yelling and running toward the ditch. Some of them leaped across it and turned and fired from the other side. But the sickening part of it was the women and children. Of course we had orders not to shoot them, and we did our best to obey the order, but they were jumping in and out among the men, and they were all mixed up together on the other side of the ditch, firing like devils at us, and it would have been a miracle if none of the children and women had been hurt. Well, we drove for the ditch, every man of us yelling and firing like mad, and when we got up to it we discovered a great thicket of thorns and abatis work fringing the other side. And all the natives, men, women and children together, were crowded in a huddled up group alongside the ditch, hemmed in by the thicket on one side and the ditch on the other. You see, they had been expecting an attack from that side of the village instead of the rear, where we came up, and, being driven out of the village, they were caught in the trap of their own defenses.

We yelled to them to surrender, seeing they were cooped up like rats in a trap, but they blazed away with their guns and threw their long knives at us, and we had to shoot back in reply. One of the knives grazed my cheek and cut it open. I think I didn't realize what it was until I began to taste the blood running down into my mouth. The next thing I knew I was leaping over the ditch, and the natives were running up and down, some of them trying to jump the ditch again back toward our lines. But they were shot down like rabbits and tumbled into the ditch, until, in several places I saw afterward, our men walked straight across on the bodies, they filled the ditch up so level full.

This is not very pleasant reading, but you remember once you said that Sherman or somebody said that "war is hell." And I never realized the truth of it as I did that day. We may be fighting in the best cause that a Christian nation ever had, though I have my doubts of it. But that does not make the fighting any more refined or pleasant.

The one thing I started to tell you about this action was the incident of Barnes. You remember how kind hearted Barnes always was in college. The fellows used to laugh at the way he would take lame dogs and cats up to his room. Well, after the shooting was all over and we were taking breath to notice the results, there was Barnes sitting on the ground, wounded in the foot with a Mauser bullet. But he was not paying any attention to that. There was the dead body of a native woman lying half over the edge of the ditch, and it was impossible to tell from her position and her wound whether she had been shot by our men or her own. Anyhow, she was dead, and her baby, not more than 1½ years old, was tugging at the mother's arm and calling to her in her language.

I tell you the sight made me choke. Barnes was sitting there trying to get the baby to come to him. But every time he tried to coax the child away it struck at him and then turned and pulled its mother's arm again. The men began to gather around and look on. Barnes was crying like a baby himself, and every last man who came up and stood stock still by that dead mother gave a gulp and then went to pieces.

Well, I can't tell any more about that. We got the baby away after awhile, and Barnes, who was in the hospital, got the surgeon to take care of it. I hate to tell you the rest. The most terrific storm came up that night, and the rain flooded everything, including all the tents. The rains here are simply awful. For a tropical country, too, the cold of a night rain is often intense. In the morning the baby was found dead. The surgeon had his hands full, and more too. He hadn't had any sleep for several nights. The woman who was given charge of the baby slipped out of the tent and abandoned it. And I am afraid it is true that the baby was really drowned in the torrent that swept through the camp that night. We found the body, with others of the natives, on the edge of the river ravine in the morning. I do not think I ever saw Barnes more cut up over anything in my life. And yet, I suppose, it was the best thing that could happen, after all, seeing the mother was gone too.

That sounds more cold blooded than it is. But to tell the truth, chum, even with all these horrors I rather like the excitement and all. It is a tough life, and it may not last long, but somehow I seem to take to it. I think of you often and would give much to see you and the old room in Rankin hall. Remember me to all the fellows. If you want to mention my name to your sister, I would like it. I still have the book of poems. Your old chum, WILLIS.

Edward sat holding the letter and thinking of the contents for a long time. It was the second letter Willis had written him. In the first one he had described the life in barracks near Manila and some incidents in the city itself. There was one thing that Willis did not mention, but Mrs. Preston had written to Edward that the news had reached her that Willis was drinking again. The old habit was strong on him. And apparently the privations of the rough, coarse fare and camp were so many that when he was allowed to go into the city on leave he indulged in dissipation that was gradually putting its mark on him and changing him daily for the worse. This much Mrs. Preston confessed with sorrow and with a helpless sort of resignation as if to an inevitable fatality that moved Edward more than the most beseeching appeal.

He answered Willis' letter at once, remembering how long it took for a letter to reach him, and again urged him to leave the drink alone. In his letter he also told him that he should take the liberty of using a part of Willis' letter in the coming debate in open meeting of the societies. He did not mention Freeda's name nor make any reference to Willis' mention of it. Somehow he still had a shrinking from any thought of Freeda and Willis as possibly interested in each other. The whole subject was distasteful to him, and he avoided it.

By the time he had finished writing this letter it was nearly 8 o'clock. According to his regular, studious habits, he pulled his books down and opened one of them to begin his evening's study.

He had just begun to get fairly into the subject, when some one knocked.

"Come in!" cried Edward, with a feeling of annoyance at the interruption, and to his astonishment who should come in but Professor Clark.

Two of the professors had called on Edward since he had been in college, but each time it had been to see him about matters connected with his studies. Professor Clark lived outside the row of college professors' houses on the campus front, and Edward had so far not met him at all except in the classroom where at the beginning of the sophomore year he had gone into a division of the class in political economy. In this division he was just beginning to hear the lectures that had provoked the anger of Mr. Rankin. So far as he knew Clark he respected him, as the other students did. But he seemed to be a somewhat reserved man and lacking in sociability.

This fact made his present appearance all the more astonishing to Edward. He rose hastily and stammered out an invitation to his visitor to take a seat.

"I came in to ask you to go over to the meeting tonight," said the professor as he took the seat offered him.

"The—the meeting?" stammered Edward, amazed at the invitation.

"Yes. Mr. Vail, the evangelist, is doing a good work in the college. He is a very sensible, straightforward, Christian man, and the students ought to hear him as much as possible. I inquired about you from some of the men, and they said you had been out to the meetings only once or twice. So I thought I would call and ask you to go with me."

If the professor had come into the room and proposed to Edward that they go down and set fire to the chapel building, it is doubtful if Edward could have been more overwhelmed with astonishment. He had never heard of a professor taking any such interest in a student's religious welfare. That was not what the professors in college were for. A vague but growing idea began to dawn on Edward's mind that possibly the president had been doing some missionary work among the faculty. And yet there were an evident sincerity and frankness about Professor Clark's interest in him that were not assumed nor dictated by the desire of any one else.

"I was just beginning my evening study," began Edward slowly, but as he spoke he rose and reached after his hat.

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

✦ ✦ THREE COURSES. ✦ ✦

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

NORFOLK CITY AS A MISSION FIELD.

Dear Recorder.—The following excellent and elaborately prepared paper was sent recently by Mrs. M. C. Faville to each of the Methodist pastors of our city as material for a sermon on home missions. I send it with her permission to the Recorder, in the hope that wider circulation of its information may result in larger good. Its stimulating thought and its helpful and powerful facts may prompt the preparation of similar papers on our other Virginia cities. Mrs. Faville's untiring and successful labors in our midst praise her in the gates.

Yours truly, R. H. BENNETT.

NOTE OF TRANSMITTAL.

My Dear Brother,—I am glad to put into your possession the following statement of facts about Norfolk city as a mission field, and hope you will use it where it will do the most good. I have tried to leave out all opinions of my own, but one or two have crept in. Every statement of fact is derived from official sources, or from original investigations, and the few opinions are well supported by evidence in my possession. You may use any or all of what follows without fear of reputable contradiction.

Yours respectfully,

M. C. FAVILLE.

Home Mission Secretary for Norfolk District.

NORFOLK CITY.

Municipal Norfolk is bounded in by the Norfolk and Western Railway, Princess Anne avenue, etc., and the long curved water front on the Elizabeth river and its Eastern branch. As a body social, Norfolk also comprises the suburbs of Lambert's Point, Kensington and Park Place, Huntersville, Barboursville and East Brambleton. Lambert's Point has a silk mill, a stocking mill, a factory for manufacturing cotton underwear, and a silver-plating factory. There are railroad and factory employees, a few well-to-do truckers, the business people necessary to serve the community, and a few families of men employed in the city proper. There is room for much work among the factory people and the families of the poorer sort of laborers, attracted by the cheap rents. Kensington and Park Place have as residents well-to-do folks, who own the houses in which they live. They must come to town to church or else attend one in which the narrowest theology is the most evident lesson taught. Huntersville is another region of cheap rents. Many of the poorer people are employed in the basket and barrel factories. The wages are fair, but the work is trying, and the worst feature is the employment of many children. The haggard faces of women and children attest the arduousness of the labor. Barboursville is largely a negro suburb. The negroes take pride in sending their children to school; the very few among them who are educated seem glad to help the children up; nearly every church has a missionary society, whose membership is active in its ministry to the very poor and unconverted. The colored Baptist churches in the city support a missionary, whose expenses at the training school were paid by the women's societies, and who spends her days visiting from house to house among the ignorant and suffering, largely in the Fourth ward, of course. In the vicinity of the crossing of Princess Anne road and the Norfolk and Western Railway is a very poor quarter, too poor to have a name. Here may be found some of the professional beggars, a number of the families of women who go to the country in the summer and live in miserable shanties on or near the truck farms, and in winter manage to get the truckers to move them to town in order to get rid of them. Usually one or two houses filled with so-called gypsies may be found here. East Brambleton is a settlement of small property owners, and is supplied with religious teaching by McKendree church.

So much for the border land. Now as to the city proper: It is divided into six wards, having a total population of 46,624. The Fourth ward is largely colored, the First and Second include the down-town business quarter, the West End is in the Third, Brambleton is the Fifth, and Ghent and Atlantic City the Sixth. Geographically, the boundaries between the wards are sometimes difficult to trace, but the sociological differences are quite well marked. There were last year 125 licensed saloons in Norfolk, all of them in the First, Second and Fourth wards. There are twenty-seven churches, almost every one of them in the three wards which have no saloons or infamous houses. There are in a single group, the best known of its kind, some fifty infamous houses, occupied by 250 women, avowedly supporting themselves by a life of sin. These are also in the Second ward, but within five squares or less of five of the largest Protestant churches of Norfolk, having an aggregate membership of more than 3,000. Freemason street is practically the Protestant frontier of Norfolk, only two churches being farther down-town. The portion of the city included by Church and Queen streets, and extending to the water front, has no Protestant church at all. Here are the neglected classes, a growing menace to the neglecting ones about the churches at the other end of town.

Her geographical position makes Norfolk a catch-all of petty criminals and degenerates. We have an efficient and hard-worked police force. Last year 69 patrolmen made 7,109 arrests, an average of 103 to the man. That is a ratio of one arrest to 6.55 in the whole population. In New York city last year the ratio was 1 to 25.1; in Chicago 1 to 23.9; in Philadelphia 1 to 19.7; in Baltimore 1 to 16.7. The following statement for 1897 indicates that conditions are improving in the great cities:

Baltimore—The whole city, 1 to 14. Eastern Police District, 1 to 9.

Chicago—The whole city, 1 to 11. Second and Twenty-fifth Districts, 1 to 4.

New York—The whole city, 1 to 18. Sixth and Tenth Districts, 1 to 6.

Philadelphia—The whole city, 1 to 18. Second District, 1 to 13.

In our own city the ratio of arrests is increasing, and is now higher than the slum ratio of Baltimore or Philadelphia. In 1890 the population of Norfolk was 31,260, and the police made 2,641 arrests; in 1900 the population was 46,624, and the police made 7,109 arrests. While we made a gain of 45.9 per cent. in population, we gained 168 per cent. in legal offenses. Our legal offenders have increased 3.6 times as rapidly as our total population.

Norfolk has 32 churches, worth about $985,284.00 in money, with a membership of between fourteen and fifteen thousand. During the year 1898-1899 they raised $188,900.00 for all purposes. The liquor traffic of the city for the same year paid in taxes and fines $108,800.00, and the value of saloon property and fixtures was estimated at $942,000.00.

If the whole church membership of Norfolk resided within the municipality we should have a percentage of 28 professing Christians in each hundred inhabitants. So many members live outside the city limits that the proportion is probably less.

We have one church to 1,457 residents, a fair proportion for a city of this size. As cities grow the proportion of churches decreases. In Boston there was, in 1840, one Protestant church to every 1,228 souls; in 1890, one to every 2,581; in New York in 1840 one Protestant church to every 1,992 souls, in 1890 one to every 4,361. Our larger cities in general had in 1890 only half as many Protestant churches to the people as they had fifty years before.

The factories, which are justly our pride, will be to our social disadvantage if we do not soon meet intelligently the demands their employees make upon us. It is claimed by some people, who ought to know, that one reason why New England operators are building factories in the South is because the lawful hours for daily work are longer, and little children may lawfully be employed. It is at least true that they oppose legislation looking toward a shorter day and a higher age limit. The factory law of our own State says no woman, and no child under fourteen, may lawfully be employed more than ten hours of each twenty-four. A visit to any factory will show the observer many little ones with pitifully old faces. The child who works ten hours a day does not want to play if he had time. The workers in the mission to the Berkley cotton mills say they cannot have morning Sunday school because that is the only time the weary little factory children can have to sleep as long as they like. Degenerates come by way of the factory. In the country a poor man must work steadily to support his family; he moves to town to the factory, and all hands can work. The frequent result is that "dad" does nothing but draw and spend his children's pay. Some women, the life is early wearied out of them, feel that they have worked hard enough for one lifetime, and become pensioners upon the bounty of the foolish. The other extreme is this: In a community in which idleness is scorned, the workers continue in the factory. They only know how to earn money and to spend it; how can they know there is anything of value except dollars? Girls who have had work to read a newspaper or to write their own names earn from twenty-fifty to fifty dollars a month. They do not need money, but their lives are narrow.

In the churchless quarter of Norfolk many types of the poor and degenerate are to be found. There are some streets upon which all, or nearly all, the houses are good, and almost every street has many comfortable homes. The majority of the people are poor artisans or laborers or idlers. The houses of brick or wood, are cheaply built, and usually a six room house shelters two families, one up-stair and one down. There are many lone women who live in single rooms, especially over the stores along Church street. In a very few places rear tenements may be found. From Church street to Mahone's Lake, between H and Bermuda streets, is perhaps the poorest section, and one which nearest approaches the true slum in character. It has the whirlpool tendency of the slum to suck those who come near into its depths. There are a very few people of real refinement who have managed to live the poor, narrow life and yet not contract its evils. They must be found by patient visiting from house to house, and their acquaintance cultivated with tact, if anything is to be done for them. They will not come out to gatherings of the neighbors, or in any way force their needs upon strangers. There are a few Italian property owners who are making money, and who keep their children in the public schools. They wish to be helped to learn American ways, and it is to our interest that they be well taught. As they earn homes in a better quarter they move away and rent the old houses. There are many laborers and the rougher sorts of artisans. When the father is sober and industrious and the mother is cheerful and thrifty the family is reasonably comfortable. They cannot afford to do more than keep their children in the public school, and are very glad to have some training provided of a sort for which they cannot pay. They know it is better for the children to have wholesome pleasure or instructive work in a clean room than to be out on the street with the evil-minded. They will meet half way any movement for the uplift of the neighborhood. Of course, there is the industrious man with the untidy, idle wife, a sort of woman more disagreeable in such a home than in one in which her faults may be somewhat screened. The women with drunken husbands abound. They are glad indeed of any help given the children, or any little attention which brightens their own lives. There are cases of men and women of fair character and ability, who have unfortunately married degenerates, and have hidden ones. Their families away here to settle into the slum. There are a few women with families apparently all their own, a flock of fatherless children living in the street which is often cleaner than the house and growing up idle and vicious. They make one wish it were lawful to take them from the mother and bring them up at public expense. The children are the most helpful or the most threatening element as we help them to learn decent ways or let them grow up into idle criminals. With them it may be very largely as benevolent people choose, for their parents are in every case willing they should come to classes and entertainments prepared for them. The boys are uncouth, almost all of them swear on all occasions, and many of them steal anything they can carry off. Many women and little girls swear as easily as the boys and men, and a number of girls are going to ruin. It is too late for the fifteen-year-olds, but the little girls might be helped. Girls of fifteen go from home and stay one or two nights, and their mothers find them always at the same place. Not a week passes that the chief of police is not called upon by the captain of some small vessel lying at the wharf to send an officer to remove two or more such girls, who will not leave at his command. They can only be sent to their mothers, and in too many cases are only doing as these mothers did before them. As they grow older they recruit the "street walkers," who do more mischief among young men than the women in the houses on Avon street. What is done for the girls of the slums must be well begun before they are ten years old.

CITY MISSION SETTLEMENT.

In October, 1901, the Board of City Missions opened its house on Virginia street, between Walke and Reilly streets. It is well located for work in the region just described. We took such a tenement (three small rooms) as is usually rented to a family, and the landlord prepared it for us as he would have done for any tenant. It is kept clean and warm, but is furnished very plainly, our wish being to show that a house may be decent and comfortable, though poor. The missionary keeps the house open two hours each morning to receive visitors, either her immediate neighbors or people interested in the work. The women often come in for help and cheer, and some of the many children are always in evidence. Two afternoons each week the little girls meet to sew. The helpers are most of them young women, of whom the little ones are very fond. Thursday evening the boys meet for instruction and entertainment.

On Friday evenings the mothers meet. In the beginning they were invited to come in with their work and sit around the lamp while the missionary read to them or some one talked. Now, by their own request, they have a religious service each week. On Saturday morning the boys make baskets and mats, a sort of work which is very popular among them. The missionary visits among the neighbors as any good neighbor might. When they are sick she nurses them, and when the little ones get hurt she cares for their small injuries. It was necessary, first of all, to make the acquaintance and win the confidence of the neighbors. We have tried to go forward whenever a way opened. Active work among the children seems most needed, after that something for the mothers. The greater part of our neighbors claim to be Church people of some kind, but they do not often go to church. It is rarely that any of our people need food or money; now and then a child or an elderly woman needs clothing. The missionary never gives without investigation. The people have some money; they frequently go to the "Granby" Theatre, our next door neighbor chaperoning a large company of children almost every Saturday. They need to learn how to live and to be taught the necessity of being good.

Our expenses are about $50.00 per month, our assured income from regular monthly subscriptions about $15.00. If we cannot add to the supply in our treasury before the end of January we shall be obliged to close the mission for lack of funds. We have received money from the Junior League of McKendree, Epworth and LeKies churches and from individuals, both members and non-members of churches. There is no doubt now as to the need of such work as ours in the locality we have chosen, and the people we would help are glad to have us. We have now sixty-five people under instruction, and the possibilities of the work grow greater every day. There is more to be done in that quarter than women alone can do. Our work for the women and children seems the best way to introduce a better way of living, but we cannot keep it up much longer without stronger financial backing. It should be regarded as only a beginning and should be fostered into a settlement that would help many of all the needed classes. If it becomes necessary to let our missionary go at the end of January, there will be a great waste of strength and means. It takes time to find a woman trained for such work. The graduates of Scarritt for this year are already spoken for. There are more places than girls to fill them; we should have to wait long before getting another missionary when we were ready for her, and when she came she would be a stranger, and would need to use much precious time in making acquaintance with her new field.

CONTRASTING DISTRICTS.

The part of the Sixth ward lying between Colley avenue and the water is made up almost entirely of working people—that is, factory operatives, laborers of various kinds, salespeople, clerks, etc. There are very few people who ever need material aid, and only two or three wealthy men. When the census of 1900 was taken, there were 522 families in the district, aggregating 1,957 individuals. The census enumerator, going from house to house with eyes open to see a good many things she was not required to enter upon her Government blanks, found among white and colored families only one case of poverty, apparently abject. There is work for every one, and every one works and pays his way. The pastor of LeKies church will witness that he has in his flock a very large proportion of contributing members. The census taker found in this district but one man in any way connected with the liquor business, he being a bookkeeper in a wholesale liquor house. There has not been a drinking place in the ward for eight years. In October of 1900 we made what we called a house to house canvass of a portion of the Sixth ward, visiting the people whose church associations we did not know. The territory embraced the ground from North street south to the water, following Front to the new bridge. Only white families were visited. The work was done by assigning to each woman a block or blocks with which she was acquainted, so it might be accomplished as easily as possible. There were about three hundred families in the group. We found but three in which neither parent was a professing Christian, and none of which the children did not attend Sunday school with fair regularity. In some cases the parents did not belong to churches in Norfolk, having recently moved in from other towns, or from the country. There were some who had been resident some time, but had not become members of a church within their reach. This is a danger to the newcomer which only faithful district visiting can guard against; when he moves to town he is likely to let his Churchmembership lapse if some one does not watch him. We found that our local ministers were very faithful in visiting, less than twenty families reporting themselves unvisited. In this section there are few, if any, petty crimes. On warm days and evenings the streets are noisy, for there are many children, and they play games together. The boys are full of pranks, as healthy boys always are, but they do not do malicious mischief. The big ones do not hurt the little ones, nor do any of them torment small animals and fowls. No stones and shells are thrown to break windows; the neighborhood is quiet and all asleep by 10 o'clock. During the summer the windows and wooden doors of our house are not closed by day or night, the wire screens being sufficient protection, and lone women are safe from annoyance by day or night. The section referred to is like a quiet village of hard-working people. Not more than a dozen houses have more than one family each, although some of the boarding houses for mill girls are crowded. Changes of residence are not frequent, usually being made to secure a location in some way more desirable, very rarely to avoid paying rent.

The social conditions about our mission settlement are a decided contrast to the happy neighborhood above described. The territory visited embraces: All of Virginia street, two and one-half squares; lower end of Walke, 5 houses; lower end of Reilly, 2 houses; Cleveland street, 1 house (store).

Number of grown persons.....	100
Number of children .....	95
Total .....	195
Number of families .....	35
Settlement people enrolled at mission house, children .....	60
Women .....	10
Number enrolled from other streets .....	15
Total .....	85

Church attendance (a generous estimate), forty, a large majority of them Roman Catholics.

Six of the heads of families, 14.3 per cent. are habitual drunkards. One at least of these keeps his wife in terror, and another one pawned for drink the coat the missionary gave him when cold weather came, and afterward disposed of his one change of shirt for the same purpose.

There are in the territory three women of loose character. There is another whom we are morally certain has within a year acted as procuress for a man in Portsmouth, although we cannot get legal evidence against her.

Since October 15th there have been twenty changes of residence among the settlement people, three families having moved out of the territory, and six new ones having moved in. The other moves have simply been a shifting from one house to another near by, one family having moved three times.

Quarrels among the neighbors occur every day. Children and grown people commonly steal, lie and swear.

The average attendance at the mission rooms is good, and although there has been some serious disorder, the deportment is as good as we could reasonably expect. Just now an underwitted degenerate boy, a grandson of the suspected procuress, is trying to terrorize the small boys into staying away, but we think a few wise visits from the missionary will abate that nuisance. The old woman has been seriously ill, and the missionary has faithfully visited her and carried her dainties to eat. In return, she tells that the missionary brings her promised oranges in a bag, and carries them away again.

There is one case of serious overcrowding, three families of three members each living in a flat of three rooms.

SUE BENNETT SCHOOL.

To one who has lived among the mountain whites a visit to this institution reveals some things which cannot well be told in an official report. The principal has the appearance of a good business man trained to military step and neatness. He is most unselfish, having paid his house rent for years, and enduring the inconvenience of living off the campus, though a home was guaranteed him in addition to his salary. By his own request his house has waited until a dormitory was built for the girls, and a beginning made upon one for the boys. Now his home is rising upon the foundation laid for it several years ago. I have never met anywhere a body of teachers so devoted and unselfish.

The girls' dormitory is a plain building of two stories and a basement. The inner walls are ceiled with yellow poplar, and decorated with a few inexpensive pictures. The floors are covered with rag carpets, or rugs woven in the native hand looms, and the chairs are the splint-bottom variety. The sleeping rooms have a narrow wire cot for each girl. In the big sitting room, in contrast to this mountain plainness, stands Miss Sue Bennett's beautiful Chickering piano in its elegantly carved square case. After her death the family gave it to the school.

The school buildings stand upon a hill to one side of the county town of London, Ky. The curriculum is to the common schools of the town and the better ones of the country about what

LESSON II, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 13.

Text of the Lesson, Acts ix, 32-43.
Memory Verses, 40-42—Golden Text,
Acts ix, 34—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

32 He came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.

This is written of Peter as he passed from place to place on his Master's business feeding and caring for the sheep and the lambs (John xxi, 15-17; 1 Pet. v, 1-4), as he had been commissioned to do. In Acts x, 38, we read that Jesus of Nazareth, anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power, went about doing good and healing all the oppressed of the devil, for God was with Him. If we will receive that which is written in John xvii, 18; xx, 21; 1 John ii, 6, we cannot but believe that He expects each of His redeemed to live the same life that He lived.

33, 34 Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole; arise and make thy bed.

Finding one who had kept his bed eight years, being sick with palsy, he thus addressed him, and immediately he was whole, for Jesus Christ at the right hand of the Father is the very same compassionate, all powerful Saviour as when on earth He went about healing the sick (Heb. viii, 8), and His redeemed ones are here to make that great fact manifest.

35. And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him and turned to the Lord.

The Lord saw that in the healing of Aeneas He would be glorified and that many would thus be led to turn to Him for their own good and for His glory. While I believe it is a high and holy and gracious privilege to trust the Lord for the body as well as the soul, I cannot sympathize with those who consign all drugs and doctors to the devil, nor can I believe that health in this mortal body is more important than glorifying God.

36, 37. Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha.

She, like her Lord, lived for others and for the good which He might be pleased to accomplish through her, and in her active, self denying life God was manifest. Some only talk of what they would do if they could, but this woman did what she could, the Lord working through her. In the midst of her busy life sickness came, and the enemy, death, was permitted to touch her, and she one day found herself in perfect health and in the vigor of a life she had never known before, absent from the body, present with the Lord, experiencing the gain of those who enter upon the "very far better." See II Cor. v, 8; Phil. i, 21, 23, R. V.

38, 39. Lydda being near to Joppa and the disciples at Joppa, having heard of the Lord working through Peter at Lydda, they send for him, urging him to come quickly to them, which he did, and he soon found himself in the midst of a lot of weeping widows. We do not read that they talked of her present happiness and rest from her labors and their joy because of her promotion to the immediate presence of her Lord, yet I have been many a time in homes of mourning where these were the topics, and there was no desire to have the loved one back again even though the hearts ached and the tears would come because of the loneliness.

40. But Peter put them all forth and kneeled down and prayed.

So did our Lord in the case of the ruler's daughter (Mark v, 40). I expect that Peter, as he communed with God, would inquire as to the will of God in this matter and whether it might be for the glory of God to have Dorcas return to the mortal body for a season. He must have received some assurance from God as to His will, for, turning to the body and calling her name, she opened her eyes, and, seeing Peter, she sat up.

41. And he gave her his hand and lifted her up and when he had called the saints and widows presented her alive.

So Dorcas came back from the rest and the glory to sojourn again in a mortal body for the good of others, and the selfish receivers of her labors were doubtless glad to have her go at it again for their sakes, but whatever she did it was for Jesus' sake (II Cor. iv, 11), not for their sakes. Should we find ourselves suddenly in His presence and in the enjoyment of all that can be enjoyed apart from the body and be asked by Him to return to earth again for a season, for His sake, that He might be further glorified in us here, I doubt not but His grace would be sufficient to enable us to say, "Yes, Lord, anything, anywhere, for Thee (II Cor. ix, 8).

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa, and many believed in the Lord.

Thus in these two cases of God working through Peter one result was that many in each place believed in the Lord. In the case of many sick ones who desire health and claim, as they say, the result of the prayer of faith, there is often no desire that others should be led to believe in the Lord or that they themselves should live henceforth wholly for Him, but merely a desire for their own personal comfort and to be rid of their affliction. We must not sit in judgment upon God, nor may we even judge people (Rom. xiv, 13; I Cor. iv, 5), but we may be perfectly sure that the Judge of all the earth always does right (xviii, 25, of Genesis).

43 He tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon, a tanner.

Healing the sick or raising the dead or simply tarrying with Simon, the tanner, God was glorified in Peter. He does not want work so much as fruit, and there may be much fruit when one seems compelled to live in apparent idleness. Doubtless the Lord Jesus glorified the Father in all the thirty years at Nazareth as well as in the few years of His public ministry.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 13, "Giving: Its Laws, Its Reflex Influence"—Text, II Cor. viii, 1-5; I Cor. xvi, 1, 2.

"Lay by in store." That means reserve in a special fund. Keep separate from the money used for ordinary expenses. All we have comes from God's blessing and should be used according to His will, but there are different kinds of expenses and various styles of needs. It is necessary to have clothing, but it is not wise to take from the amount needed for necessary food in order to get more showy clothes. Love to God and our fellow men requires for its growth in us that we give of money and time and care for worship of God and relief of the poor. Benevolence of spirit is cultivated by beneficence of the hand. We must give to others to really feel for and with them. The sorrow you feel for another's trouble is well measured by the amount of help you are willing to give to relieve him. How much are you sorry?

There is no substitute for a special fund. Some refuse to put aside any particular sum or proportion of their income, pleading various excuses. But an increasing number, especially of our young people, are learning the law of giving. Many reserve one-tenth. This is a good proportion, but should not be made into an inflexible rule. Some cannot in justice to other causes give so much; others cannot in justice to God and their own souls make it so little. The basal law is, "As God hath prospered him." Each one should settle with the Lord this matter of proportion. It will probably vary at different times. Some have in early life settled three points: (1) The proportion of the present income to be given to God's special work and (2) the future proportion if greater prosperity shall come; (3) the sum beyond which they will never accumulate property, all increase above a certain amount to be given directly to the service of the Lord.

Such settlement leaves the mind clear and allows all energies to be given without distraction to the real work of life. It forestalls the appeals of avarice and avoids conflicts when the call of distress comes.

The clear duty is for every one to fix this matter calmly as to the part of his income which shall be put aside for use in helping the cause of Christ directly.

One of the greatest benefits of such decision is the effect upon the giver. A person who has never tried it cannot realize the joy that comes from ability to give to a worthy cause because a sum has been accumulated for the purpose. Oftentimes a person hears an appeal and wants to help, but is painfully conscious that to do so would take money which really ought not to be so given. Some are influenced under powerful persuasion to give more than is right, and they afterward regret it and in future are on their guard against all such appeals. All this is avoided if one has a fund, however small, on which to draw. Then there arises a lively interest in seeking the most worthy causes on which to bestow one's gifts. No other investments are followed with such keen interest. In all ways it pays to follow the Bible law.

"Losing the Way."

To the soul conscious of the perils that are around it how sweet the words of Jesus, "I am the way!" This means a great deal more than "I will show you the way." The best compass that was ever placed beside the captain and the best chart that ever lay upon the table in the captain's cabin would be of little value to the landsman. The soul, crippled by sin and weakened by indulgence, needs something more than knowledge. He who sees in Jesus only "a teacher come from God" sees not what the world most needs, a power outside ourselves that makes for righteousness. The soul needs to find One who is Himself the Way. This is only true of Him who takes upon Him our weaknesses and bears our infirmities and so, by His almighty power and heavenly grace, brings us to our desired haven. Not "I will show you the way," but "I am the way," is the joyful message of Jesus to a lost world.—Evangelist.

The Sufficiency of Christ.

No soul can ever be really satisfied until it has given up all hope of adding anything to Christ and has come to the place where He alone is enough—He, himself, just as He is, without the addition of feelings or emotions or doctrines or experiences or revelations or of any other thing, either inward or outward. All other things change or fail, and the soul finds in them no permanent rest, but Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever, and the soul that rests on Him alone can never be moved.—Hannah W. Smith in Christian Work.

Life and Religion.

Life is a great exchange of ideas, hopes, principles, affections, revenges, joys and sorrows. It is largely a retail business. We learn the alphabet letter by letter and word by word. We come to understand the principles of government by beginning with that which is primary. The great truths of religion are not received in bulk, but by the addition of one ray of divine light and then another and still another until the circle of truth is complete.—Philadelphia Methodist.

The Soul Is Free.

By life's unresting sea a shell
 Outgrown and gladly cast away;
 Yes, that is all we mourn to part;
 Death cannot touch the better part;
 Death only stills the hand and heart;
 The soul is free.

—Frances Forrester.

A POWERFUL WEAPON

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MOVEMENT
 AS AN AID TO TEMPERANCE.

Even Though Little May Be Said on the Curse of the Saloon Every Lecture Goes to Undermine That Baneful Institution.

It is a good sign, the new interest which one sees expressing itself in many ways on the part of some of the colleges and universities in the actual conditions, industrial, economic, social, moral, of the "common people," says a writer in The Union Signal. At the last convocation of the University of Chicago the orator, Dr. Gregory, a professor in one of the German universities, took for his theme the mutual relations of education and labor. Some time some great American university will get the sense of fitness and along with it the courage to choose for its honored spokesman some one who will speak as frankly and as directly of the relation of the university to the cause of temperance.

The motive at organization of the university extension movement, started in this country about ten years ago, cannot be too warmly commended. If it did not aim nominally at temperance, the whole influence of it was such as to make for temperance. Although little may have been said in any of the "extension" lectures on the overshadowing curse of the saloon, every influence of the new educational movement went to undermine the curseful institution by filling the minds of people with better thoughts and aims and hopes.

It is therefore of interest to note how this finely humane university extension scheme has worked and what it has done. At its inception no one welcomed it with more avidity than did Miss Willard, who saw at once its possibilities in fortifying the home against the saloon.

It had been tried in England, where it had captivated the philanthropic imagination of John Ruskin, Arnold Joynt, and others imbued with the passion of the new nobility of service. Mr. W. T. Stead's eager vision saw in university extension "the university on wheels." George William Curtis spoke of the development of this movement and its success as the most significant fact in the modern history of education, and Professor Palmer of Harvard, writing in The Atlantic, declared his apprehension lest the new movement might be so attractive as even to interfere with the regular university work.

"Any movement," he said, "which seeks to withdraw a professor's attention from his immediate duties and induces him to put his soul elsewhere inflicts on the community a serious damage. No concert of intellectual stimulus furnished to little companies here and there can atone for the loss that must fall on education when college teachers pledge themselves to do serious work in other places than in their own libraries and lecture rooms."

Others, on the contrary, found exactly in this aspect of the new extension movement one of the best things about it—compelling the college teacher to live in a wider world than his own library and classroom. It was indeed a magnificent idea, that of Professor Moulton—"university education for the whole nation, organized upon itinerant lines."

The grand educational scheme has had ten years' experiment. What has been the success of it? Professor Palmer's fear, at all events, has not been realized. It certainly has not hurt the college or university to be reminded of what the higher and the highest education owes to the common people. Professor Palmer himself gave in Tremont temple, Boston, last winter an "extension" course of eight lectures on "The Nature of Goodness," doing so with as much benefit to his own Harvard as to the larger public.

Of course the greatest hindrance to the new movement thus far has been the difficulty in finding the right men for it. Lecturers of Professor Moulton's genius, knowledge and unique training are not common anywhere. The extension lecturer has to create his own particular constituency. He must beat his own reveille, and the common people will respond or not as they see fit.

No Place For Drink's Victims.

With the exception of the Washingtonian home there is not an institution in Chicago which is willing to take within its doors a man suffering from delirium tremens and nurse him back to health. And usually the Washingtonian home is so crowded with regular patients that there is no room within for the chance sufferer picked up on the streets, although, indeed, when there is room this institution receives the man wrecked by drink.

A Hinderer of Work.

Alcohol is not only not a helper of work, but it is a certain hinderer of work, and every man who comes to the front of a profession in London is marked by this one characteristic, that the more busy he gets the less alcohol he takes, and his excuse is, "I am very sorry, but I cannot take it and do my work."—Late Sir Andrew Clark, M. D., Physician to the Queen.

King Khama a Wise Man.

Though heavy pressure is brought upon him to promote the sale of intoxicants in his kingdom, King Khama, the noble chief of the Bamangwatos in South Africa, still persists in his refusal to allow the deadly traffic to be carried on.

The Evil of Tippling.

A man may drink in such a way as never to feel consciously excited or embarrassed, yet ruin his health and cut short his days more speedily and surely than the man who is dead drunk every Saturday night.—Dr. Greenfield.

Those are the best Christians who are more careful to reform themselves than to censure others.—Fuller.

It's easier to run into debt than it is to crawl out.

If you give your life to serving and loving Christ one of the blessings of your consecration to Him will be that in Him will open up to you as a pattern your possible self as God sees it; then life will have but one purpose and wish for you, which will be that you may realize that idea of yourself which you have seen in Christ.—Phillips Brooks.

ON THE WING AGAIN. (Continued from first page.)

be deplorable, not merely leaving a permanent blot on the Church, but fixing a precedent according to which ecclesiastical authority can override the conscience of the Church, and fasten upon it whatever they please. The first thing the General Conference ought to do, as soon as it is organized, is to order the printing in the "Daily Advocate" of the entire congressional proceedings in connection with the collection of the claim. This would be very hard on Dr. Hoss, who has resolutely excluded the whole subject from the Christian Advocate; but it would be fair to both sides. The shrewd "policy of silence" the Book Committee have steadfastly followed, and the subserviency of many of the Church papers to their will, have kept the Church largely in the dark. I was talking not long ago with a lay delegate, an honest, substantial man, who thinks the Christian Advocate is almost next to the Bible, and he said: "Tell me something about that war claim business." There will be more there like him. Print the whole thing, from the "Congressional Record" in the Daily Advocate, and do it at the start. It would be a good test of the question, anyhow. If those who want something done are not able to carry through such an obviously just and honorable measure as that, it is useless to try to do anything. The time is nearly here, and Southern Methodism never faced a graver crisis. May the right triumph.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

This body met in Baltimore at Trinity church on Wednesday, March 26th. Some notes are given, taken from the "Sun":

One of the most important matters before the Conference—the election of delegates to the General Conference, which will meet at Dallas, Texas, during May—was taken up yesterday morning. The Baltimore Conference is entitled to five ministerial and five lay delegates, each body voting for its own representatives. Two ballots were taken for the ministerial delegates, but only two members of the Conference received votes sufficient to elect.

Rev. Mr. Denny received 113 votes and Dr. Whisner 95. These were elected on the first ballot, and on the second ballot there was no election. It is understood that not a few members of the Conference feel that the time has come for a change in the personnel of the ministerial delegates, and several ministers have expressed themselves as being in favor of rotation in electing delegates to the General Conference. Some opposition has also developed to sending presiding elders.

Among those receiving a number of votes on the first and second ballots, but who failed to get the required number, 81, were: Rev. J. S. Hutchinson, 50, 59; Rev. J. A. Kern, 60, 60; Rev. B. F. Bond, 42, 44; Rev. H. P. Hamill, 65, 69; Rev. J. A. Anderson, 44, 50; Rev. J. W. Duffey, 48, 49; Rev. David Bush, 43, 31; Rev. F. J. Prettyman, 36.

LAY DELEGATES ELECTED.

Two ballots were necessary to elect lay delegates. They are:

M. L. Walton, a lawyer, of Woodstock, Va., and the author of the Walton law.

Arthur B. Pugh, an assistant attorney in the Interior Department, Washington, D. C.

T. P. Fishburne, banker and merchant, Roanoke, Va.

A. E. Huddleston, wholesale lumber dealer, Lewisburg, West Virginia.

C. E. Muller, Arlington, Md.

Alternates were elected as follows:

B. H. Hiner, District Attorney, Franklin, West Virginia.

E. S. Conrad, a lawyer, Harrisonburg, Va.

C. W. Prettyman, a lawyer, Rockville, Md.

Four ballots for the remaining three clerical delegates to the General Conference had to be taken before all were selected. The clerical delegation will be composed as follows:

Rev. Collins Denny, a professor at the Vanderbilt University.

Rev. Dr. P. H. Whisner, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, Louisville, Ky.

Rev. H. P. Hamill, Presiding Elder of the Baltimore District.

Rev. J. S. Hutchinson, Presiding Elder of the Lewisburg, District.

Others receiving votes, but not sufficient to elect were: Rev. J. W. Duffey, 31, 66, 47, 46; Rev. J. A. Kern, 35, 36, 14, 9; Rev. B. F. Bond, 30, 35, 25; Rev. David Bush, 25, 32, 11; Rev. J. E. Armstrong, 19, 16, 12; Rev. F. J. Prettyman, 34, 36, 14, 9.

As the clouds rolled away during the morning, and the sun shone warm and bright, the church was filled rapidly, and by 11 o'clock all the seats in the body of the church and the gallery were taken, and many persons were standing in the aisles. Ladies were greatly in the majority, and the bright colors of their spring bonnets and new gowns gave to the rear of the church a pretty setting. As the number of visitors grew large, the hum of conversation increased, until it was with difficulty that the business of the Conference could be carried on. Bishop W. A. Candler was presiding, and several times had to rap long and hard for order. He requested all to take seats, but as all could not find places to sit down, he said: "If you can't sit anywhere else, sit on the floor." Some of the men did.

Whether Bishop Candler saw the storm brewing he did not say, but he seemed glad to turn over the gavel to Bishop Galloway, upon whose gallantry the ladies imposed. Louder and louder grew the hum of voices, until the speakers could not be heard twenty feet from where they stood.

Pounding on the table for order, Bishop Galloway said: "You are the most social people I ever saw." Then, perhaps, fearing that the sternness of his voice had belied the compliment conveyed in the words, he added: "I notice some of the brethren are making the ladies talk. They don't want to do it."

There was a hush for a few moments, and then the conversation grew as animated as before. As some one made a motion, Bishop Galloway, striking the table hard with the gavel, exclaimed: "No; we won't do anything until this noise stops. If there is not less noise, I suggest that we hold an executive session." Even this suggestion to clear the church of all but members of the Conference had little effect, and the hum of conversation kept up more or less until the Conference adjourned.

GRANTED SUPERANNUATED RELATIONS.

Four ministers, at their own request, were granted superannuated relations. They are:

Rev. Thomas E. Carson, pastor of the church at Vinton, Va., who has been a member of the Conference for forty-nine years, having been admitted with Bishop A. W. Wilson, Dr. J. S. Gardner, and Dr. J. E. Armstrong, asked for a superannuated relation because of physical disabilities. Mr. Carson was much affected by the request, as he spoke of his many experiences.

Rev. Dr. Rumsey Smithson, pastor of Trinity church, Roanoke, Va.

Rev. Dr. John P. Hyde, formerly president of the Valley Female College, Winchester, Va.

Rev. J. C. Sedwick, pastor of the church at Rileyville, Va.

Dr. Smithson was admitted to the Conference in 1856. Dr. Hyde is one of the best-known educators in Virginia. He entered the ministry forty-five years ago, and thirty-three years were devoted to educational work. He resigned from the presidency of the Valley Female College last June, in which position he served twenty years. He stated that the last year was the most successful in the history of the institution, and that among the members of the graduating class were daughters of the ladies whom he had previously taught. Dr. Hyde served as a chaplain throughout the civil war, and was twice wounded, once, it was feared, fatally.

Rev. J. R. Tillery, against whom charges were made at the last session of Conference, when his Presiding Elder arrested his name in answer to the question, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" was located, which means that he is no longer a member of the Conference.

Mr. Tillery served a year and four months at Laurel, in the Baltimore District, and was then assigned to a charge in the Moorefield District. It was explained that Mr. Tillery's official administration had been such as to render him useless in the Conference. Presiding Elder Anderson, of the Baltimore District, seconded the motion of Presiding Elder Ball that Mr. Tillery be located. Rev. W. G. Hammond inquired: "Do I understand that this motion involves the moral character of the brother?"

"It means," said Dr. Ball, "that it is not adapted to our work."

"His character is not passed," said the Bishop, "and he is located."

A long debate over the resolution to change the time of meeting of the Conference from spring to fall and voting for the remaining clerical delegates to the General Conference took up nearly all of the session of the Conference.

After all the talk on the subject the Conference voted to meet in the spring. A substitute to the resolution for a fall meeting, providing that the Conference assemble on the fourth Wednesday of March, was carried by a small majority. Mr. M. L. Walton, a lay delegate and a lawyer, of Woodstock, Va., was not satisfied with a viva voce vote, and called for the ayes and nays. The request resulted in a vote of 113 for the substitute and 88 against it.

Some humorous and sharp retorts were made during the debate on the question, and the Conference was several times convulsed with laughter.

Presiding Elder J. W. Duffey, of Washington, made a strong speech in favor of the change to the fall. He said that the Conference collections are usually taken up during the last quarter of the year, which includes January, February, and March, and he held that the past winter, when there were but three fair Sundays from the end of December to the middle of March, was not exceptional; that sickness and even death had resulted as a consequence of moving from one charge to another in the spring; that it would be more easy to entertain the Conference in the fall than in the spring, and that the people have more money in the fall than in the spring. From the standpoint of sentiment, he said he had the greatest respect for the fathers of Methodism, but that members of the Conference would be unworthy of their great work if, realizing that the fathers had made a mistake in selecting spring as the time of meeting, they would be unwilling to vote for a change.

Presiding Elder H. P. Hamill, of the Winchester District, was opposed to a change. He said he would speak only from the point of view of the preacher's salary, claiming that Dr. Duffey had not touched on that point.

"Why," exclaimed Dr. Duffey, "that was my strongest point."

Dr. Hamill: "I didn't hear any reference to it."

Dr. Duffey: "You ought to keep your ears open, then."

Dr. Hamill then proceeded to tell how it would be better for the preacher's salary if no change were made. "The collections in the spring," he said, "are not over half as large as they are in the fall."

"That is the very reason why we should change," put in Dr. Duffey.

Dr. Hamill said he did not see it that way, and started to tell how he had frequently left Conference to go on a new charge with less than $100 in his pocket.

"You were fortunate," put in a voice.

Mr. C. M. Armstrong and Rev. Col-ling Denny spoke against a change, and Rev. S. G. Ferguson argued in favor of it.

Bishop Charles B. Galloway, the presiding Bishop, preached and officiated at Trinity church in the ordination of deacons. Bishop Galloway also ordained the elders at St. Paul's, while Bishop W. A. Candler preached. Those ordained were:

Deacon—B. D. Harrison, Bethel, Va.
Local Deacons—James H. Haley, Woodstock, Va.; Charles W. Stump, Stanesville, W. Va., and George W. Yost, New Creek, W. Va.

Elders—Grayson D. Kidney, Eagle Rock, Va.; Henry W. Burrus, Easton, Md., and Seymour Grady, Rockbridge, Va.

Local Elders—Frederick O. Stier, Washington; Benjamin A. Shreeve, Sterling, Va., and Louis S. Rudisill, Catawba, Va.

It is doubtful if Trinity church ever before held so many people as it did at the 11 o'clock service. The Conference lovefeast began at 9:30 o'clock, and by 10 o'clock all the seats in the body of the church were taken. The influx continued, and an hour later at least 400 people were standing in the aisles and the rear of the church. Some of the ministers gave up their seats, and went on the platform and around the pulpit. Every available inch of space was occupied, and still more kept crowding into the edifice, until the aisles were filled to the front doors. All the presiding elders and many members of the Conference were present.

Bishop Galloway's text was from the second chapter of the Second Epistle of Timothy, as follows: "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal. The Lord knoweth them that are His." The Bishop's sermon was followed with the closest attention by the large congregation, and his touching references to Paul in the Roman prison and the recital of several pathetic incidents in the lives of early Christians brought tears to the eyes of many. Bishop Galloway has gained the reputation of being one of the most eloquent men in his Church, and his strong and touching sermon amply sustained this reputation. In part, he said:

"This is the last of the prison epistles of St. Paul, and is, so to speak, his last testament to the Church. In it we have a pathetic picture of an old man in a Roman prison, certain of the coming death, and yet forgetful of self and thinking only of the Church. He recounts the heresies which are rife in the Church, the infidelity of those in whom he had trusted, and yet amid all the gloom and doubts about him he concludes with the words of our text, 'Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure.'

"In this connection there are two thoughts which I want to suggest. In the first place, I am reminded of the fact that the favorite figures of a writer are an index to his character. St. Paul's favorite figures were those pertaining to architecture and military life. He talks of foundations and soldiers, of cornerstones and swords, and these show the aggressiveness of his character. Following him, we can fancy that we can hear the hammer stroke and the bugle call. His spirit was ever moving out in the regions beyond.

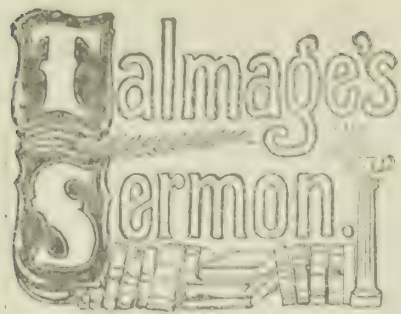

"Secondly, in all of the writings of the Scriptures of both the Old and New Testaments, while there are lamentations and predictions of dire distress, they all close with notes of cheer. However awful the judgment and dark the doom, yet there is always a word of hope. And so in this epistle, St. Paul refers to the many discouragements which marked his close of life, and yet from the gloom of that Roman prison, he was able to conclude with the beautiful and inspiring words of our text.

"I hope that these words will suggest something for you, young men, who are entering the ministry. So heroic, so faithful and so true to his work! And yet, where he should have found consolation and sympathy, there was opposition and discouragement. The great trial for this great Apostle was to see those who had promised allegiance to Christ falling away and attacking the fundamental principles of Christianity. Oh, how he suffered at the hands of his friends! But every great man must be lonesome in this world, and St. Paul even suffered that other penalty of leadership—he was misunderstood. That is a beautiful picture which Lamartine gives us of General Lafayette in his 'Histoire des Girondins.' After returning to France from America, Lafayette entered public life, but was forced to resign from Parliament because he was misunderstood. Lamartine says that Lafayette was the magnetic rod who received into himself the lightning of a nation's indignation, but in doing so he saved his country. So this great Apostle, when traitors were attacking the great doctrine of the resurrection, stood forth openly in the defence of all of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. St. Paul was a man of great mental hospitality. He could receive suggestions from every source. He didn't hesitate to quote heathen poets; but when there were attacks on the fundamental verities of religion, he arose to their defence.

"He didn't have any sympathy with WASHINGTON. —In this discourse Dr. Talmage recites some great events and shows that the world is advancing in the right direction; text, Joel ii, 30, "I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth."

Dr. Cumming—great and good man—would have told us the exact time of the fulfillment of this prophecy. As I stepped into his study in London on my arrival from Paris just after the French had surrendered at Sedan the good doctor said to me: "It is just what I had told you about France. People laughed at me because I talked about the seven horns and the vials, but I foresaw all this from the book of Daniel and the book of Revelation." Not taking any such responsibility in the interpretation of the passage, I simply assert that there are in it suggestions of many things in our time.

Our eyes dilate and our heart quicken in its pulsations as we read of events in the third century, the sixth century, the eighth century, the fourteenth century, but there were more far-reaching events crowded into the nineteenth century than into any other, and the last twenty years eclipse any preceding twenty. We read in the daily newspapers of events announced in one paragraph and without any special emphasis—events which a Herodotus, a Josephus, a Xenophon, a Gibbon, would have taken whole chapters or whole volumes to elaborate. Looking out upon our time, we must cry out in the words of the text, "Wonders in the heavens and in the earth!"

I propose to show you that the time in which we live is wonderful for disaster and wonderful for blessing, for there must be lights and shades in this picture as in all others. Need I argue that our time is wonderful for disaster? Our world has had a rough time since by the hand of God it was bowled out into space. It is an epileptic earth—convulsion after convulsion; frosts pounding it with sledge hammer of iceberg and fires melting it with furnaces seven times heated. It is a wonder to me it has lasted so long. Meteors shooting by on this side and grazing it and meteors shooting by on the other side and grazing it, none of them slowing up for safety. Whole fleets and navies and argosies and flotillas of worlds sweeping all about us. Our earth like a fishing smack off the banks of Newfoundland, while the Majestic and the St. Paul and the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse rush by. Besides that, our world has by sin been damaged in its internal machinery, and ever and anon the furnaces have burst, and the walking beams of the mountains have broken, and the islands have shipped a sea, and the great hulk of the world has been jarred with accidents that ever and anon threatened immediate demolition.

A Century of Disasters.

But it seems to us as if the last hundred years were especially characterized by disaster—volcanic, oceanic, epidemic. I say volcanic because an earthquake is only a volcano hushed up. When Stromboli and Cotopaxi and Vesuvius stop breathing, let the foundations of the earth beware! Seven thousand earthquakes in two centuries recorded in the catalogue of the British association! Trajan, the emperor, goes to ancient Antioch and amid the splendors of his reception is met by an earthquake that nearly destroys the emperor's life. Lisbon, fair and beautiful, at 1 o'clock on the 1st of November, 1755, in six minutes 60,000 have perished, and Voltaire writes of them, "For that region it was the last judgment, nothing wanting but a trumpet!" Europe and America feeling the throb—1,500 chimneys in Boston partly or fully destroyed!

But the disasters of other times have had their counterpart in later times. In 1812 Caracas was caught in the grip of an earthquake, in 1882 in Chile 100,000 square miles of land by volcanic force upheaved to four and seven feet of permanent elevation, in 1874 Japan felt the geological agony; Naples shaken in 1857, Mexico in 1858; Mendoza, the capital of the Argentine Republic, in 1861; Manila terrorized in 1863; the Hawaiian Islands by such force uplifted and let down in 1871; Nevada shaken in 1871, Antioch in 1872, California in 1872, San Salvador in 1873, while in 1883 what subterranean excitement! Ischia, an island of the Mediterranean, a beautiful Italian watering place, vineyard clad, surrounded by all natural charm and historical reminiscence; yonder Capri, the summer resort of the Roman emperors; yonder Naples, the paradise of art—this beautiful island suddenly toppled into the trough of the earth, 8,000 merrymakers perishing, and some of them so far down beneath the reach of human obsequies that it may be said of many a one of them, as it was said of Moses, "Lae Lord buried him." Italy, all Europe weeping, all Christendom weeping where there were hearts to sympathize and Christians to pray. But while the nations were measuring that magnitude of disaster, measuring it not with golden rod like that with which the angel measured heaven, but with the black rule of death, Java of the Indian archipelago, the most fertile island of all the earth, is caught in the grip of the earthquake, and mountain after mountain goes down and city after city until that island, which produces the best beverage of all the world, produced the ghastliest catastrophe. One hundred thousand people dying, dead! Coming nearer home, on Aug. 31, 1886, the great earthquake which prostrated one-half of Charleston, S. C.

Characteristics of Our Times.
